The Government have taken an active interest in her fate. We have taken every suitable opportunity to ensure that the Soviet authorities are fully aware of the strength of our views. In March this year, for example, my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary, as has been mentioned, raised Anna's case with Mr. Shevardnadze. Her name was included on the list of 26 prisoners of conscience that he handed over. I am glad to say that 11 of those on that list have since been released but sorry that Anna was not one of them.

In September I went to Vienna to address the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe. I made it clear that we want to see a significant improvement in Soviet human rights performance and that we shall continue hammering away until we get it. I made a point of drawing the attention of delegates to the harassment of religious believers in the Soviet Union. I referred specifically to Anna Chertkova and called for her immediate release, as part of a general amnesty for all prisoners of conscience.

As a signatory to the Helsinki Final Act, the Soviet Union made a number of important commitments on human rights. One of these was a pledge to respect

> "human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief."

According to this principle, all Soviet citizens should be guaranteed the freedom to profess their faith, but experience shows that this principle is not upheld in practice.

Anna Chertkova is the victim of an especially pernicious double violation of her rights. She is persecuted as a Christian and subject to that most frightening of practices—the abuse of psychiatry for reasons of state policy.

Anna Chertkova is not alone. It is a sad irony that the Soviet Union is preparing to celebrate 1,000 years of Christianity next year. We can expect to see that millennium celebrated with considerable pomp and circumstance by the pillars of the official church in the Soviet Union. Meanwhile hundreds of believers are still languishing in psychiatric hospitals and prison camps. Mr. Gorbachev, as we all know, is committed to transforming Soviet society. He has called it a new revolution. He has spoken at length of the need for greater openness and structural reform, for a greater role for the individual and a lesser one for central bureaucracy, which is trying to lay down norms in all areas of life.

There is no more individual area of human life than the act of religious faith. It should flow naturally from Mr. Gorbachev's reforms that individuals are genuinely free to worship as they wish. We are not asking the Soviet authorities to encourage religion in their country. It is for them to choose whether they wish to do so or not. We fully accept that and there is room for different views here. But there is no room for argument about whether religious belief and activity should be freely allowed. When will the Soviet authorities accept this and accept the logic of glasnost and perestroika in this sensitive and important area of life?

I shall quote from an article on human rights in the Soviet Union which appears in the most recent edition of Soviet News, a weekly newsheet put out by the Soviet embassy in London. It reads:

> "How does Soviet jurisprudence understand human rights and freedoms? They are above all the possibilities the individual has in the political, economic, social and cultural spheres and in his personal life. Human rights are not a gift from the state: they are not a magnanimous gesture on the part of a law giver . . . Human rights—respect for the individual's sovereignty, integrity and dignity — are inalienable components of socialist democracy".

I could hardly put it better myself. But when are Soviet deeds going to match these fine words?

Anna Chertkova is sane but imprisoned against her will in a psychiatric hospital. The extent of psychiatric abuse in the Soviet Union has been fully documented. No one can seriously doubt that the practice has been widespread. Even the Soviet press is now beginning to reflect this reality, however timorously.

One of the most courageous exposers of psychiatric abuse in the Soviet Union has been Dr. Anatoli Koryagin, himself a psychiatrist. It is perhaps of some interest that he has been visiting Britain this week. His attempts to bring to public attention psychiatric malpractices in the Soviet Union earned him a seven-year sentence in a prison camp and five years of exile. Throughout his period of imprisonment Dr. Koryagin continued to fight for the rights of psychiatric patients whom he knew to be sane. He smuggled statements to the West. He urged Western psychiatrists to boycott their Soviet colleagues. He went on hunger strikes to demand better conditions, despite the extra harsh conditions, treatment and prolonged sentence that that earned him. He was finally released earlier this year and allowed to leave for the West.

I take this opportunity to salute Dr. Koryagin's courage and welcome the initiative that brought him to Britain to share with us his knowledge and views. Let us hope that his long fight will soon be crowned with success. That will come when the Soviet Union admits openly that it has deliberately practised psychiatric abuses for political reasons and undertakes that there will be no repetition in the future.

I have said that religious persecution and psychiatric abuse continue. They are two areas where glasnost seem to have had perhaps least effect. But it is only fair to say that the picture is not entirely black. I welcome the release of a number of political prisoners earlier this year and the amnesty declared in June. So far over 200 political prisoners have been released before the end of their sentences. At the same time the number of Jewish and ethnic Germany applicants allowed to leave has increased noticeably. Some long-standing refuseniks have been given permission to leave.

These are steps in the right direction. But they are not nearly enough. In particlar those convicted for allegedly illegal religious activities do not qualify under the terms of the amnesty, nor does it include inmates in psychiatric hospitals. The Anna Chertkovas of this world have yet to see any benefit to themselves from Mr. Gorbachev's reforms.

Human rights are increasingly, and rightly, seen as an important international issue, an issue with profound implications for relations between states. The Soviet Union is slowly beginning to realise this. We hear less now of the tired old complaint of interference in internal affairs. The commitments entered into as a result of the CSCE process have booted that argument out of court once and for all. At Vienna pressure will be kept up for further improvements in human rights performance. It is not a question of notching up propaganda points. Respect for the individual's rights is at the heart of our democratic system and fundamental to all of our policies.

That is why we have called on the Russians in Vienna to reflect in the texts under negotiation there the spirit of change now abroad in the Soviet Union. Their response so far has been almost entirely negative. I hope that it will change.

The Russians have made one proposal in this area—a conference on humanitarian issues, to be held in Moscow. How should the West respond?

Our response will depend crucially on Soviet performance in the human rights field. There have been improvements but can it convincingly be argued that as things stand, and while cases such as Anna Chertkova are before us, Moscow is an appropriate place for a conference dealing with the promotion of human contacts, and therefore with human rights? We shall take a great deal of persuasion and need a good deal more evidence of real improvement before we can even begin to be convinced.

If there is one concern that lies at the heart of the Final Act, it is concern for people, ordinary people, individuals. That is why the human rights of these individuals are so important to us, not only in our own country, but in all the states which signed the Final Act, and beyond. If that concern for people does not find its way into reality, into specific improvements in human rights performance, the Helsinki process is fundamentally a hollow shell. That is why we and our Western partners insist that the present meeting in Vienna must conclude not only with further commitments in the areas of security and economic exchanges, but with an equally substantial follow-up in human rights and contacts. Anything else is simply unacceptable. We have made clear and specific proposals for such follow-ups in what has become known in the jargon as the human dimension. We await a constructive response to these proposals.

Mr. Gorbachev wrote in Pravda in September that the world cannot be secure if human rights are violated in it. He added:

"national legislation and administrative rules in the humanitarian sphere"

should everywhere be brought into accordance with international obligations and standards. Mr. Gorbachev, we are waiting for you to put this into practice.

I hope that the Soviet Government will take a long hard look at their own performance and ask themselves some questions. Can a super-power be seriously threatened by the Christian faith of Anna Chertkova? Does the imprisonment of individuals like her contribute to the release of individual energy and creativity the Soviet economy and Soviet society so badly need? Does history suggest that persecution can stamp out non-conformist behaviour and thinking? Is the image of the Soviet Union abroad and its professed desire for international peace and stability helped by the knowledge that Anna Chertkova, after 14 years, is in a psychiatric hospital?

There is only one answer to all these questions. I hope that the Soviet Government will draw the right conclusions in their own interests. I appeal to them to free Anna Chertkova and those like her and let her live in peace. I appeal to them to put an end to practices which bring only disgrace on their country. I know that the House will join me in sending this simple message about Anna Chertkova—let her go!

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Three o'clock.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Institute of Marine Biochemistry

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether, in the light of falling land values in Aberdeen and the revised upward costings of both phase I and II of adapting the Scottish Marine Biological Association laboratory at Oban, he will advise the Natural Environment Research Council to review its plans to close the Institute of Marine Biochemistry in Aberdeen and transfer its staff to the Oban laboratory;

(2) if he will publish the latest estimate of (a) the anticipated building costs consequent upon the removal of work from the Institute of Marine Biochemistry in Aberdeen to the Scottish Marine Biological Association laboratory at Oban, (b) the anticipated receipts from the sale of the Institute of Marine Biochemistry building and (c) the costs of the transfer of mobile staff to Oban and severance payments for non-mobile staff; and if he will itemise how the Natural Environmental Research Council has arrived at these estimates.

Mr. Jackson: In an earlier reply, my hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham (Mr. Walden) explained that there were strong scientific motives for the move of the Institute of Marine Biochemistry (IMB) to the Scottish Marine Biological association's Dunstaffnage Marine Laboratory (DML) at Oban (Official Report, 24 November 1986, column 35). The scientific case has not altered, and although certain costs have increased, the substantial recurrent financial benefits resulting from the move will still offset the initial costs within five years. My right hon. Friend has thus no reason to advise the Natural Environmental Research council to review its plans in respect of the closure of the IMB and the transfer of its staff to Oban.

The cost of the new building at DML, Oban is within the estimates, and is nearing completion. The cost of necessary alterations to existing buildings will be above the original forecasts, but are still subject to contractural negotiations. A selling price for the IMB building in Aberdeen has been agreed with a puchaser and is in line with the previous estimate, but is still commercially sensitive.

The cost of transfers has fallen to £70,000, while that of severance payments has increase to £190,000, in the first years and £54,000 thereafter, because more staff have decided to leave IMB than previously estimated. These additional costs will be offset by greater savings in salary costs at Oban. The estimate of transfer and severance costs are now based on the known circumstances of individual staff members.

School Leavers (Knowsley)

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of school leavers from the borough of Knowsley attending full-time degree courses at university in each year from 1976 to 1986; and if he will express these figures as a proportion of the number of students in secondary education in the borough of Knowsley for each of these years.

Mr. Jackson: Information in the form requested is not available. The table below covers all students who where in receipt of a mandatory or a full value discretionary award from the Knowsley local education authority and who are estimated to have been on first degree courses at university excluding teacher training. The table also relates the numbers of such students newly taking up an award to an average of the 18 and 19 year old population in Knowsley.

Contract Staff

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what number and percentage of (a) contract research staff and (b) contract academic staff progressed to permanent positions in institutions governed by the University Grants Commission over each of the past 10 academic years, indicating the total number and the percentage that they represented of such contract staff at each of the institutions.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not collected centrally.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state in the Official Report the number of (a) contract research staff and (b) contract academic staff at present employed in institutions covered by the University Grants Commission, indicating the annual growth over the past 10 academic years as a total number and as a percentage of the total research and academic staff at each institution and as a total of all institutions.

Mr. Jackson: Information is not available in the form requested. However a recent study on "Contract Researchers in Universities" conducted by the Advisory Board on the Research Councils found the following growth in contract research staff at all UK universities:

Year	Number of contract staff	Number of contract research staff as a percentage of all full-time academic staff (%)
1976	6,010	15
1977	6,084	15

Medical Training

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the ratio of teaching medical doctors and medical students for university medical departments; and what were the comparable figures for 1979;

(2) what is the ratio between teaching medical personnel and medical students for each year since 1973 in Scottish universities.

Mr. Jackson: The available figures cover full-time academic staff in clinical medical departments, employed by universities. The table below shows the ratio of full-time equivalent student load to such staff who are wholly university-financed. The figures do not take account of the teaching contribution of other members of clinical departments who are paid wholly or partly from DHSS or other sources of funds. They include staff engaged in teaching, teaching and research and research only.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last had discussions wth university authorities concerned with the university teaching and training of medical doctors.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend and I have frequent meetings with university interests at which a range of matters, which may inculude medical education, are discussed.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what policies and funds for the maintenance and progress of medical university training Her Majesty's Government have applied and provided for each year since 1979.

Mr. Jackson: The Government's policy for medical education was recently set out in a joint note of guidance to the universities and the health authorities issued earlier this year, a copy of which is in the Library. Financial provision for undergraduate medical education is made through recurrent grants to the universities on the advice of the University Grants Committee and, in respect of teaching hospitals, through the National Health Service. In neither case is provision for the training of doctors specifically identified.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of new medical students in Scottish universities for each year since 1975.

Mr. Jackson: The number of full-time new entrant undergraduates to Scottish universities studying pre-clinical and clinical medicine in each year was as follows:

	Number
1975	672
1976	651
1977	695
1978	685
1979	722
1980	717

[1] not yet available.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the provision of funds for medical equipment and laboratories in the Scottish universities for the purposes of medical teaching and training, for each year since 1973.

Mr. Jackson: Provision for medical education is not separately identified in the equipment grants made to universities.

Calderdale

Mrs. Mahon asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if an early response will be given to Calderdale council's request for additional capital allocation to meet his Department's requirements imposed following publication of the report by the Commission for Racial Equality on education in Calderdale.

Mr. Dunn: Calderdale's bid for a capital allocation for 1988-89 has not yet been received. When it is received we will give careful consideration to the particular issues raised by the report of the Commission for Racial Equality. The Department aims to notify authorities of their allocations around Christmas.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking during the period of falling school rolls to reduce the pupil-teacher ratios in state schools.

Mr. Dunn: Total pupil numbers in maintained schools in England continue to fall until 1991, although primary pupil numbers have been rising since 1985. The Government's expenditure plans already provide for the overall pupil to teacher ratio, standing in 1986 at its lowest ever level of 17.6:1, to continue to improve up to 1990. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is responsible for schools and teachers in Scotland.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the average pupil-teacher ratios in state schools in the years 1979 and 1986, respectively.

Mr. Dunn: The average overall pupil-teacher ratios in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England were as follows:

	Pupil-teacher ratios
January 1979	18·9
January 1986	17·6

Information in respect of Wales and Scotland are the responsibilities of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the average pupil-teacher ratios in schools in the independent sector.

Mr. Dunn: The average pupil-teacher ratio in independent schools in England in January 1986 was 11·3. Information in respect of Wales and Scotland are the responsibilities of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland respectively.

Children (Special Needs)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the proposed tests for 11 to 14-year-old schoolchildren will take into account the problems of children with special needs.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes. The Government's proposals for a national curriculum in England and Wales envisage that, for a pupil with a statement of special need under the Education Act 1981, that statement should specify any modifications to the statutory requirements for attainment targets, programmes of study and arrangements for assessment and testing during each key educational stage, that would be appropriate for that child. The regulations governing each of the foundation subjects would also define any circumstances in which those requirements might be modified, for example for pupils with severe language difficulties. The respective subject working groups and the task group on assessment and testing have been asked to pay attention to these issues, and generally to the range of pupils' abilities, when framing their recommendations. In these ways children will be able to enjoy the maximum benefit from the national curriculum while due account is taken of their special needs.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he will be taking to ensure that children with special needs will be protected against discrimination in the event of schools being allowed to opt out of local authority control.

Mr. Dunn: It is not our intention that the operation of our policy on grant-maintained schools should in any way prejudice the position of children with special educational needs. The admission policies of all grant-maintained schools will require the approval of my right hon. Friend.

National Curriculum

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much time in the new national curriculum will be allocated for home economics; what steps he proposes to take to increase technological training in schools to equip school leavers for jobs in modern industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's consultation document on the national curriculum does not envisage that home economics will be a foundation subject in the terms of the proposed legislation. However, we expect that some elements of home economics will be taught through the foundation subjects, particularly science, technology and art. Schools will be free additionally to devote to home economics some of the time—the equivalent of about one day a week — which will not be required for foundation subjects. My right hon. Friend does not intend to prescribe in legislation how much time should be allocated to subjects within the national curriculum. The Government's proposals for a national curriculum, including the establishment of technology as a foundation subject, will ensure that all pupils receive a relevant and practical curriculum which equips them for working life.

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the visit to Liverpool on Wednesday 21 October of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Mr. Dunn: My noble Friend addressed the annual general meeting of the Merseyside Council for Voluntary Service. In the afternoon, as the guest of the local education authority, she visited Millbrook college and South Mersey college, looking in particular at provision for special needs and at open learning. My noble Friend found her visit both stimulating and informative.

University Academic Staff

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to bring forward proposals to abolish tenure for university academic staff; and whether these proposals will contain provisions to guarantee academic freedom.

Mr. Jackson: Our proposals to legislate on academic tenure will be part of the major education reform Bill which we shall be introducing shortly. It is our intention to bring forward the relevant provisions when the Bill is introduced. The Government recognise the importance of maintaining academic freedom, and the provisions will be framed with that objective in mind.

Research Councils

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many polytechnic staff are represented on each of the research councils and their constituent committees, respectively.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is as follows:

	Council	Constituent committees
Agricultural and Food Research Council	Nil	Nil
Economic and Social Research Council	1	3

	Council	Constituent committees
Medical Research Council	Nil	Nil
Natural Environment Research Council	Nil	2
Science and Engineering Research Council	1	23

Applied Research

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of applied research is undertaken in the polytechnics.

Mr. Jackson: The available statistics do not distinguish between applied and other research undertaken in polytechnics, nor do they admit a direct comparison with the amount of publicly funded research undertaken elsewhere.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much of his Department's earmarked major capital expenditure has been (a) allocated to local education authorities and (b) spent in each of the polytechnics in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Jackson: In making capital allocations to local education authorities under the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980 my right hon. Friend has not used his power to earmark parts of allocations for projects of regional or national importance. Local education authorities have therefore been free to spend their allocations as they wished.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much capital expenditure, other than his department's allocated major capital, has been spent by local education authorities in each of the polytechnics in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister whether it is proposed to consult the public at any stage about the new national response plan for nuclear accidents.

The Prime Minister: I announced the main features of the plan on 30 June. More detailed proposals for implementing a national radiation incident monitoring network will be published in due course.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister whether she proposes to publish the Cabinet Office review of existing emergency plans and procedures for major nuclear accidents in the light of experience of the Chernobyl accident, referred to in her statement of 18 December 1986.

The Prime Minister: It is not the practice to publish internal Cabinet Office working documents.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister what representations she has received calling for a public inquiry into the British official response to the Chernobyl nuclear accident and what response she has made.

The Prime Minister: Apart from the hon. Gentleman's letter of 26 August 1986, to which I replied on 28 October 1986, I have received two requests for a public inquiry in letters dated 30 June 1986 and 2 September 1987 from the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark). In my replies I explained why an inquiry of the kind he suggested would not be justified.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government intend to observe the recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection for the protection of the public in the event of major radiation accidents.

The Prime Minister: The National Radiological Protection Board has a statutory duty to advise the Government on radiation dose limits. In its publication ERL 2, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, it gives criteria for limiting doses to the public in the event of accidental exposure to radiation. This guidance is generally consistent with that given in the relevant International Commission on Radiological Protection publication—Publication 40—and in some cases is more stringent.

The ICRP is at present reconsidering its recommendations in respect of risk estimates. The Government will consider, in due course, any revised advice from the NRPB in the light of ICRP deliberations.

Guatemala Accord

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to call upon President Reagan to accept the II Esquipulas agreement (Guatemala accord).

The Prime Minister: The United States Administration are well aware of our support for the Guatemala agreement.

World Peace

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister if, in order to help the search for world peace, she will approach European Community Governments and Commonwealth nations, in order to seek to introduce more acceptable international rules protecting the independence, self-determination and security of nations against the aggression of powerful neighbours and superpowers.

The Prime Minister: Acceptable international rules to protect peace and stability already exist, for instance in the United Nations Charter.

Namibia

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister what recent talks she has had with other Heads of Government involved in the arrangements for the independence of Namibia.

The Prime Minister: Namibia was discussed briefly at the recent Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Vancouver. I refer the hon. Member to the statement on Southern Africa, issued by the Heads of Government, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Angola

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister what information has she recently received about incursions of South African troops into Angola; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: In a statement on 3 October the South African Defence Minister confirmed that there was a South African military presence in Angola. We have made clear to the South African Government, both before and since that statement, that we condemn cross-border violations from whatever quarter. We consider that the problems of the region should be solved peacefully by negotiation.

National School for Public Administration

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to create a national school for public administration to which local government employees should have access.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on Thursday 22 October at column 845. Opportunities already exist for local government employees to undertake training jointly with civil servants, for example through the Cabinet Office's top management programme, or courses run by the Civil Service College.

South Africa

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister how many of the countries attending the Commonwealth meeting recently held at Vancouver made proposals for, or supported, the selective sanctions against the South African Government, and if she will list them.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to my statement in the House on 22 October, columns 921-22.

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister if she discussed the situation in South Africa during her recent contacts with the German Chancellor and with the French Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister: It is not my practice to disclose the details of my discussions with other heads of state.

Voting

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to seek to increase voting during general and local elections and to reduce the number of abstentions.

The Prime Minister: It is up to each elector to decide whether or not to vote. The Government are committed to ensuring that the arrangements for elections enable electors to exercise their right to vote. We have extended the right to vote in parliamentary, European Parliament and local government elections to holidaymakers and others unable to vote in person.

Rating Reform

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister if she will urgently seek the postponement of the application of poll tax on Scotland and instruct a review of similar proposals for England and Wales with the same objective.

The Prime Minister: No.

Open Government

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking as regards open government; and what areas have been given first priority for such purposes.

The Prime Minister: It remains the Government's policy that all Departments should make publicly available as much information as possible whilst preserving the confidentiality essential to the effective working of government.

Commonwealth

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister how many Commonwealth countries' representatives attended the recent meeting in Vancouver.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the communiqué, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. Forty-five countries were represented at Vancouver, 37 at Head of Government level.

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister (1) what was the number of people who were members of the British delegation, including the supporting staff, during the Commonwealth meetings of Heads of Government held at London, Lusaka, Melbourne, New Delhi, Bahamas and Vancouver, respectively;

(2) what was the number of people serving the press and public relations requirements of the British delegations at the Commonwealth conferences at London, Lusaka, Melbourne, New Delhi, Bahamas and Vancouver respectively;

(3) if she will list the names of the persons serving the press and public relation requirements of Her Majesty's Government at the Commonwealth meeting in Vancouver;

(4) if she will list the members of the British delegation and all their supporting staff who attended the Vancouver meeting of the Commonwealth.

The Prime Minister: The numbers of the official delegation, including press officials, together with those of the accompanying support staff during the Commonwealth Heads of Government meetings concerned were as follows:

	Official delegation	Support staff
London 1977	22	17
Lusaka 1979	14	40
Melbourne 1981	15	42
New Delhi 1983	16	29
The Bahamas 1985	13	36
Vancouver 1987	15	38

The figures for support staff include security personnel and other technical staff. They take account of the fact that some meetings were held in venues other than capitals or where our residential diplomatic mission was small. They do not include personal protection officers. It would not be appropriate to list the names and responsibilities of individual members of the delegations.

Film Finances Ltd.

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Prime Minister is she will dismiss the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate and Consumer Affairs, the hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. Maude), for failing to investigate the affairs of Film Finances Ltd. after Mr. Justice Knox found that there was a prima facie evidence of crime under the Companies Act.

The Prime Minister: No.

Fraud

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Prime Minister (1) if she will instruct Ministers at the Department of Trade and Industry to investigate alleged fraud under the Companies Acts when hon. Members of Parliament send them evidence;

(2) if she will instruct Ministers at the Department of Trade and Industry to investigate alleged fraud under the Companies Act when High Court judges find that there is prima facie evidence of such fraud.

The Prime Minister: Decisions on Companies Act investigations are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and not for me.

Governmental Messages

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister whether it is normal practice for messages from Her Majesty's Government to Presidents of other nations to come from the Prime Minister or from the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

The Prime Minister: This is judged on the circumstances of each case and the nature of the message.

Mr. Frank Larsen and others

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister in what capacity (a) Mr. John Farmer, (b) Mr. Frank Larsen, (c) Mr. Dennis Evans, (d) Mr. John Larsen, (e) Mr. Jonathan Wheatley, (f) Mr. Hans Christian Dahl, (g) Mr. Johann Neimoller, (h) Mr. Viggo Oerbale, (i) Mr. Gerard Horeau, and (j) Mr. Pierre Ferrari are, or have been, employed by Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General on Friday 23 October at columns 1095-96.

Intergovernmental Organisations

Mr. George Foulkes asked the Prime Minister, if she will list all the intergovernmental organisations of which the United Kingdom is a member, giving for each one which Department has primary responsibility, which other Departments are involved, and in what ways, and whether Her Majesty's Government has a permanent diplomatic mission at the relevant organisation's headquarters.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 21 October, c. 734]: A list of international organisations for which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is responsible for 1987-88 was published in class II, vote 2, sections A and B, and vote 5, section C, of the Supply Estimates. A list of other international organisations to which the United Kingdom subscribes for 1987-88 will be found in the appropriate Supply Estimates of the relevant Government Departments. Copies of all these documents are available in the Library of the House.

We have permanent diplomatic missions at the following:

Conference on Disarmament (Geneva)
Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE) (Vienna)
Council of Europe (Strasbourg)
European Community (Brussels)
International Atomic Energy Agency (Vienna)
International Civil Aviation Organisation (Montreal)
IMF-IBRD (Washington)
North Atlantic Council (NATO) (Brussels)
OECD (Paris)
United Nations (Geneva)
United Nations (New York)
United Nations (Vienna)
MBFR (Vienna)
United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) (Nairobi)
United Nations Environment Programme (Nairobi)
United Nations Industrial Development Organisation (Vienna)
Asian Development Bank (Manila)
Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations (Rome)

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Skimmed Milk Powder

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise at the next Council meeting the export of radioactive skimmed milk powder from Germany to Ghana as part of the European Economic Community policy of humanitarian food aid; and if he will seek to establish whether the skimmed milk powder came from Eastern Europe.

Mr. Chris Patten: Two separate consignments of milk powder have recently been received in Ghana, one from Czechoslovakia and one from the European Community. I have no information on the former.

The EC food aid consignment consisted of 750 tonnes from the Federal Republic of Germany. Results of three tests carried out by and on behalf of the European Commission indicated that the consignment was well within the permitted safety limits for radioactivity in milk powder. However, in view of Ghanaian claims to the contrary, the Commission has agreed with the Ghanaian Government that a further independent test be undertaken by the International Atomic Energy Authority in Vienna. The outcome of this test is not yet available. I have no present plans to raise this in the Council of Ministers.

St. Helena

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to give approval for the ordering of a new vessel for the St. Helena service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) on 21 October at column 747.

ENERGY

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion and amount of the departmental budget allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets with equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, and (e) the guidelines issued to departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act; and what action has been taken to facilitate job share, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Parkinson: No separate working time or proportion of departmental budget is allocated to the equal opportunities officer in my Department for equal opportunities duties.

The equal opportunities officer in my Department is the head of the branch dealing with personnel matters. He is responsible for the recruitment and career management of staff, pay and conditions of service, welfare and training.

The equal opportunities officer and his deputy meet with those from other Departments on many occasions, both formal and informal, throughout the year.

Cabinet Office guidelines on training, in accordance with section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act, have been issued to the equal opportunities officer in my Department and to the training section for which he is responsible.

Attention of all staff has been drawn to my Department's aim to expand opportunities for part-time work and job sharing and every effort is made to meet individuals' wishes.

Maternity leave, in accordance with Civil Service-wide provisions, is granted to women in my Department. While my Department has no authority to grant paternity leave, requests for special leave in cases of domestic of family difficulty are considered as sympathetically as possible.

Oil Exports

Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will reconsider the ban on oil exports to Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my noble Friend the then Minister of State for Energy on 8 February 1982, at column 249 of the Official Report.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Bermingham asked the Attorney-General (1) what policy the Crown Prosecution Service has developed in respect of applications for prosecution costs;

(2) what policy the Crown Prosecution Service has developed in respect of the prosecution of petty offences;

(3) what policy the Crown Prosecution Service has developed in respect of breach proceedings;

(4) what policy the Crown Prosecution Service has developed in respect of supplying of information to the probation service;

(5) what at the latest date available, was the establishment of lawyers, lawyers' clerks and administrators in each of the 31 areas of the Crown Prosecution Service;

(6) what is the estimated annual cost of employing agent lawyers to cover shortages in Crown prosecution staffing.

The Attorney-General: Because of recent problems with the printing and distribution of the Order Paper, I have only been made aware of these questions this afternoon. I will reply to the hon. Member when the relevant information has been obtained.

Salmon Poaching

Mr. Onslow asked the Attorney-General what guidance the Lord Chancellor has sent to magistrates in England and Wales on sentencing policy for offenders convicted of salmon poaching since the passing of the Salmon Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor does not issue guidance on the sentencing to magistrates but when speaking to members of the Magistrates' Association, of which he is the president, he may in that capacity express his personal view on the approach to sentencing for particular types of offence. Since the passing of the Salmon Act 1986, the Lord Chancellor has not spoken to magistrates on the sentencing of offenders convicted of salmon poaching.

Mr. Frank Larsen and Others (Prosecution)

Mr. Adley asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the failure of the Director of Public Prosecutions to offer evidence in the case of alleged conspiracy to kidnap a senior official of the African National Congress in London.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement that I made on Friday 23 October at column 1095.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Extradition

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests he has had in each year since 1979 to extradite persons residing in the United Kingdom to face charges of alleged war crimes; how many extraditions have taken place; what steps he plans to take to investigate such allegations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Since 1979 the United Kingdom has received three requests from the Soviet Union for the extradition of people accused of war crimes. In 1986 two requests were received, one relating to a person who had died and the other to a person whose whereabouts were unknown. One request has been received this year. However, in the absence of an extradition treaty it is not possible to extradite to the Soviet Union. We are examining documentary material provided to us by the Simon Wiesenthal centre which contains serious allegations about the wartime activities of three people. In the light of our assessment of this material we shall consider what action is open to us.

Police (Multi-racial Relationships)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that all police officers are instructed in the complexities of multi-racial relationships and in understanding the basic social needs of different ethnic, sex and religious groups.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is already our policy that all police officers should receive training which comprehends community and race relations issues.

Privacy

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of the increased sophistication of electronic means of communication and surveillance, he will ask Her Majesty's Government's legal officers to prepare urgently proposals for legal and constitutional protection of the rights to privacy.

Mr. Renton: No.

"Legislating for Change"

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet received the Equal Opportunities Commission report on "Legislating for Change"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Equal Opportunities Commission is still considering their proposals for change to the sex discrimination legislation.

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the visit to Liverpool on Thursday 22 October by the Minister of State, Home Office.

Mr. Renton: In Liverpool I visited the passport office and an independent television production company in my capacities as Minister with responsibility for the passport department and for broadcasting.

Mr. Gecas

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest position regarding his inquiries into the allegations of Nazi war crimes made against Mr. Gecas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: On 17 July the Simon Wiesenthal centre presented documentary material containing serious allegations against Mr. Gecas and two others. This material is still under examination. In the light of our assessment we shall consider what action is open to us.

Foreign Visitors

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what are the numbers refused admission as visitors into the United Kingdom in the last five years due to involvement in wartime Nazi organisations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if wartime involvement in the Waffen SS is a reason for refusing someone admission into the United Kingdom as a visitor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Decisions on the admission of passengers to the United Kingdom are taken on arrival here and on the basis of the circumstances of the individual case. A passenger may be refused leave to enter on the grounds that his exclusion is conducive to the public good and factors such as that referred to by the hon. Member may be relevant to that decision. Central records are however not maintained of the detailed reasons for the refusal of leave to enter to passengers seeking entry as visitors.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is now his policy towards the admission into the United Kingdom as visitors who are leading members of the French National Front; and what representations he received over the proposed visit by the leader of that organisation.

Mr. Renton: Decisions on the admission of passengers to the United Kingdom are taken on their arrival here and on the basis of the circumstances of the individual case. We have received a small number of letters opposing the recent proposed visit of M. Le Pen, of which two were from hon. Members.

Gun Shops

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations concerning siting of gun shops; if he has any proposals for the introduction of regulations concerning their siting, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Representations have been received from time to time about the sale of firearms in particular locations. The Firearms Act 1968 contains no provisions relating to the siting of gun shops, which is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

It does, however, contain strict provisions for the registration and control of firearms dealers and a chief officer may refuse to register an applicant if he is satisfied that the applicant cannot be permitted to carry on business without danger to the public safety or to the peace.

Prison Population

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total prison population for England and Wales for the latest date available.

Mr. John Patten: On 23 October 1987, the total prison population in England and Wales was 47,494. This does not include 1,298 in police cells.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the prison population for England and Wales for each of the following dates (a) 1 June, (b) 1 July, (c) 1 August, (d) 1 September and (e) 1 October.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available information is given in the table.

Population of Prison Department establishments[2] in England and Wales, May to September 1987

Number of Persons

Date	Population
1987
May 31	49,255
June 30	50,265
July 31	50,226
August 31[1]	47,105
September 30	47,398

[1] Fall mainly due to the increase on 13 August 1987 in remission to one half for prisoners sentenced to up to 12 months.

[2] Excludes prisoners in police cells.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the certified normal accommodation and the actual prison population for each of the following prisons for the latest date available:

Bedford, Birmingham, Cardiff, Gartree, Holloway, Hull, Leeds, Leicester, Lewes, Lincoln, Liverpool, Manchester, Nottingham, Oxford, Reading, Wakefield, Wandsworth.

Mr. John Patten: On 23 October, the certified normal accommodation and population of the establishments listed were as follows:

Establishment	Certified normal accommodation	Population
Bedford	176	346
Birmingham	592	1,190
Cardiff	340	551
Gartree	315	314
Holloway	479	461
Hull	367	629
Leeds	642	1,306
Leicester	200	396
Lewes	364	567
Lincoln	359	691
Liverpool	967	1,233
Manchester	969	1,667
Nottingham	202	298
Oxford	127	233
Reading	178	334
Wakefield	756	726
Wandsworth	1,266	1,286

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were in prison in Yorkshire at the most recent count.

Mr. John Patten: On 23 October 1987, the total prison population in Yorkshire was 3,977.

Prisons

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department has any future plans for the following prison establishments (a) Kelmsfield House Oxfordshire, (b) Foston Hall, Derbyshire, (c) Blantyre House, Kent, (d) Nedonsley, County Durham and (e) North Sea camp, Lincolnshire.

Mr. John Patten: It is planned to bring North Sea camp into use as an open prison. With respect to the other establishments, the timing of their return to normal operation will be kept under review.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how long have the following prison establishments remained unoccupied (a) Kelmsfield house, Oxfordshire, (b) Foston hall, Derbyshire, (c) Blantyre house, Kent, (d) Medomsley, County Durham and (e) North Sea camp, Lincolnshire.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Her Majesty's Youth Corrective Centre Campsfield house was temporarily closed on 28 September 1987.

(b) Her Majesty's Prison Foston hall became a non-residential establishment on 6 July 1987.

(c) Her Majesty's detention centre Blantyre House was temporarily closed on 6 July 1987.

(d) Her Majesty's Prison Medomsley is due to close temporarily on Monday 26 October 1987.

(e) Her Majesty's detention centre North Sea camp became a non-residential establishment on 21 September 1987.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Metropolitan police officers, from what divisions, of what ranks, and at which locations, were receiving training on 22 October for duties in connection with the supervision and security of prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Mr. Steinberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it remains his policy to implement the fresh start agreement reached with the Prison Officers Association insofar as it relates to the provision of extra staff with effect from February 1988.

Mr. Hurd: Yes. I remain committed to the provision of extra staff between now and 28 February 1988 and over the five years from 1 April 1988 in accordance with the terms of the fresh start agreement.

Grendon Prison

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to change the therapeutic regime at Grendon prison.

Mr. John Patten: No. As recommended by the advisory committee on the therapeutic regime at Grendon, the establishment continues to concentrate in the main on the provision of group therapy for prisoners clinically referred by prison medical officers.

Probation

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in the last three months about "Probation—The Next Five Years," a joint statement by the Central Council of Probation Committees, the Association of Chief Officers of Probation and the National Association of Probation Officers.

Mr. John Patten: Sixteen letters have been received from hon. Members on the subject. My right hon. Friend and I met representatives of the three organisations in August and discussed the statement with them.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he or other Ministers in his Department have made any recent visits to probation services in England and Wales; and if he has any plans to do so in the future.

Mr. John Patten: Since April this year the Home Secretary has visited probation services in north Wales (in April) and the west midlands (in October); I visited the Inner London probation service in July. My right hon. Friend plans to visit a day centre project in Norwich in March 1988; and I plan to visit the Hampshire and Oxfordshire services this month, Northumbria probation service in November and Hereford and Worcester probation service in January 1988.

Black Defendants

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many black defendants were received into prison during 1986.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the following table.

Ethnic origin	Type of prisoner
	Untried	Convicted unsentenced*
White	45,959	13,913
West Indian, Guyanese, African	5,748	1,425

Ethnic origin	Type of prisoner
	Untried	Convicted unsentenced
Indian, Pakistani, Bangladeshi	1,081	237
Chinese, Arab, Mixed Origin	1,167	305
Other, not recorded (including refusals)	1,514	248
Total[1]	55,469	16,128

[1] Total cannot be calculated by adding together receptions in category because some untried prisoners were subsequently received as convicted unsentenced.

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Liverpool.

Mr. Hurd: I visited Merseyside on 1 and 2 October, and again on 21 October. On the evening of 1 October I was a guest at the Merseyside senior police officers' mess dinner. On the following day I visited the police port unit, the main Bridewell and local police stations, and had discussions with the chief constable and senior officers at force headquarters about a range of policing issues. I had useful discussions with members of the Merseyside police authority.

I was pleased to speak at the first of the national crime prevention road shows at Knowsley on 21 October.

West Yorkshire (Police)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give figures for the number of police in west Yorkshire for each of the years 1974 to 1987, respectively.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

West Yorkshire Police

On 31 December	Authorised police establishment	Actual strength
1974	5,103	4,412
1975	5,104	4,547
1976	5,104	4,676
1977	5,104	4,616
1978	5,104	4,621
1979	5,104	4,799
1980	5,104	5,040
1981	5,154	5,147
1982	5,154	5,155
1983	5,154	5,116
1984	5,154	5,026
1985	5,154	5,049
1986	5,154	5,116
1987[1]	5,204	[2]5,219

[1] 31 August.

[2] Strength exceeded the establishment in August because the force had approval for 17 supernumerary posts for temporary purposes.

Defendants (Statistics)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of defendants who were remanded in custody during (a) 1985 and (b) 1986 and who were subsequently either found not guilty, not proceeded with or given a non-custodial sentence.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is published in table 2.4 of "Prison Statistics England and Wales 1986" (Cm. 210).

Grants

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many section 11 applications are currently awaiting decision; how this compares with the number of applications awaiting decision in October 1986; what is the average time taken in reaching a decision on a section 11 application; and if Ministers consider personally all section 11 applications.

Mr. John Patten: There are currently under consideration 135 applications for section 11 grant in respect of 980 posts. At the end of October 1986 there were seven applications covering 14 posts outstanding. However, these figures are not directly comparable because there had been a moratorium on the acceptance of new applications between late March and the end of September 1986 while new arrangements for the administration of grant, which came into effect on 1 October 1986, were being prepared.

Since 1 October 1986 the average time taken to complete consideration of an application for grant has been just under three months. In general the aim is to complete consideration within this period but this depends on the number of posts applied for; what further information may be required from the local authority and whether advice needs to be sought from other Government Departments where they have an interest. All recommendations for approval of new posts are considered by Ministers.

Earl William

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the Earl William ship in Harwich, used for detaining asylum seekers, coming adrift in the recent storm.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to an answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 21 October at column 781.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were being held on remand in England and Wales for the latest date available.

Mr. John Patten: On 30 September 1987, about 11,650 untried or convicted unsentenced prisoners were held in custody in England and Wales. This number included about 820 prisoners held in police cells, most of whom were untried or convicted unsentenced.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (a) how many males are currently being held in police cells, (b) how many females are currently being held in police cells and (c) how many of the totals were sentenced prisoners for all police districts of England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: On 23 October 1987, the number of prisoners being held in police cells in all police areas in England and Wales was 1,268 males and 30 females. Information relating to the numbers of sentenced prisoners in police cells is incomplete but of the 1,142 prisoners held by or on behalf of the Metropolitan police, 74 were sentenced.

Mr. Frank Larsen and Others

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the circumstances surrounding the arrest of Frank Larsen at the Regent Palace hotel on 9 July; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how the police established that a Ministry of Defence police warrant card in the possession of a Mr. Frank Larsen, charged in connection with alleged conspiracy to kidnap members of the African National Congress, had been forged; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what steps have been taken to recover classified material found in the possession of Frank Larsen at his home and premises he has occupied; and if he will make a statement;

(4) when Her Majesty's Government first became aware of an alleged conspiracy to kidnap members of the African National Congress in London;

(5) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to when all documents previously in the possession of Frank Larsen, John Larsen, Hans Christian Dahl, Viggo Oerbak, Jonathon Wheatley, Evan Dennis-Evans and Johann Neimoller will be returned to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General on Friday 23 October 1987.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to on what grounds Frank Larsen, John Larsen, Evan Dennis-Evans and Jonathon Wheatley were held under the Prevention of Terrorism Act.

Mr. Hurd: All four men were arrested and detained under section 12 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984 on suspicion of having been concerned in the commission, preparation or instigation of acts of terrorism.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Space Programme

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting on 19 October between officials of his department and the Advisory Council on Science and Technology on the subject of the space programme.

Mr. Butcher: Officials from my Department attended a meeting arranged on 19 October by the Advisory Council on Science and Technology with representatives of various sections of the space community.

A number of presentations were made and discussed, which were useful to the advisory council in forming a view on the space programme.

Airbus

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total sum contributed from public funds in the United Kingdom, Germany, France and Spain respectively to the Airbus project; what assessment he has made of the viability and potential profitability of the project; and if he will be attending the forthcoming meeting with the United States trade representative, Mr. Yeutter, to discuss the project.

Mr. Butcher: Figures are not available for the total public contribution to all Airbus projects. The United Kingdom Government will provide up to £40 million in launch aid to enable British Aerospace to participate in the A330/A340 project. A full and critical project appraisal was carried out to determine that the project had sound prospects of achieving commercial viability. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster will attend the meeting on 27 October between Dr. Yeutter, Commissioner de Clercq and Airbus Ministers.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what deficit in the manufacturing trade the United Kingdom experienced with the European Economic Community in the most recent 12 month period for which figures are available; and what were the total figures of manufactured goods exported to and imported from the European Economic Community during that 12-month period.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the 12 months to September 1987, exports of manufactures to the European Community amounted to £27·7 billion and imports to £38·5 billion resulting in a crude deficit of £10·8 billion. These figures are on the overseas trade statistic basis: imports, but not exports, include the cost of insurance and freight.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget which is allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to his departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act, and (f) the action taken to facilitate jobshare, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Butcher: In the Department of Trade and Industry

(a) the equal opportunity officer (EOO) has spent about 50 per cent. of his working time in the past year on equal opportunities duties;

(b) the EOO is also the chief welfare officer and departmental nominated officer for staff restaurant matters;

(c) there is no departmental budget specifically for equal opportunities work; those responsible for relevant activities (eg training, recruitment) make appropriate provision in their budgets;

(d) the EOO meets all other EOOs at leat once a year: in addition there are ad hoc meetings and seminars of groups of EOOs on particular subjects;

(e) the departmental training officer and the EOO have received central guidance on all aspects of promoting equal opportunities including positive action which may be taken to provide "minority sex" training under the Sex Discrimination Act 1975;

(f) line managers have been encouraged to identify part-time working opportunities and staff to apply for such posts: maternity leave is available as well as special leave, where appropriate, to cover the care of children.

Inner Cities

Mr. Wray asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contingency plans Her Majesty's Government have in the event of failure of their appeal to private investors to help the inner cities crisis.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The private sector, and private investors, are already fully committed to the inner cities through a wide range of Government programmes which include their participation. I expect their support to develop and grow. We need to give it every encouragement, not speculate about what might happen if it were not there.

WALES

Sheep Sector

10. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he next expects to meet representatives of the farming unions in Wales to discuss the future of the sheep sector.

Mr. Peter Walker: I met the National Farmers Union in Wales on 28 September and I shall be meeting the Farmers Union of Wales in the near future. I intend to keep in close contact with the leaders of both unions during any negotiations affecting the sheepmeat regime.

Wales Advisory Body

11. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he next intends meeting representatives of the Wales Advisory Body to discuss his proposals for further and higher education in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The next meeting of the committee of the Wales Advisory Body, which I chair, takes place on 6 November.

Labour Statistics

16. Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the percentage of jobs in Wales which are in firms whose headquarters are outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Walker: An estimated 22 per cent. of jobs in manufacturing industry in Wales are in firms whose headquarters are outside the United Kingdom, reflecting the considerable success of our inward investment activity. Figures for non-manufacturing are not available.

17. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales: and if he will give the equivalent figure for 1979 on the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 10 September 1987, 8,649, 25,465 and 154,996 persons were unemployed in Newport district, Gwent and Wales respectively. Unadjusted figures for 1979 are not available on a basis that enables a valid comparison to be made.

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the fall in unemployment in Wales during the past 12 months; and what has been the increase in notified job vacancies during the same period.

Mr. Peter Walker: Between 11 September 1986 and 10 September 1987 the number of unemployed claimants in Wales fell by 25,374. Between 5 September 1986 and 4 September 1987 the number of vacancies notified to jobcentres and careers offices in Wales increased by 357.

Craig-y-nos Castle

19. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to stop the authorisation of the sale of Craig-y-nos Castle by his Department, until he can guarantee the continuation of cultural activities there.

Mr. Peter Walker: Craig-y-nos Castle has a grade II* listing. It has been put to me that this may be correct for the main building, but that the theatre should have a higher listing. I have looked into this and decided that the theatre should indeed be listed grade I, but that the remainder of the building should be listed as grade II.

It is important that this hospital should be sold so that the resources released can be made available for the benefit of patient care in the Health Service. I hope that when it is put up for sale with this revised listing a purchaser will be found who can make effective use of this very important building.

Industrial Development

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the expenditure on industrial support and development in Wales between 1979 and 1983 and since 1983 to date.

Mr. Peter Walker: Expenditure on regional selective assistance and regional development grants in Wales for the financial years 1979-80 to 1982-83 and 1983-84 to 1986-87 is as follows:

1979-80 to 1982-83 £ million	1983-84 to 1986-87 £ million
452	445

Welsh Language

18. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in favour of Welsh being included as a subject in the curriculum binding upon schools in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have received about 100 representations which refer to the position of the Welsh language within the national curriculum, of which approximately three-quarters favour the inclusion of Welsh as a core or foundation subject throughout Wales. We are still considering our response to these representations.

Contraception

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many general practitioners in Wales hold the joint committee on contraception certificate in family planning;

(2) how many and which health authorities provide designated young people's birth control services in Wales;

(3) how many (a) National Health Service family planning clinics and (b) general practitioner health centres are designated as training centres for family planning in Wales.

Mr. Grist: This information is not available centrally.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the breakdown of numbers of individuals receiving contraceptive advice and treatment (a) by contraceptive method and (b) by source of treatment clinic or general practitioner in Wales for each of the last five years.

Mr. Grist: The available information for Wales is given in the following table. It is only possible to provide a split between IUD and other methods for patients receiving contraceptive services from general practitioners.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the rates of conception (i) inside, and (ii) outside marriage, by age of women, in each health authority in Wales in 1985.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not available at a district health authority level.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the rates of conception and resultant maternity or abortion by age of women in 1985 in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the following table. Details of the definitions and methods of estimation used were published in OPCS Monitor FMI 87/2 on 2 September 1987.

Conception rates per 1000 women resident in Wales: 1985

Age of mother at conception	All conceptions	Leading to maternities	Leading to abortions under 1967 Act

Private Residential Homes

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide a detailed breakdown of publicly funded subsidies to private residential establishments and nursing homes by authority in Wales for each of the last five years and the estimates for 1987.

Mr. Grist: The Department has no general powers to subsidise private residential establishments and nursing homes but a small number of projects have been supported through the urban programme and by means of urban development grant on the normal criteria applying to those schemes. I will write to the hon. Gentleman giving details.

Forestry Planting Licences

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications for forestry planting licences in Wales were objected to by (a) local authorities, (b) statutory bodies and (c) other bodies, respectively, in each of the last five years and 1987 to date; and how many were refused as a result.

Mr. Peter Walker: Only local authorities and other statutory bodies are formally consulted by the Forestry Commission over applications for grant aid for planting. For the years in question the information is as follows:

Year	Number of applications objected to	Number of objections from Local authorities	Other statutory bodies	Decisions taken on these applications

Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each Welsh district health authority area the number of abortions undertaken in each year since 1967.

Mr. Grist: The numbers of legally induced abortions, notified under the Abortion Act 1967, by district health authority area of woman's usual residence for the years 1974-1986, are given in the following table:

Legal abortions to Welsh residents

Gynaecological Operations

Mr. Nicholas Bennet asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list by each Welsh district health authority the number of outstanding gynaecological operations waiting to be performed;

(2) if he will list by each district health authority the number of gynaecological operations waiting to be performed.

Mr. Grist: The following table gives the number of people on the gynaecological in-patient waiting list as at 31 March 1987:

Health Authority	Waiting list (31 March 1987)
Clwyd	701
East Dyfed	205
Pembrokeshire	187
Gwent	745
Gwynedd	247
Mid Glamorgan	1,026

South Glamorgan	502
West Glamorgan	880

Information on the number of these people who are waiting for an operation is not available centrally.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Curates

24. Mr. Harry Greenway asked the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what are the average current pay and emoluments of curates; what were the comparable figures in real terms five, 10, 15 and 20 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: The current average stipend of an assistant curate is £7,469. In addition, he is provided with a house free of rent, rates, repairs and insurance. The comparative figures are given below. They show a substantial improvement in real terms over the period.

	Average stipend of Assistant Curates £	Equivalent at April 1987 prices £	Average stipend in 1987 £	Increase in real terms Per cent.
1987[1]	7,469	7,469	7,469	—
1982	4,914	6,173	7,469	+21
1977	2,039	4,542	7,469	+64
1972	1,000	4,750	7,469	+57
1967[2]	800	5,500	7,469	+36

[1] For 1987-88 the recommended four year incremental scale for assistant curates is £6,966-£7,475.

[2] There was no national scale in 1967 nor comparable statistics. However, the record indicates that the average stipend of assistant curates was in the region of £800 (or £5,500 at April 1987 prices).

DEFENCE

Exercise Purple Warrior

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any special arrangements have been made for compensation and restoration in relation to any damage arising from Exercise Purple Warrior.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Yes. In view of the scale of Exercise Purple Warrior, arrangements are being made to ensure that damage repair units and suitably qualified claims assessors will be on hand throughout the exercise period. They will either carry out any necessary repairs, or discuss the arrangements for any necessary compensation, as rapidly and effectively as possible.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the arrangements for monitoring of Exercise Purple Warrior by United Kingdom civil authorities.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are no arrangements for Exercise Purple Warrior to be monitored by civil authorities and no request for such arrangements has been received, although those authorities most closely involved in the exercise have been fully consulted in the course of exercise planning. Should problems arise which require further consultations with them, these will, of course, take place.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that the south-west of Scotland will not be used for further major exercises after Exercise Purple Warrior.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. South-west Scotland will continue to be one of the areas which we will use for military training. However, it is unlikely that another exercise on the scale of Exercise Purple Warrior will be carried out for some years in the same area.

British Servicemen (Nuclear Tests)

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any request from the National Radiological Protection Board for the names and last recorded addresses of British service personnel involved in British nuclear tests.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes, the National Radiological Protection Board has been given information on test participants from MOD service records. These normally contain the last recorded address of ex-service men.

Mr. Frank Larsen and Others (Prosecution)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Mr. Viggo Oerbak ever stayed at the Chelsea barracks in the capacity of a person employed by the United Nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have not identified anyone of that name as having stayed at the Chelsea barracks.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what occasions Messrs. (a) Viggo Oerbak, (b) Frank Larsen, (c) John Larsen, (d) Hans Christian Dahl and (e) Johann Neimoller have met serving British officers in the course of official duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have found no evidence of any such meetings.

EMPLOYMENT

Restart

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the Western Isles who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in East Lothian who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Doran asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the Aberdeen, South constituency who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in Cunninghame, North who have been refused benefit following a restart interview.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants at Ayr and Cumnock who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the scheme.

Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of claimants in the Glasgow, Pollok constituency who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the Midlothian constituency who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish an estimate of the number of claimants in Kilmarnock and Loudoun who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the Dunfermline, West constituency who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of claimants in Glasgow and Scotland, respectively, who have been removed from the register of unemployed persons following a restart interview in each month since restart began.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the Glasgow, Shettleston constituency who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many claimants in (a) Aberdeen, North constituency and (b) Aberdeen have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the beginning of the restart scheme.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the constituency of Falkirk, West who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mrs. Fyfe asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in Glasgow, Maryhill who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Galloway asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the constituency of Glasgow, Hillhead who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. McLeish asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the constituency of Fife, Central who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the Strathkelvin and Bearsden constituency who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in Livingston who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Buchan asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the Paisley, South constituency who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Lambie asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the constituency of Cunninghame, South who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. John Smith asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in Monklands, East, who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the scheme.

Mr. Ingram asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the constituency of East Kilbride who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the Dundee, East constituency who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the restart scheme.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the Dundee, West constituency who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. McFall asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in Dumbarton constituency who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in Paisley, North who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the Renfrewshire, West and Inverclyde constituency who have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Lee: Any refusal of benefit subsequent to a restart interview follows not from the interview itself but from the decision of an independent adjudication officer operating under long-standing legal rules adopted by successive Governments.

Scientists

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to how many scientists from other countries other than Britain worked in Scotland for more than four months for each year since 1975.

Mr. Lee: This information is not collated centrally.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of job vacancies in (a) the Dundee, East constituency and (b) the Dundee travel-to-work area for the latest available date.

Mr. Lee: This is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, who will reply as soon as possible.

Community Programme

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report the number of (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions in England and Wales since 1984 for offences relating to the fraudulent misuse or misappropriation of money advanced by the Manpower Services Commission in connection with community programme projects.

Mr. Lee: Since 1984 there have been 16 prosecutions, resulting in 10 convictions and one acquittal, with five cases still to be determined. The Manpower Services Commission vigorously investigates any allegations of misuse of public funds on the community programme, referring serious cases to the police and seeking recovery of the monies involved.

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the staff of a supermarket would be employed under the revised community programme.

Mr. Lee: None.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Standard Chartered Bank

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date he expects the publication of the results of the Bank of England's investigation into recent affairs of Standard Chartered bank.

Mr. Lilley: The inspectors appointed by the Bank of England under section 17 of the Banking Act 1979 have not yet completed their report. The findings contained in this report will be subject to Banking Act confidentiality requirements and it will be for the Bank of England to decide after consideration of the report what further action to take.

Child Benefit

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures showing for families with one to four children the income break-even levels, in pound sterling per week and as percentage of average male manual earnings, at which child benefit entitlement is the same as income tax liability.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 21 October, c. 794]: The information is in the table.

Levels of income at which child benefit entitlement equals income tax liability[1], 1987-88

Number of Children	Break-even levels of income
	£ per week	As percentage of average male manual earnings[2]
1	99·83	51·8
2	126·68	65·7
3	153·54	79·6
4	180·39	93·5

[1] Assuming husband in employment and no wife's earnings.

[2] Of full time males aged over 21.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Soames asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he proposes any changes in the PEP regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have decided to make a number of changes to the regulations on personal equity plans designd to simplify the running of the scheme. The changes to take effect from 1 January 1988 are:

(i) Plan managers will be required to provide plan holders with copies of the report and accounts of each company only if the plan holder opts to receive them. Discretionary plan managers will also be required to provide a six monthly statement explaining why they have bought and sold particular shares.

(ii) Cash payments into PEPs above the £2,400 limit may be made in order to take up the rights issues or other entitlements arising from beneficial ownership of shares, provided the shares were purchased before the announcement of the rights issue or other entitlements.

(iii) The time period for which cash may be held after the first year of a plan is to be increased from 28 to 31 days.

(vi) A minor tehnical change will ensure that, as always intended, the CGT exemption should in all cases apply only to capital gains over and above the market price at the time the shares are purchased into the PEP.

I shall in due course table draft regulations to bring these changes into effect.

ENVIRONMENT

Improvement Grants

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish the 1983 survey of improvement grants referred to in the Green Paper "Home Improvements—a New Approach", Cmnd 95B.

Mr. Waldegrave: A summary of the main findings of the Department's distribution of grant inquiry was published in May 1985 as an annex to the Green Paper on home improvement policy. A further report will be published as soon as possible.

Enterprise Boards

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what his policy is towards enterprise boards; what plans he has to encourage their activities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The establishment of enterprise boards and other similar bodies is one means by which local authorities have made a contribution to local economic development. Their activities are relevant to recommendations of the Widdicombe committee which I am considering.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act and (f) what action has been taken to facilitate job share, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Ridley: (a) My Department has two equal opportunities officers, one for the central part of the Department (shared with the Department of Transport) and one for the Property Services Agency. Both are grade 5 heads of division. No specific proportion of their time is allocated to any of their functions. They are supported by six staff who work full-time on equal opportunities matters and have no other responsibilities.

(b) The equal opportunities officers themselves have wide ranging responsibilities for personnel management policies and services to staff.

(c) Every member of staff with management responsibilities is involved in the implementation of equal opportunities policy. It is not possible to assign a specific cost to the work.

(d) The equal opportunities officers and their staff have frequent meetings, both formal and informal, with their counterparts from other Government Departments.

(e) No specific guidelines have been issued.

(f) All requests for part-time working and job sharing are met wherever possible. Special leave arrangements exist to help staff deal with domestic responsibilities. Explanatory material has been published and made available to all staff.

Rate-capped Authorities

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those rate-capped authorities which have applied for redetermination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has received applications for a redetermination of their 1988-89 expenditure levels from the London boroughs of Southwark and Tower Hamlets. He expects to announce his decisions on these applications in December.

Weather Radars

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent his discussion document, "An Outline National Response Plan: Incidents involving a release of radioactivity to the environment: Monitoring and Data Assessment" of July 1987 takes account of the advice given by the Meteorological Office in its annual report 1986, to the effect on the inclusion of Scotland in the network of weather radars provided for the rest of the United Kingdom and what would be the cost of such inclusion.

Mr. Moynihan: In formulating the national response plan it was acknowledged that weather radar would be helpful in identifying areas most likely to be affected by fall-out in rain. The programmes of the Scottish Office and the Ministry of Defence now provide for the installation of three weather radar stations in Scotland in the early 1990s.

Rating Reform

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what detailed and researched information he has about the likely increased costs required by the community charge, as compared with the costs of collecting the present rates.

Mr. Howard: My officials are discussing with the local authority associations and others the likely cost of operating the new system. The cost to each local authority will depend largely on its success in reducing unit costs.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make compensation available to local authorities in the event of serious delays in the collection of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: There is no reason to expect such delays.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will detail the measures to be taken for the protection from abuse of the information about citizens and their families for the application of the community charge;

(2) what legal provisions he proposes to introduce to deal with abuse by people involved in the gathering of information for the poll tax with the knowledge so obtained.

Mr. Howard: I have no reason to believe that there will be any abuse by community charge registration officers of the information they obtain. The Data Protection Act 1984 places obligations on those who record and use personal data and gives rights to individuals about whom data are held.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures will he adopt in order to avoid potentially regressive effects of the community charge in England and Wales.

Mr. Howard: The Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) demonstrates that the community charge will be less regressive than domestic rates for those with low incomes.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the extent to which the proposed community charge will result in retirement pensioners being displaced from their family households as a result of increases in the local taxation burden on that household.

Mr. Howard: None. There is no reason why a retirement pensioner should place a greater financial burden on a family household than at present. The community charge will be an individual liability and each individual or couple within the household will be able to apply for a rebate.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the numbers of people who will be required to pay 20 per cent. of the community charge.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987, c. 818]: Figure J9 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) estimated total housing benefit case load (GB) at 7·66 million when the community charge was fully in place. Of that total it is estimated that 4½-5½ million cases would be entitled to 80 per cent. rebates. These estimates of housing benefit case load are derived from a computer model and are sensitive to community charge levels, to income support rates and to the arrangements for transition to the community charge. The estimate, therefore, gives a broad indication only of the possible outcome.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reproduce figure J7 of Cmnd 9714 "Paying for Local Government", showing households gaining and losing with full replacement of domestic rates by the community charge by (a) region, (b) local authority, and (c) parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987, c. 818]: The figures show the numbers of households projected to experience different levels of changes in "household tax bills". The projections use 1985-86 data, the latest currently available for use within the tax benefit model. They are based on the illustrative community charges published on 29 June 1987. Overall, they show 9·9 million households with reduced houehold tax bills and 7·7 million with increases. These projections are sensitive to assumptions about spending and grant levels about which it is not possible to make projections up to 1994 when implementation will be complete. A further disaggregation of these figures by households type could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Projections for individual local authority and constituency areas are not possible because of the limitations of the sample survey data on which the projections are based.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will construct a table in the same form as figure J7 on page 125 of "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) showing the numbers of adults living in each of the households gaining and losing with full replacement of domestic rates by the community charge.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987, c. 818]: The table shows estimated numbers of households gaining and losing by household type on the basis of illustrative community charge figures for 1985-86. It is estimated that there are 17·1 million adults in households which are gainers and 16·7 million adults in households which are losers.

Housing

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses were built by the private sector in the United Kingdom for each year since 1980; and what were the comparable figures each year from 1973 to 1979.

Mr. Waldegrave: The number of dwelling completions in the United Kingdom in the years 1976 to 1986 appear in table 6.1(f) of "Housing and Construction Statistics, 1976-1986" and those for 1973 to 1975 in the corresponding table of the 1973-1983 edition. Copies are available in the Library.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific measures he proposes to solve the problems of families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation paid for from public funds.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is for local authorities to decide how they discharge their duties towards homeless people. The Government have advised very strongly that they should not put families in bed and breakfast accommodation, and many local authorities do not do so. The Government have offered extra resources to local authorities to bring empty properties back into use to house homeless families. We have developed new mixed funding arrangements with housing associations specifically for the benefit of homeless people.

Inner Cities

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking in order to involve local authorities closely in his search for a solution to inner city problems.

Mr. Trippier: Fifty seven authorities in England are invited to prepare co-ordinated inner area programmes to address local needs. Seventy five per cent. of approved expenditure is supported by urban programme grant.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take steps to produce an Ordnance Survey map showing the annual increase in the extent of blanket afforestation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: Ordnance Survey is responsible for the official surveying and mapping of Great Britain. It aims to maintain and update the topographic survey of the country but does not produce maps of annual land use change.

Calderdale

Mrs. Mahon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be replying to Calderdale council's request for a meeting to discuss the council's GREA for highways.

Mr. Chope: My hon. and learned Friend, the Minister for Local Government, will be writing very soon.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Mahon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide additional finance for local authorities to enable them to reintroduce intermediate repair and improvement grants.

Mr. Waldegrave: Grant expenditure at some £400 million a year remains at a historically high level. It is for local authorities to decide how much to spend on grants for repairs and improvements within the sums available to them from their housing investment programme allocation and from prescribed capital receipts.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each of the 57 English local authorities currently entitled to make applications for urban programme funding, for each year from 1978-79 to 1987-88 where appropriate (a) the amount of revenue and capital allocations in cash and current prices and (b) the amount of grant paid in cash and current prices.

Mr. Ridley: I provided in reply to a question by the hon. Member on 30 June 1987, at column 64, details of grant paid in current prices. I will write to the hon. Member with updated details and with the further information requested on urban programme allocations.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each authority in England for each of the three years 1984-85 to 1986-87 their maximum permitted spending under section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972 showing for each authority gross revenue spending, gross capital spending, total gross spending, and net total spending.

Mr. Ridley: I shall send the hon. Member a print-out showing the available information for each principal council in England (section 137 also applies to all parish councils).

Bolton

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set up a pilot urban development corporation scheme in Bolton as part of his initiative for revitalising the inner cities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I shall bear the suggestion in mind.

Birtenshaw Farm, Bolton

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the further representations by local residents against development at Birtenshaw farm, Bolton; and when he will be announcing his decision about the covenant against building on the site.

Mr. Waldegrave: Local residents have been told that all their representations will be taken into account. These and the statements made by the main parties are being considered but I am unable yet to say how soon a decision can be announced.

Planning Appeals (Costs)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give further consideration to the payment of objectors' costs at green belt planning appeals; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: The Government's response to the fifth report of the Environment Committee (Cm 43) set out in paragraphs 63-65 our reasons for concluding against public funding of costs incurred by objectors in appearing at public inquiries. I see no grounds for making an exception in respect of planning appeals for development in the green belt.

Gun Shops

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals for the introduction of planning regulations which would enable local authorities to control the siting of gun shops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. Local planning authorities have power to control the siting of a gun shop if a development proposal entails either erecting a new building or making a material change of use of an existing building. A proposal to sell guns from a building already used for one of the purposes in class A1 of the schedule to the Use Classes Order 1987, Shops, would not require planning permission. The development control system is concerned with land use planning matters and not with the use to which goods may be put once sold.

Large Panel System Dwellings (Mortgages)

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has met representatives of the Building Societies Association with regard to the mortgageability of large panel system dwellings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My officials had a helpful discussion on this subject with representatives of the Building Societies Association on Wednesday 9 September and have since written to them confirming the points made at that meeting. The BSA had already publicised to its member societies the Building Research Establishment's findings on large panel properties and will be issuing further guidance to societies in due course.

Rail Link (Bradford)

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the possibility of a rail link between Bradford Interchange and the Bradford Foster Square rail route was taken into account when drawing up plans for a courthouse development in Bradford on the former Exchange station site; whether the local authority made representations for the rail link; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The possibility of a rail link (between Bradford Interchange and Bradford Foster Square rail route) was drawn to the attention of the Property Services Agency by the city of Bradford metropolitan council when it accepted in outline form the proposed development of a courthouse on the former Exchange station site. The PSA examined the implications of such a link on the proposed courthouse development and reported that in its view the two developments could not share the same site. This view was endorsed by the council earlier this year when it authorised PSA to proceed with the courthouse development as programmed.

Storm Damage

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what finance he will provide for the London borough of Waltham Forest to replace trees destroyed in the recent storm.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the statement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on Wednesday 21 October.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what finance he will provide to the London borough of Waltham Forest to make safe the approximately 700 dangerous structures in the borough as a result of the recent storm.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the statement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on Wednesday 21 October. A letter has been sent to the chief executive of the London borough of Waltham Forest, giving details of the arrangements for claiming assistance under the Bellwin scheme. My right hon. Friend's announcement also dealt with the question of additional capital allocations for damage to buildings.

Right to Buy

Mr. Matthew Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses purchased under the right-to-buy legislation have been repossessed due to failure to repay the mortgages (a) total, (b) as a percentage of those sold and (c) in total as a percentage of those sold, listed by county.

Mr. Waldegrave: The available information on properties taken into possession by building societies and local authorities does not distinguish former council dwellings from other housing.

Mini-UDCs

Mr. Cran asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish full details of the proposal he made relating to mini-UDCs; and when he is going to designate the first tranche of those areas that are to receive them.

Mr. Trippier: As soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Surplus Food and Wine

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the amount being expended weekly by the European Economic Community on the storage, distribution and disposal, respectively of surplus food and wine; and what were the comparable sums spent per week on these services five and 10 years previously.

Mr. MacGregor: The table sets out weekly community expenditure on technical and financing costs of public intervention, and on export refunds and internal disposal subsidies (including loss on sale out of intervention) for commodities now in structural surplus (cereals, sugar, olive oil, wine, beef, milk and milk products). Community expenditure on distribution of products is not separately identifiable.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his Department equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget which is allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to his departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act, and (f) the action taken to facilitate job share, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. MacGregor: My departmental equal opportunities officer is a grade 5 post and does not have an allocation of time as such for equal opportunities duties, but a significent proportion of her duties do fall within the equal opportunities sphere. Apart from administering policy on equal opportunities, the other main duties include: pay and related matters, welfare, staff training, appointments and industrial relations. No separate provision is made in the departmental budget for equal opportunities work. There are many formal and informal occasions when equal opportunities officers meet their colleagues in other Government Departments. No specific guidance has been issued to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act but my Department is guided by the recommendations in the programme of action on women. My Department creates part-time posts and job sharing arrangements wherever practical and those responsible for staffing have been asked to identify posts which are suitable. A notice has been issued to all staff inviting those interested in part-time work or job-sharing to register with their personnel officers. Leave is granted to cover such situations as maternity leave, adoption and the caring of children during school holidays. Special leave may also be granted for "domestic distress" which in some instances could be occasioned by the need to care for children.

Royal Botanic Gardens (Tree Losses)

Mr. Wray asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department will be making a substantial contribution to the royal botanic gardens at Kew to offset the recent loss of old and valuable trees.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As indicated by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment in his statement on 21 October, I have already decided to make special additional help available to Kew to assist in the process of recovery and restoration. But much of the value of what has been lost lay in the age, beauty, rarity or historical association of the trees concerned. It will take the passage of much time and a great deal of dedicated work to overcome this. I know that the director and his staff are already making every effort to do so and should like to pay tribute to them. We do not yet have a full assessment against which to judge what additional contribution would be appropriate.

EC (Food Aid)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals are being considered for further distribution of food aid to the needy by the European Community; what plans have been made for the distribution in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 22 October to my hon. Friend, the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley).

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is seeking urgent talks with the Governments of the front-line states in southern Africa and with leaders of the opposition to apartheid.

Mrs. Chalker: We have regular contacts with the Governments of the front-line states and also with a wide range of opinion throughout southern Africa. The problems of southern Africa were also discussed at the recent Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Vancouver.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new diplomatic steps he is proposing at European Community level in order to help end apartheid in South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We shall continue, with our European Community partners, to do all we can to promote dialogue between the parties in South Africa leading to fundamental peaceful change. Our goal remains the total abolition of apartheid as soon as possible.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the use of the Seychelles by South Africa to circumvent trading restrictions imposed by Her Majesty's Government.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

Central America

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what part Her Majesty's Government will play in support of the special relationship between the European Economic Community and the Latin American countries of the Rio de Janeiro group.

Mr. Eggar: Together with his Community colleagues my right hon. and learned Friend attended the informal meeting between the Foreign Ministers of the Twelve and the Group of Eight on 23 September in New York. We will play a full part in any further contacts. The Foreign Affairs Council held in June 1987 agreed important conclusions concerning the links between the EC and Latin America.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will play an active and positive part in the emergency plans for the economic and political reconstruction of Central America as proposed by the Rio de Janeiro group of countries to the European Community.

Mr. Eggar: Together with our Community partners we already play a positive role in assisting Central America and supporting efforts to find a peaceful settlement in the region. EC aid commitments to the region have doubled since 1984 when the EC-Central American dialogue started. The co-operation agreement between the EC and Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama, signed in 1985, will be reviewed further at the fourth ministerial meeting to be held early next year. The establishment of peace would facilitate the more effective use of aid resources.

Namibia

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has lately been achieved in obliging the Government of South Africa to cease the occupation of Namibia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Nations Secretary General and United States Administration are engaged in continuing negotiations for the implementation of the United Nations plan. We support their efforts.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will take steps in order to seek to put a stop to the reported damage to Namibian natural resources by British companies.

Mrs. Chalker: We do not intervene in the operation of British companies in Namibia. We have no reason to believe that they are behaving irresponsibly. In contrast, considerable damage is being caused to Namibia's natural resources by Soviet and East European over-fishing.

Chile

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information has been received from the British embassy in Santiago about recent repression carried out by military or para-military forces in Chile, and the further disappearance of dissenters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's embassy in Santiago is required to make frequent reports on human rights violations in Chile. It has informed us of the disappearance of five people in early September, and of other incidents and disturbances. We deplore violence from whatever quarter and have made clear to the Chilean Government that restoration of democracy in Chile is the best guarantee of human rights.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report has been received from the British embassy in Santiago on the signing by Chile of treaties against torture, both at the United Nations and at the Organisation of American States.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's embassy in Santiago has reported that on 23 September Chile signed the United Nations convention against torture and the Inter-American convention on the prevention of torture.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the British embassy in Santiago did not join the explicit and firm expressions of support for the democratic opposition in Chile given during the recent International Parliamentary Assembly held in Santiago.

Mr. Eggar: The International Parliamentary Assembly, a privately sponsored gathering of parliamentarians, did not invite Governments. But we have made clear on many occasions our support for the restoration of democracy in Chile and for the democratic opposition, most recently in the statement by the Twelve of 9 October, the text of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Government Communications Centre, London

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements he is making as regard trade union membership for those working in the new Government communications centre in London.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 21 October, at column 762.

Iran

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the effects of an economic embargo on Iran on the peace process in the Gulf.

Mr. Mellor: No proposals for an economic embargo of Iran are current, and hence no detailed study of its effects on the prospects for peace has been undertaken. The only embargo which has been proposed in the context of enforcing Security Council resolution 598 is an arms embargo. We have made clear our willingness to see such an embargo against non-complying parties. Our position on more general economic sanctions is well known and we would be extremely sceptical of any such proposal were it to be made.

Franco-German Military Agreement

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to seek to make the United Kingdom a party to the Franco-German military agreement; what agreement he has made of the implications of the agreement for (a) the United Kingdom defence policy and (b) the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The establishment of a Franco-German defence council, recently announced by President Mitterrand, is an extension of the military co-operation provisions of the Elyseé treaty signed between them in 1963. There are no plans for the United Kingdom to become a party to this treaty. We welcome Franco-German co-operation in the defence field in so far as it contributes to the effectiveness of NATO as a whole.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent ministerial visit to India, Sri Lanka and Bangladesh; and what practical assistance Her Majesty's Government plan to give to India in dealing with the problems arising from the conflict in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Eggar: The Minister of State, Home Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Mid Sussex (Mr. Renton), visited India, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka and Pakistan from 3 to 17 September to examine the entry clearance systems operated by British missions in those countries.

We continue to give full support to the agreement signed on 29 July between India and Sri Lanka designed to bring an end to the tragic conflict in Sri Lanka.

We have made available £1·5 million for emergency relief and rehabilitation aid in Sri Lanka, and are in consultation with other aid donors with a view to playing a part in further rehabilitation work.

Falkland Islands Fisheries Zone

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the capital costs of implementing the Falkland Islands fisheries zone in 1987.

Mr. Eggar: Capital costs incurred to date are approximately £210,000, of which the major elements have been purchase of a harbour patrol boat and communications equipment for the fisheries department in Port Stanley. Costs of implementation of the Falkland Islands conservation zone are estimated at approximately £4 million for a full 12 months.

President Arias (Peace Prize)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will enter in the Official Report the full text of his message of congratulations to President Arias on his being awarded the Nobel prize for peace.

Mr. Eggar: It is not our practice to publish the text of such messages: my right hon. and learned Friend congratulated President Arias on the award and reiterated our support for the Guatemala agreement.

Bangkok

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report his latest estimate of the overall cost, including salaries, of maintaining Her Majesty's embassy and consular services in Bangkok.

Mr. Eggar: In the financial year 1986-87, the cost of Her Majesty's embassy in Bangkok was £2 million. Included in this cost was £126,000 for consular work, and £131,000 for entry clearance work.

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average time it takes for Her Majesty's consulate in Bangkok to issue visas to Thai business men and tourists to visit the United Kingdom; and how the formalities required of British visitors to Thailand compare with those required of Thai citizens seeking to visit the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: Average times are not available. Visitors who have previously been to the United Kingdom can normally expect visas within 48 hours of application. First-time visitors are normally interviewed. Depending on seasonal pressure, they may have to wait several weeks for interview. Business men demonstrating a genuinely urgent need to travel are, however, given special consideration. Information about the time taken by, and the procedures of, Thai missions in issuing visas to British visitors are not available.

Departmental Papers

Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which of his Departments' papers have been made available to the public since October 1986.

Mr. Eggar: Since 1 October 1986, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office — excluding the Overseas Development Administration — has made the following papers available to the public on request:

Colonel Robert Lowther

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason Colonel Robert Lowther, the former South African military attaché, was expelled from the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) on 24 July 1987, at column 570.

Operation Layout

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the nature of Operation Layout.

Mrs. Chalker: I would refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General on 23 October, at column 1095.

Nicaragua

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, given the steps which the Government of Nicaragua have taken to comply with the Guatemala accord, Her Majesty's Government will now restore full support for economic and financial aid to that country.

Mr. Eggar: Aid is directed as far as possible to the poorest countries in the world and those with which we have traditional links. Nicaragua is in neither category but has continued to benefit from EC aid of which the United Kingdom contributes some 20 per cent. We also co-finance small development projects with British voluntary agencies and contribute to humanitarian relief work.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Sheep and Lambs

Mr. Andrew Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated cost to public funds of compensation to farmers arising out of the recently imposed restrictions on movement of sheep and lambs in certain areas of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: It is estimated that in 1987-88 the cost of compensation to sheep farmers in Northern Ireland will amount to about £50,000. For the present, payments will be met by way of repayable advances from the Northern Ireland Civil Contingencies Fund, and parliamentary approval will be sought for the necessary Supplementary Estimates.

Castelwellan Factory

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether Her Majesty's Government intend to provide industrial accommodation in the Castlewellan area of County Down.

Mr. Viggers: The Industrial Development Board has retained ownership of a two-acre site beside the former Moss Lane factory in Castlewellan. The IDB would consider the provision of accommodation for a specific employment-related project accepted for selective financial assistance. The site is also available to any property developer wishing to construct factory units for leasing to small businesses.

TRANSPORT

Parachuting

Miss Widdecombe asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many fatalities have occurred as a result of parachuting accidents involving civilian jumpers in the last 10 years;

(2) how many parachuting accidents resulting in serious injuries and involving civilian jumpers have occurred in the last 10 years;

(3) if the Government are planning to seek the voluntary agreement of charities not to use amateur and inexperienced participants for fund-raising parachute jumps; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if the Government are planning to introduce legislation to implement and enforce higher minimum standards of training before members of parachute clubs are allowed to make their first jumps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Details of accidents involving civilian jumpers are available only for the last six years. During that period there were 23 fatalities, a further 144 serious accidents, and over 1 million jumps. The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for the safety of sport parachuting in the United Kingdom. It has reviewed safety and operating procedures with the British Parachuting Association and will be implementing improvements in the light of the recent fatal accident at Thruxton. The occasion on which a parachute jump is made has no bearing on the inherent risks of the activity and my right hon. Friend sees no case for introducing special restrictions on participation at charitable or fund raising events.

M1 (Roadworks)

Mr. Janner asked the Minister for Transport whether he will take steps to avoid the carrying out of roadworks on the M1 between London and Leeds during peak holiday traffic periods.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Roadworks involving lane closures on motorways and trunk roads are suspended during peak holiday periods wherever possible. It is not always possible to avoid having some roadworks at these times. Sometimes it is more inconvenient for road users if large contraflows are removed during peak holiday periods and then replaced because of the additional traffic restrictions required and the consequent overall increase in time taken to complete the works.

Any emergency repairs must go ahead.

Mr. Janner asked the Minister for Transport how many man-hours he estimates to have been lost due to delays caused by roadworks on the M1 during the past 12 months.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Records are not kept of total delays at M1 roadworks. On major lane rental schemes —costing over £0·5 million—delay costs are assessed on a daily basis. During the 12 months to 30 September 1987 10 major maintenance schemes were carried out by lane rental (compared with four under conventional contracts). The total site occupation was 680 days resulting in delay costs of £15 million. Lane rental saved an estimated 250 days and about £7 million compared with the time and resources which would have been spent had all contracts been on a conventional basis.

Local Authority Transport Companies

Mr. Allen asked the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions he has issued a dispensation to local authority councillors to speak and vote on matters concerning local authority transport companies; for which local authorities these dispensations were authorised; and if he will itemise in each case the length of time from application to authorisation.

Mr. David Mitchell: Dispensations have been given by the Secretary of State (under section 74(4) and (5) of the Transport Act 1985) on four occasions to local authority councillors who were also directors of the public transport company controlled by their authority, to discuss and vote on certain matters concerning the company. The details are as follows:

Authorities given dispensations	Number of working days between application being made and issue of dispensation
Stockton on Tees Borough Council	[1]36
Langbaugh Borough Council
Middlesbrough Borough Council
Portsmouth City Council	3
Portsmouth City Council	4
Nottingham City Council	4

[1] Joint application.

Motor Cycles (Leg Protectors)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the cost of fitting leg protectors to motor bikes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Consultation on a draft specification for leg protectors is at an early stage. We are seeking expert comment, especially from motorcycle manufacturers. This may influence the final form of the specification. The cost of protectors will vary according to the type of motorcycle, its equipment, the manufacturer's design and production methods. I would expect the additional cost to be usually in the range 3 to 10 per cent. of the cost of a new motorcycle.

Casualty rates for motorcyclists are far higher than for any other group of road users. A large number of serious injuries suffered by motorcyclists are to their legs, often resulting in lengthy hospital treatment. We believe that correctly designed leg protectors will significantly reduce these injuries.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget which is allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act, and (f) what action taken to facilitate job share, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: (a) The Department's equal opportunities officer also serves the Department of the Environment. He is a grade 5 head of division. No specific proportion of his time is allocated to any of his functions. He is supported by five staff who work full-time on equal opportunities matters and have no other responsibilities.

(b) The equal opportunities officer has wide ranging responsibilities for personnel management policies and services to staff.

(c) Every member of staff with management responsibilities is involved in the implementation of equal opportunities policy. It is not possible to assign a specific cost to the work.

(d) The equal opportunities officer and his staff have frequent meetings, both formal and informal, with their counterparts from other Government Departments.

(e) No specific guidelines have been issued.

(f) All requests for part-time working and job sharing are met wherever possible. Special leave arrangements exist to help staff deal with domestic responsibilities. Explanatory material has been published and made available to all staff.

I have regular meetings with the equal opportunities staff.

Tutbury Bypass

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive his inspector's report on the public inquiry into the proposed Tutbury bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The inspector's report was received on 5 October. It is now being considered. I hope to be able to announce a decision shortly.

Fishing Vessels

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to introduce legislation on, and a nationality test for, the beneficial ownership of fishing vessels in the United Kingdom and dependencies as recommended by the working party which reported to him in the autumn of 1986.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to my hon. Friends the Members for Cornwall, North (Mr. Neale) and for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 24 July.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to amend the regulations relating to safety matters on the carrying of immersion suits on United Kingdom-registered fishing vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department plan to introduce shortly regulations to implement specific provisions for the carriage of safety equipment on fishing vessels prescribed in the Safety at Sea Act 1986. In addition requirements for safety equipment generally on fishing vessels including immersion suits amongst other items is under examination by the Department in consultation with the fishing industry as part of a review of the Fishing Vessel (Safety Provisions) Rules 1975.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to change the Fishing Vessel (Safety Provisions) Rules 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department is reviewing the Fishing Vessel (Safety Provisions) Rules 1975 in consultation with the fishing industry.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has had with the representatives of the owners of United Kingdom and registered fishing vessels regarding the problem of noise levels of fishing vessel engines.

Mr. David Mitchell: No recent discussions have taken place with the fishing industry on the problem of noise.

Civil Aviation Authority

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if his Department has held recent discussions with the Civil Aviation Authority and commercial airlines regarding the removal of over-wing exit doors on Boeing 767 aircraft during emergency drill training by the crews of those aircraft; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if his Department has held recent discussions with the Civil Aviation Authority and commercial airlines regarding the carriage of smoke-hood protection for all crew members on United Kingdom registered commercial aircraft;

(3) if his Department has held recent discussions with the Civil Aviation Authority regarding passenger and crew safety, training and emergency-drill procedures in United Kingdom-registered commercial passenger aircraft; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if his Department has had recent discussions with the Civil Aviation Authority regarding the practice of storage of waste and waste disposal bags in passenger aircraft lavatories; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if his Department has held recent discussions with the Civil Aviation Authority regarding crew work hours and on-board rest periods on commercial passenger aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Civil aviation safety regulation is wholly the responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority, which has the necessary technical competence in these matters. I will drew the attention of the chairman of the authority to the hon. Member's inquiries.

Passenger Aircraft

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce legislation governing the carriage of hand baggage by crews and passengers on United Kingdom registered commercial passenger aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Legislation governing the carriage of baggage in the passenger compartment of a United Kingdom registered public transport aircraft is already contained in article 34(2)(e)(ii) of the Air Navigation Order 1985 (S.I., No. 1985/1643).

British Rail Engineering Ltd.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to provide work for British Rail Engineering Ltd. over the next 12 months.

Mr. David Mitchell: The amount of work secured by BREL is (as with most businesses) dependant on how successful they are in competing for whatever business is available. The British Railways Board plans to spend £1 billion on locomotives and rolling stock over the next five years. This provides the opportunity for substantial business for the railway supply industry although inevitably this will mean less heavy maintenance work. The Government will continue to support BREL's export efforts.

Heathrow (Light Aircraft)

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to limit the number of light planes using Heathrow by placing a lower limit on the number of seats per aircraft which can use Heathrow except in emergency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. I assume that the hon. Member has in mind the recent incident at Heathrow in which a light aircraft is alleged to have crossed the path of an airliner on take-off. As the hon. Member may know, that incident is under investigation by the CAA; I shall ask the chairman to write to him in due course.

Unmanned Railway Stations

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents have occurred at unmanned railway stations in Scotland for each of the last five years; and how many of these have been fatal.

Mr. David Mitchell: Accidents that occur on the railways in Great Britain are reportable to the Department as prescribed by Statutory Instruments. This does not require the railways to declare whether or not an incident occurred at a manned station or otherwise. Accidents resulting in minor injury and not involving the movement of a train, eg. slipping, tripping, falling accidents, are reportable by bulk return only as numbers with no details of location.

Over the last five years, the accident data for movement and non-movement accidents on the Scottish region of British Railways are:

	1983	1984	1985	1986	[1]1987
Fatal	2	2	3	2	1
Major	6	1	3	5	11
Minor	327	402	422	477	362

[1] Including September.

Only one of the fatal accidents occurred at a station; this was manned. The Scottish region has advised that, for 1987, none of the 11 major injuries reported occurred at unmanned stations but 32 of the 362 minor injuries did so.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many cases of assaults at unmanned railway stations in Scotland have been reported for each of the last five years; in how many of these cases prosecutions have followed; and how many convictions were obtained.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand from the British Transport Police (BTP) that the total number of assaults on trains and stations in Scotland, and the number of persons prosecuted, were as follows:

Year	Number reported	Persons prosecuted
1982	269	137
1983	323	169
1984	362	157
1985	352	139
1986	411	165

Separate records of convictions, and of the number of assaults at unmanned railway stations in Scotland, are not maintained by BTP.

Electricity (BR)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what discussions he is having with British Rail regarding the effects on its electricity supplies of the privatisation of electricity, generation and supply system;

(2) what representations he has received from community organisations, consumer associations, and the general public regarding the effects of the privatisation of the electricity production and distribution system on the costs of the electricity supplies to the railways system;

(3) what assessment he has made of the implications for the efficiency of British Rail of the proposed privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received no representations on this matter. It is in the first instance for the Railways Board to consider the possible implications for the operation of the railway.

Air Traffic Controllers

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on behalf of air traffic controllers calling for an inquiry into air traffic services and whether he has any plans to set up such an inquiry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has received representations from the Guild of Air Traffic Controllers for an independent inquiry into the infrastructure, organisation and efficiency of air traffic services in the United Kingdom. He was not persuaded that an inquiry of the kind suggested by the guild was justified.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will intervene to halt the practice of British Rail transporting nuclear materials through Morningside in Edinburgh, South constituency to and from Torness.

Mr. David Mitchell: The regulations which control the transport of radioactive materials require full protection to be built into the design of the containers so that the materials do not present a danger, even in the event of a severe accident. The choice of routes used is not therefore dependent on safety considerations.

Fallan Rescue Harness

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluation has been made of the Fallan rescue harness and sling for use by emergency services in road traffic accidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

I assume the question relates to harness equipment developed by a fire officer of the Strathclyde brigade. I am aware of this officer's initiative and I am at present seeking further information. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

SCOTLAND

Hunterston Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the reported incidents at Hunterston nuclear power station in 1987 to date, indicating (a) in which cases the alarm was sounded and (b) in which cases the alarm failed to be sounded.

Mr. Lang: The nuclear installations inspectorate's site incident register at Hunterston nuclear power station records a total of 50 incidents between 1 January and 14 October 1987. The date and nature of the incidents are shown in the tables below. The circumstances under which the nuclear site emergency alert alarm is required to be sounded are specified in the Hunterston emergency plan; in none of the incidents did these conditions arise.

Hunterston 'A' Power Station
Summary of site incident register entries:
1 January 1987 to 14 October 1987

Date	Nature of incident
17 January 1987	Failure of charge machine vessel safety valve flange led to minor release of CO_2 which was detected and alarmed by the Reactor 1 vault CO_2 detection system.
28 January 1987	A passing valve in the CO_2 plant caused a rise in the reactor pressure of 6·4 psi in 35 minutes.
10 April 1987	Contamination detected on Reactor 2 pipebridge. Maximum activity 100 counts per second (cps).

Date	Nature of incident
27 April 1987	Contamination detected at entry to Solid Active Waste Building. Maximum activity 400 cps.
8 May 1987	Contamination detected on charge machine rail near Solid Active Waste Building. Maximum activity 600 cps.
20 May 1987	Contamination detected on Health Physics instrument used at Reactor 2 Separation Room barrier. Maximum activity 300 cps.
9 June 1987	Spread of contaminated dust occurred when emptying Reactor 1 Separating Room cyclone filter. One person contaminated with maximum activity of 100 cps.
9 June 1987	Contamination detected on Health Physics instrument used during Reactor 1 Separating Room cyclone filter change. Maximum activity 50 cps.
14 June 1987	Clothing contamination detected at IPM7 personnel monitor. Maximum activity 25 cps.
16 June 1987	Clothing contamination detected at IPM7 personnel monitor. Maximum activity 10 cps.
23 June 1987	Personnel contamination detected at IPM7 personnel monitor. Maximum activity 300 cps.
23 June 1987	Clothing contamination detected at IPM7 personnel monitor. Maximum activity 425 cps.
24 June 1987	Contamination detected at barrier to Reactor 2 gas dryer. Maximum activity 200 cps.
30 June 1987	Clothing contamination detected at IPM7 personnel monitor. Maximum activity 15 cps.
3 July 1987	Clothing contamination detected at IMP7 personnel monitor. Maximum activity 50 cps.
6 July 1987	Clothing contamination detected. Maximum activity 100 cps.
6 July 1987	Contamination detected on scaffolding below SRU entry manhole. Maximum activity 500 cps.
9 July 1987	Failure of a fuel element in Reactor 1 required a reduction in power whilst preparations were made for its removal.
10 July 1987	Personnel nasal contamination detected. Contamination level of 14·7 Becquerels.
17 July 1987	Clothing contamination detected at IPM7 Personnel Monitor. Maximum activity 1000 cps.
22 July 1987	Contamination detected at barrier of Lightly Active Waste Facility. Maximum activity 200 cps.
22 July 1987	Piece of magnox found on cooling pond roadway. Maximum activity 4000cps.
22 July 1987	Contamination detected on roadway adjacent to 5A gas circulator. Magnox activity 1800 cps.
27 July 1987	Contamination detected at HP drum level of 2B SRU. Maximum activity 350 cps.
27 July 1987	Clothing contamination detected at IPM7 personnel monitor. Maximum activity 200 cps.
10 August 1987	Leakage from tritium bottle during transit.
12 August 1987	Surface contamination found on 2B SRU pipework.
16 August 1987	Failure of rotameter on BCD system.
5 September 1987	Shortage of cooling water, due to an ingress of seaweed into the CW system, led to Reactor 1 being manually tripped.
5 September 1987	Shortage of cooling water, due to an ingress of seaweed into the CW system, led to Reactor 2 being manually tripped.
10 September 1987	Spread of contamination occured when emptying cyclone filter bag.

Hunterston 'B' Power Station
Summary of site incident register entries:
1 January 1987 to 14 October 1987

Date	Nature of incident
13 February 1987	Failure of coupling on CO_2 service supply hose on charge machine.
16 February 1987	Clean CO_2 from a vaporiser was transferred to the deaerator via the domestic steam system because of a leak in the steam heating pipework at the vaporiser and another in the deaerator heating coil.
17 February 1987	Problems in releasing the charge machine grab from a control rod after its removal from the reactor.
9 March 1987	Failure of both IGV drive motors on gas circulator 4A2.
18 March 1987	Broken wire on Reactor 3 channel 3 pulse counter had caused the channel to trip.
5 April 1987	Trip of 4C quadrant on low lubricating oil pressure.
7 April 1987	Fire due to an electrical fault on R3 ESS Short Break Sub-board 3B.
7 April 1987	Trip of 3A quadrant due to board fault in incident of 7 April 1987 above.
8 April 1987	Contamination detected on shock absorber of road transport flask E67A. Maximum activity 30 cps.
10 April 1987	Clean CO_2 leak from joint on No. 6 vaporiser.
17 April 1987	Loss of vacuum due to inadvertent opening of air suction valves on vacuum maintaining unit.
17 April 1987	Problem with the cooling pond skip transporter led to the tilting of a skip.
12 May 1987	Closing of fuel stringer gag instead of opening.
12 May 1987	Small leak of reactor CO_2 from BCD sample valve on channel R3-2060.
11 June 1987	Trip of 4D quadrant on very low lubricating oil levelled to unit trip.
7 August 1987	Trip of unit 3 due to turbine governor problems.
15 September 1987	Reactor 4 gas leakage over a period of 18 minutes due to the partial failure of a joint in the gas treatment plant area. Source of reactor CO_2 leak isolated, and reactor continued operating.
16 September 1987	Small fire in R3 oil bund of 3C quadrant.
3 October 1987	Trip of unit 4 when control rod fell into core.

Rates

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average domestic rates bill in Kyle and Carrick and Cumnock and Doon Valley for each year since 1978 in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms, showing in each case the percentage change between years.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is as follows:

	Average Domestic Rate Bill £	Percentage Change	1987-88 prices £	Percentage Change
Kyle and Carrick
1978-79	161	—	327	—

Notes:

1. Source—Rating Review published by CIPFA.
2. The GDP deflator has been used to convert average rate bills to 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the percentage increase over the previous year in the domestic rates bill in the Edinburgh, South constituency for each year from 1977 to 1987;.

(2) if he will give the average domestic rates bill in the Edinburgh, South constituency repriced for inflation for each year from 1977 to 1987;

(3) if he will give the average domestic rates bill in the Edinburgh, South constituency for each year from 1977 to 1987.

Mr. Lang: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the rate support grant paid to Aberdeen city district council in each of the financial years since 1978, expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms expressed at 1986-87 prices; and what percentage of total spending in each year this represents.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is as follows:

	R.S.G. cash £'000	R.S.G. 1986-87 Cost terms £'000	Percentage of expenditure

Mr. Lang: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the predicted level of the personal community charge in the constituency of North Aberdeen in the financial year 1989-90 calculated on the basis of (a) 100 per cent. collection, (b) 95 per cent. collection, (c) 90 per cent. collection, (d) 85 per cent. collection, (e) 80 per cent. collection, (f) 75 per cent. collection, (g) 70 per cent. collection;

(2) how many numbers of staff will be required by the community registration officer in order to complete the registration of all adults in (a) Aberdeen and (b) the constituency of North Aberdeen; and what the extra cost will be.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the constituency of Falkirk, West in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (a) 100 per cent. collection, (b) 95 per cent. collection, (c) 80 per cent. collection and (d) 70 per cent. collection;

(2) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in the constituency of Falkirk, West.

Mrs. Fyfe asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the financial year 1989-90 calculated on the basis of (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection, and (vii) 70 per cent collection;

(2) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in Glasgow, Maryhill.

Mr. Galloway asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in the constituency of Glasgow, Hillhead;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the Glasgow, Hillhead constituency in the financial year 1989-90 calculated on the basis of (a) 100 per cent. collection, (b) 95 per cent. collection, (c) 90 per cent. collection, (d) 85 per cent. collection, (e) 80 per cent. collection, (f) 75 per cent. collection and (g) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Galloway asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average domestic rates bill in the Glasgow, Hillhead constituency for each year since 1978 in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms showing, in each case, the percentage change between years.

Mr. Lang: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the predicted amount of the personal community charge in Edinburgh Central to be collected in the financial year 1989-90 calculated on the basis of (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection and (vii) 70 per cent. collection;

(2) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in Lothian region.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the estimated cost for the introduction of the community charge for each region, and the percentage of it taken up by salaries, office equipment, interest and capital repayments;

(2) if he will give the average domestic rates bill in Strathkelvin and Bearsden constituency for each year since 1978 in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms showing, in each case, the percentage change between years.

Mr. Lang: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the percentage of the cost of introducing the community charge which will be paid for by central Government.

Mr. Lang: Provision for local authority current expenditure provision in 1988-89 includes £9 million for the cost of introducing the community charge and £3 million for the cost of related changes to housing benefit arrangements. Provision for subsequent years will reflect the cost of collecting the community charge in the same way as for the cost of rate collection at present. Local authority expenditure is supported by rate support grant from central Government. In 1989-90 this will be replaced by revenue support grant. Both of these are grants in aid of the general revenues of authorities and are not hypothecated to individual items of expenditure.

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland by what means eligibility for improvement and repairs grants will be decided following introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Lang: The Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 makes no change in the statutory criteria for eligibility for these grants. Section 5 to the Act makes provision for the construction, with effect from 1 April 1989, of references in enactments to the gross annual value, net annual value or rateable value of any property which constitutes domestic subjects and for the provision of a certificate by the assessor where necessary.

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish an estimate of the number of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register for all adults in the Strathkelvin and Bearsden constituency;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the Strathkelvin and Bearsden constituency in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (a) 100 per cent. collection, (b) 95 per cent. collection, (c) 90 per cent. collection, (d) 85 per cent. collection, (e) 80 per cent. collection, (f) 75 per cent. collection and (g) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in the Dunfermline, West constituency.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally on a constituency basis.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in the Glasgow, Shettleston constituency;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the Glasgow, Shettleston constituency in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection and (vii) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average domestic rates bill in the Glasgow, Shettleston constituency for each year since 1978 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms, showing in each case the percentage change between years.

Mr. Lang: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. McAvoy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in Glasgow, Rutherglen constituency;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the Glasgow, Rutherglen constituency in the financial year 1989 to 1990, calculated on the basis of (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection and (vii) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Mr. McAvoy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average domestic rates bill in Glasgow, Rutherglen constituency for each year in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms, showing in each case the percentage change between years.

Mr. Lang: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the Edinburgh, South constituency in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection and (vii) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in areas covered by Dunfermline, East constituency in the financial year 1989-90 calculated on the basis of (1) 100 per cent. collection, (2) 95 per cent. collection, (3) 90 per cent. collection, (4) 85 per cent. collection, (5) 80 per cent. collection, (6) 75 per cent. collection, and (7) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Ingram asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in the East Kilbride constituency;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the constituency of East Kilbride in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (1) 100 per cent. collection, (2) 95 per cent. collection, (3) 90 per cent. collection, (4) 85 per cent. collection, (5) 80 per cent. collection, (6) 75 per cent. collection and (7) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in the Dundee, East constituency.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not readily available.

Mr. McFall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in Dumbarton constituency in the financial year 1989-90 calculated on the basis of (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection and (vii) 70 per cent. collection;

(2) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in Dumbarton constituency.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the Cathcart constituency in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection and (vii) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many changes in the community charge register he estimates will be needed each year after 1990 in order to ensure that it is always accurate.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no such estimates.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many extra staff each regional and island council has told him will be necessary to compile the community charge register;

(2) if he has received from each regional and island council its estimate of the costs of compiling and maintaining the community charge register.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has not received this information from each regional and islands council.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish his proposals to ensure that residents in properties liable to the collective community charge who are entitled to a rebate do not pay the full cost.

Mr. Lang: People resident in properties liable to the collective community charge will be liable to pay the landlord a collective community charge contribution at the same daily level as the personal community charge for the area. Rebates will be available for the collective community charge contribution at the same level as for the personal community charge.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of foreign nationals living in Scotland who will be liable to pay the community charge.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no such estimate.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the community charge liability of (i) foreign service men serving in Scotland and (ii) foreign diplomatic staff resident in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: In fulfilment of the NATO status of forces agreement, visiting forces are at present exempted from rates, as well as from British income tax and various other forms of taxation. Some contribution towards the rate liability of accommodation occupied by visiting forces is, however, made by the relevant Governments. Diplomats are in a similar position. The Government are now considering what arrangements should be made about payment in respect of visiting forces and diplomats under the community charge system.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students from England, Wales and Northern Ireland he estimates will be liable to pay the community charge.

Mr. Lang: Precise figures are not available, but it is broadly estimated that about 10,000 students in Scotland may fall into this category. All students attending full-time courses of education in Scotland will be liable to pay only 20 per cent. of the personal community charge.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from local authorities in England and Wales and from student organisations about his understanding that students' courses in Scottish institutions of further or higher education will receive grants that will fully compensate them for their community charge payments.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations from the National Union of Students in Scotland and from various student representative councils. He has received no representations from local authorities in England and Wales on this issue.

Students in Scotland whose courses meet the definition of "a full-time course of education", which will be prescribed in regulations, will be liable to pay only 20 per cent. of the community charge.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether students from foreign countries studying in Scotland will be liable to pay the community charge in full; and what steps he has taken to ensure that all institutions of further and higher education inform all such students coming to study after 1989 of this liability.

Mr. Forsyth: Students from outwith the United Kingdom studying at Scottish educational institutions will be deemed to be resident in Scotland and will be liable to pay the community charge. If the courses which they are following meet the definition of "a full-time course of education", which will be prescribed in regulations, their liability will be limited to 20 per cent.

It will be for the institutions concerned to determine how best they might incorporate this information in the general advice about Scotland which they commonly offer to such students.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students from foreign countries undertaking courses at Scottish institutions of further or higher education he estimates will be liable to pay the community charge.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is estimated that in Session 1985-86, the latest date for which figures are available, there were some 8,462 students from outwith the United Kingdom studying at institutions of further or higher education in Scotland.

All students from outwith the United Kingdom who are deemed to be resident in Scotland will be liable to pay the community charge, but if their courses meet the definition of "a full-time course of education" (which will be prescribed in regulations) their liability will be limited to 20 per cent.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what definition of the term severely mentally handicapped he proposes to use; and when he intends to issue guidelines for the determination of those who will be exempt from the community charge under this definition.

Mr. Lang: The exemption from personal community charge liability for the severely mentally handicapped will apply to persons suffering from a state of arrested or incomplete development of the mind which includes severe impairment of intelligence and social functioning.

A consultation paper on the procedures for identifying these people was issued by the Scottish Office on 22 October.

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in Livingston;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in Livingston in the financial year 1989-90 calculated on the basis of (a) 100 per cent. collection, (b) 95 per cent. collection, (c) 90 per cent. collection, (d) 85 per cent. collection, (e) 80 per cent. collection, (f) 75 per cent. collection and (g) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Buchan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the Paisley, South constituency in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (a) 100 per cent. collection, (b) 95 per cent. collection, (c) 90 per cent. collection, (d) 85 per cent. collection, (e) 80 per cent. collection, (f) 75 per cent. collection and (g) 70 per cent. collection;

(2) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in the Paisley, South constituency.

Mr. Lambie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the constituency of Cunninghame, South in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (a) 100 per cent. collection, (b) 95 per cent. collection, (c) 90 per cent. collection, (d) 85 per cent. collection, (e) 80 per cent. collection, (f) 75 per cent. collection and (g) 70 per cent. collection;

(2) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in the constituency of Cunninghame, South.

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the city of Glasgow in the year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (a) 100 per cent. collection, (b) 95 per cent. collection, (c) 90 per cent. collection, (d) 85 per cent. collection, (e) 80 per cent. collection, (f) 75 per cent. collection and (g) 70 per cent. collection, and assuming in each case that the levels of expenditure by Glasgow district and Strathclyde regional council in 1989-90 and the same in real terms as those budgeted for 1987-88.

Mr. John Smith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in Monklands, East in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection and (vii) 70 per cent. collection;

(2) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in Monklands, East.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth in the financial year 1989-90 calculated on the basis of (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection and (vii) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of premises in Scotland in relation to which payment of the standard community charge will be made.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no such estimate.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde region and (c) Scotland as a whole in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection and (vii) 70 per cent. collection;

(2) if he will estimate the number of staff that the community charge registration scheme will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde Region and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary for State for Scotland what is his best estimate of the average payment of the poll tax to be levied up on each adult in Inverclyde in each of the years (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91, and (c) 1991-92.

Mr. Lang: My right and learned Friend has made no such estimate.

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary for State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in Paisley, North in the financial years 1989-90 calculated on the basis of (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection and (vii) 70 per cent. collection.

(2) if he will publish an estimate of the number of staff that the community charge registration office will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in Renfew district.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Dr. Reid asked the Secretary for State for Scotland which sources of information about citizens and their families will be available for scrutiny by civil servants for the purpose of applying the community charge in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Civil servants will not be involved in the registration, levying or collection procedures for the community charge system in Scotland.

Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary for State for Scotland which sources of information about citizens and their families will be available for scrutiny by civil servants for the purpose of applying the community charge in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Civil servants will not be involved in the registration, levying or collection procedures for the community charge system in Scotland.

Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary for State for Scotland what will be the nature and estimated amount of funding given to local authorities in Scotland for the purpose of collecting the proposed community charge.

Mr. Lang: Provision for local authority current expenditure provision in 1988-89 includes £9 million for the cost of introducing the community charge and £3 million for the cost of related changes to housing benefit arrangements. Provision for subsequent years will reflect the cost of collecting the community charge in the same way as for the cost of rate collection at present. Local authority expenditure is supported by rate support grant from central Government. In 1989-90 this will be replaced by revenue support grant. Both of these are grants in aid of the general revenues of authorities and are not hypothecated to individual items of expenditure.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland who will pay for the extra equipment and staff that the local authorities will require to administer the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: Provision for local authority current expenditure provision in 1988-89 includes £9 million for the cost of introducing the community charge and £3 million for the cost of related changes to housing benefit arrangements. Provision for subsequent years will reflect the cost of collecting the community charge in the same way as for the cost of rate collection at present. Local authority expenditure is supported by rate support grant from central Government. In 1989-90 this will be replaced by revenue support grant. Both of these are grants in aid of the general revenues of authorities and are not hypothecated to individual items of expenditure.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if an elderly parent is being cared for at home, whether he or she will have to pay the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: A person in this position who is solely or mainly resident at home will be liable to pay the personal community charge. A system of rebates of up to 80 per cent. of personal community charge liability will be available for those on low incomes and the levels of income support — which will replace supplementary benefit in April 1988 — will be raised to take account of the average minimum contribution to the charge.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what help will be given to those who are currently on family income supplement to pay the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: People in receipt of family credit—which will replace family income supplement on 1 April 1988—will be eligible, in appropriate cases, for rebates of up to 80 per cent. of their personal community charge liability.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the Government's estimates of the percentage of those eligible to pay poll tax who will do so.

Mr. Lang: I am confident that the systems provided for by the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 will allow for the efficient collection and recovery of the community charge.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, from Government figures, which groups will be worse off under the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: An analysis of households gaining and losing as a result of the introduction of the community charge was contained in Annex J of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what sources of information will be used to establish and maintain the poll tax register.

Mr. Lang: Sections 17 and 18 of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 sets out the arrangements for the provision of information to community charges registration officers. The main sources of information will be a "responsible person" who will respond to canvass inquiries in respect of each address, and individuals who are required to notify the registration officer when their registration details change. The registration officer will also have access to relevant records held by local authorities. Draft regulations on registration matters were recently issued by the Scottish Office for comment by interested bodies.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the effect on electoral roll registration of its possible use of a source of information for the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no such estimate. The implementation of the community charge system is a quite separate process from electoral registration and should have no adverse impact on it.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what will happen to a young person, unemployed, and with no material possessions, who does not pay poll tax;

(2) what action will be taken against those who do not pay poll tax.

Mr. Lang: The procedures for the recovery of unpaid community charges by the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 are similar to those now available for unpaid rates, recently revised by the Debtors (Scotland) Act 1987. People on the lowest incomes will be eligible for rebates of up to 80 per cent. of their personal community charge liability, and income support levels will be raised to take account of the average minimum contribution.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether those who are disabled will have to pay the poll tax;

(2) whether the unemployed will have to pay the poll tax;

(3) how the system will ensure that those on supplementary benefit are not pushed into further hardship;

(4) whether a person on YTS will have to pay poll tax;

(5) whether the low paid will have to pay the full amount of poll tax;

(6) what rebate from poll tax there will be for a part-time shopworker, with no other paid employment;

(7) whether participants on the community programme will have to pay poll tax.

Mr. Lang: The community charge will be payable by all those aged 18 and over who have their sole or main residence in each local authority area, apart from those in respect of whom child benefit is payable; the severely mentally handicapped; residents in nursing homes, residential care homes and hostels providing an equivalent level of care; long-term hospital patients; and prisoners. Rebates of up to 80 per cent. will be available to those on low incomes. They will be calculated on a basis which takes account of personal circumstances such as disability. Those receiving income support (which will replace supplementary benefit in April 1988) will receive the maximum rebate and the levels of income support will be raised to take account of the average 20 per cent minimum contribution.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether a merchant seaman away from home for months at a time will have to pay the full amount of poll tax.

Mr. Lang: It will be for community charge registration officers to determine, in the light of the facts and circumstances of each case, where a person is solely or mainly resident and hence what is his personal community charge liability. That determination will be subject to appeal to the registration officer in the first instance and from his decision to the sheriff.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in Renfrewshire, West and Inverclyde;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the constituency of Renfrewshire, West and Inverclyde in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection and (vii) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Scottish Special Housing Association

Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the numbers of tenants living in Scottish Special Housing Association rented accommodation in the Glasgow, Pollok constituency in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally by constituency area.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of tenants living in Scottish Special Housing Association rented accommodation in Kyle and Carrick and Cumnock and Doon Valley in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of dwellings belonging to the Scottish Special Housing Association in the areas of the district councils concerned at 31 March each year are as follows:

	Kyle and Carrick District Council	Cumnock and Doon Valley District Council
1979	1,512	2,305
1980	1,513	2,323
1981	1,473	2,313
1982	1,458	2,297
1983	1,421	2,284
1984	1,375	2,266
1985	1,323	2,250

(3) if he will allow the tenants of Scottish Special Housing Association's houses as further consultation after the Government have discussed the findings to allow them to have a say in their future.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A White Paper setting out the Government's proposals on future housing policy in Scotland will be published in the next few weeks. It will contain our response to the large number of useful comments received in response to the consultation document "Scottish Homes: A New Agency for Housing in Scotland", including explicit proposals concerning the future rights of those who are tenants of the Scottish Special Housing Association at present. My right hon. Friend and I will continue to attach particular importance to ensuring that those tenants are properly informed about the Government's proposals and have the opportunity to express their views concerning them. It is regrettable that tenants have been caused unnecessary anxiety over recent months through the activities of those who have sought to misinform them about our proposals.

Capital Receipts

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give a breakdown of his Department's target for capital receipts on the housing revenue account, capital, as a proportion of borrowing consent, for Edinburgh for each year from 1982 to 1987;

(2) if he will give a breakdown of his Department's target for capital receipts on the housing revenue account, capital, as a proportion of borrowing consent, for Scotland for each year from 1982 to 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the following table:

Scottish Development Department HRA capital receipts estimate as percentage of gross capital allocation for Scotland and Edinburgh

	Scotland per cent.	Edinburgh per cent.
1982-83	31	24
1983-84	35	54
1984-85	53	84
1985-86	45	90
1986-87	36	39
1987-88	37	36

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown of his Department's target for capital receipts on the housing revenue account, capital, as a proportion of borrowing consent, for Edinburgh for 1982.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown of his Department's target for capital receipts on the housing revenue account, capital, as a proportion of borrowing consent, for Scotland for 1982.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department's housing revenue account—HRA—capital receipts estimates for 1982-83 comprised 31 per cent. of the HRA gross capital allocation for Scotland and 24 per cent. of the allocation for Edinburgh.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of people unemployed in the Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency, by sex, who are (a) under 25 years of age, (b) 25 to 35 years, (c) 35 to 50 years and (d) over 50 years; and what were the numbers in 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Ian Lang: The information is as follows:

Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency

Age Group	July 1985 Male	Female	Total	July 1986 Male	Female	Total	July 1987 Male	Female	Total

All ages	5,986	2,230	8,216	6,040	2,282	8,322	6,117	1,949	8,066

Note:
The 1985, 1986 and 1987 figures are not comparable due to changes in the method of the count.

This information is available in the Library.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish figures showing unemployment by age group in Greenock and Port Glasgow for the latest available date.

Mr. Lang: On 9 July 1987 the number of unemployed claimants by age group in the Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency was as shown in the following table:

Age group	Unemployed claimants
Under 17	107
Aged 17	239
Aged 18	359
Aged 19	327
Aged 20 to 24	1,571
Aged 25 to 29	1,173
Aged 30 to 34	857
Aged 35 to 39	773
Aged 40 to 44	671
Aged 45 to 49	678
Aged 50 to 54	592
Aged 55 to 59	625
Aged 60 and over	94
TOTAL	8,066

This information is available in the Library.

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of people registered as unemployed in numbers and in percentage terms in (a) Scotland, (b) Ayrshire and (c) Kilmarnock and Loudoun and compare this with (i) the 1979 figures and percentage and (ii) the 1983 figures and percentage.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested. However, unemployment figures and rates for the Kilmarnock travel-to-work area — which since 1983 are the same as for the parliamentary constituency of Kilmarnock and Loudoun — together with the comparable figures for Scotland are shown in the table.

Year (September)	Kilmarnock travel-to-work area Number	per cent.	Scotland Number	per cent.
1979	3,277	9·5	163,585	7·2
1983	5,465	17·6	339,992	15·3
1987	5,374	17·1	332,684	14·8

The figures for the different years are not comparable due to changes in the method of the count.

This information is available in the Library.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all industrial and commercial redundancies which amount to 25 or more in (a) the constituency of North Aberdeen and (b) Aberdeen for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information requested cannot be provided since details of closures and redundancies confirmed by individual companies are provided to the Manpower Services Commission in confidence.

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all closures that have resulted in 25 or more redundancies in the Strathkelvin and Bearsden constituency in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information requested cannot be provided since details of closures and redundancies confirmed by individual companies are provided to the Manpower Services Commission in confidence.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each employment office and ward district the numbers unemployed in the latest month for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: The number of unemployed claimants for each Jobcentre and in each local authority district ward in Scotland cannot be provided except at a disproportionate cost.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people under 25 years of age were unemployed in the Greenock travel-to-work area and Strathclyde region; and of these how many have been unemployed for more than one year, two years, three years and four years.

Mr. Lang: On 9 July 1987, the latest date for which information is available, the numbers of unemployed claimants under 25 years of age in the Greenock travel-to-work area and Strathclyde regional authority by duration were as shown in the table.

Duration unemployed	Greenock travel-to-work area Number of unemployed claimants	Strathclyde regional authority Number of unemployed claimants
Up to 1 year	2,014	47,564
1 to 2 years	552	11,240

Prison Violence

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether Special Air Service personnel were used to quell recent riots in Scottish prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It would be inappropriate, for security and operational reasons, to comment on the way in which the recent incidents were resolved or on the contingency plans for dealing with such incidents.

Dr. Reid asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he proposes to investigate the recent outbreaks of violence at Shotts prison, Motherwell, North constituency;

(2) if there is to be a Government inquiry into the causes of recent outbreaks of violence in Scottish prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The incident at Shotts prison, from 26 September to 27 September, is the subject of investigation by the police and procurator fiscal and may be the subject of criminal proceedings. It would be inappropriate for me to comment on the nature or possible outcome of these investigations, or any criminal proceedings which might result. The implications of the recent incidents in Scottish prisons are at present being assessed by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if there is to be a Government inquiry into the causes of recent outbreaks of violence in Scottish prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The implications of the recent incidents in Scottish prisons are at present being assessed by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Nurses

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to encourage nurses to remain in the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) today.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what policies are being proposed or carried out in order to (a) attract more nurses into the National Health Service in Scotland and (b) to give them incentives to stay and constantly improve their standards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Discussions are taking place at national and local level on how best to attract more recruits into nursing. In Scotland, recruitment initiatives undertaken by individual health boards on a local basis include "back to nursing" campaigns, advertising of part-time opportunities, co-operation with head teachers and career advisers on recruitment from schools and co-operation with job and skill centres on recruitment of mature entrants. We have reversed the decline which took place between 1974 and 1979, when the pay of nurses fell by 21 per cent. in real terms, and implemented increases in nurses' pay giving a rise of 30 per cent. in real terms since 1979. In addition the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council is reviewing grading structures in order to ensure that those working in clinical areas are appropriately rewarded.

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish (a) the number of nurses in post in Edinburgh Royal infirmary as at 1 April and (b) the Lothian health board established figure for nurses on 1 April.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information as at 15 April 1987 is:

	Nurses (whole-time equivalent) In-post	Funded establishment
Trained	737·75	733·6
Untrained	219·34	230·0

In addition there are on average 295 learner nurses and 15 post basic learner nurses at the hospital.

Health Problems (Ministerial Advice)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary for State of Scotland what advice he has received on the health problems brought about by homelessness or poor housing conditions, unemployment and deprivation in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The report "Scottish Health Authorities Priorities for the Eighties"—the SHAPE report — submitted to my right hon. and learned Friend's predecessor in 1980, recommended that health boards should include in their top priorities services for the multiple deprived.

NHS Staff

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the new full-time, medical staff employed by the National Health Service in Scotland since 1979 are filling vacancies left by retirement or other similar causes; and how many correspond to the expansion or improvement of medical service in the Scottish National Health Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available. However, since 1979 the number of full-time hospital and community medical staff has increased from 4,699 to 5,021, an increase of 7 per cent. This reflects the Government's continued commitment to the NHS by expanding and improving medical services.

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing, for each year since 1979, (a) the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in the Kilmarnock and Loudoun constituency and (b) the number of National Health Service staff, in terms of full-time equivalents.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in Aberdeen and (b) the number of National Health Service staff in terms of full-time equivalents, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Galloway asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1979 (a) the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in the constituency of Glasgow, Hillhead and (b) the number of National Health Service staff in terms of full-time equivalents.

Mr. McLeish asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1979 (a) the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in the constituency of Central Fife and (b) the number of National Health Service staff in terms of full-time equivalents.

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing, for each year since 1979 (a) the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in the Strathkelvin and Bearsden constituency and (b) the numberof National Health Service staff, in terms of full-time equivalents.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1979 (i) the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in Greenock and Port Glasgow and (ii) the number of National Health Service staff, by occupational designation and in terms of full-time equivalents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally on a constituency basis.

Dr. Reid asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the overall increase in spending required by the National Health Service in Scotland due to increasing demands of the population on the service in 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Estimates of demand on the National Health Service in Scotland, including both hospital and primary care services, are being considered as part of the current review of public expenditure plans.

NHS

Dr. Reid asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on increasing the level of contracting out of National Health Service services to private concerns in Scotland.

Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on increasing the level of contracting out of National Health Service services to private concerns in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's policy is that, in order to provide the best care for patients, all services in the NHS should be provided in as cost-effective a way as possible; and that competitive tendering involving the private sector has a significant role to play in achieving that. I am discussing with health boards the steps that need to be taken to make better progress.

Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the overall increase in spending required by the National Health Service in Scotland due to the increasing demands of the population on the service in 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave today to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid).

Lothian Health Board

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the revenue expenditure allocated to Lothian health board in 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I expect to announce the revenue expenditure allocations to Scottish health boards for 1988-89 in February.

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider making available additional capital funds to Lothian health board to enable identified remedial and improvement work to be carried out to Edinburgh royal infirmary in 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Lothian health board has been allocated £18,529,000 for capital expenditure in 1987-88 — including £9,821,000 earmarked for projects at the Western general hospital, Edinburgh, the West Lothian district general hospital, Livingston and the Edinburgh dental hospital. Apart from these earmarked funds, it is for the board to determine its spending priorities within its allocation. The board is due to submit a revised capital plan shortly and its capital allocation for 1988-89 will be announced early next year.

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive Lothian health board's option appraisal on the future of the Edinburgh royal infirmary.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The board is currently reviewing its acute service needs, and I expect to receive its proposals when it has completed this work.

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Lothian health board with regard to its revenue and capital expenditure in (a) 1987-88 and (b) 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Lothian is among the best funded health authorities in Great Britain. Since the 1987-88 capital and revenue allocations were issued, my Department has received two letters from Lothian health board about capital allocations. In addition officials maintain regular contact about many aspects of the board's financial affairs.

Health Care International

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to give a figure for the reasonable additional costs incurred by the National Health Service for training nurses employed by Health Care International.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The detailed arrangements for nurse training are the subject of continuing discussion between HCI, Greater Glasgow health board and the Scottish Home and Health Department.

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what sanctions are available to him in the event of Health Care International failing to fulfil the undertakings given to him to apply National Health Service conditions of service to their staff.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no reason why Health Care International should not abide by the undertakings, which it volunteered, to apply NHS remuneration and conditions of service to medical, nursing, other professional and technical staff. There are sanctions, in terms of inability to register with Greater Glasgow health board in accordance with the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Act 1938 if the terms of the authorisation have not been met.

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the undertakings given to him by Health Care International that it will not compete with the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes. A copy of the Health Care International application and the terms of the Secretary of State's authorisation will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he received concerning the Health Care International proposal for a private hospital in Clydebank; how many of these favoured the proposal; how many opposed; how many sought safeguards for existing medical provision in west central Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Forty persons or bodies sent observations tc the Secretary of State about the application. Many of those consulted saw both benefits and drawbacks and the views varied as to the impact which the development might have on the National Health Service; the concerns most commonly addressed were those of the supply of qualified nurses and of blood and blood products. I believe that these concerns have been fully addressed by the conditions which have been attached to the authorisation.

Ambulances

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average waiting time for an ambulance responding to an emergency call in (a) rural areas and (b) urban areas; what arrangements exist for monitoring response times; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish ambulance service carries out detailed monitoring of response times and submits quarterly returns to my Department. Ambulance areas are classified as either metropolitan or rural and in Scotland only the Glasgow area falls into the metropolitan category. The figures available show the percentage of emergency calls answered within specified time limits. In 1986-87, the response times were as follows:

Area	8 minutes per cent.	14 minutes per cent.	20 minutes per cent.
Highland and Western Isles	59·4	77·5	88·2
Grampian, Orkney and Shetland	69·0	87·8	94·5
Tayside	71·1	92·8	97·8
Fife, Lothian and Borders	57·8	87·5	96·5
Glasgow	44·5	81·3	93·6
Forth Valley and Lanarkshire	63·9	90·5	97·8
Argyll and Clyde	65·4	89·1	96·8
Ayrshire, Dumfries and Galloway	70·4	90·2	97·3
Scotland	58·8	86·9	95·8

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in achieving the double manning of ambulances throughout the Scottish ambulance service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government give high priority to reducing the number of emergency calls which are answered by single-manned ambulances. Extra money has been allocated to allow more rapid progress to be made to that end. As a result the Scottish ambulance service will spend about £250,000 in 1987-88 on reducing single manning of accident and emergency ambulances.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are on hospital waiting lists in Fife.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest information centrally available, which relates to 31 March 1987 and is provisional, shows 5,198 people on waiting lists for hospital in-patient treatment in the Fife health board area.

NHS Beds

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of National Health Service beds in Renfrew district and compare in that table the current figure with 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally on a district basis.

Hospital Patients

Mr. Michael J. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to improve the care of elderly hospital patients in the east end of Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provision of geriatric services in east Glasgow is primarily a matter for the Greater Glasgow health board. The board is, however, conducting a strategic review of services for the elderly in the greater Glasgow area as a whole and any decisions on services for elderly patients in the east end of the city will be dependent on the outcome of that review.

Hospitals

Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) private and (b) National Health Service hospitals have been built in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Mr. Forsyth: (a) Two private hospital developments have been notified to the Secretary of State since 1979, one in 1981 and one in 1982. (b) Details of all hospital developments are not held centrally. The information for major capital projects is as follows:

Year	Number of hospitals
1979	2
1980	10
1981	6
1982	5
1983	10
1984	6
1985	4
1986	4

Abortions

Mrs. Fyfe asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list, for each hospital which performed abortions in each health board area, in the latest year for which statistics are available, the ages of the women having the abortions, the numbers of those women resident in that health board area and the numbers who travelled from other parts of Scotland, other parts of the United Kingdom, other European Economic Community countries and other countries;

(2) if he will list for each hospital which performed abortions in each health board area, in the latest year for which statistics are available, the gestational ages of the foetuses;

(3) which hospitals within each health board area perform abortions; and how many abortions were performed in each hospital in the latest year for which statistics are available.

Mr. Forsyth: Information about the abortions performed in each health board area is published in "Scottish Health Statistics". It is not our practice to publish a breakdown of these figures by individual hospital.

Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by each district health authority area the number of abortions undertaken in each year since 1967.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the number of abortions by Health Board of treatment are given in "Scottish Health Statistics 1985" — page 58. The statistics are published annually.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Ingram asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give by Government Department the number of registered disabled persons employed as a percentage of the total work force for each year since 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested for the departments for which I am responsible is as follows:

Disabled Staff as a percentage of total Staff

Department	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987

I will write to the hon. Member with the relevant information for the Department of the Registers of Scotland.

Open-heart Surgery

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has completed his review of open-heart surgery facilities in Scotland; and if he will make a statement on the expansion of such facilities in the area of Grampian health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The review has not yet been completed.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce a comprehensive scheme of screening for breast cancer among women aged below 50 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. We announced earlier this year that we accepted the recommendations of the Forrest report on breast cancer screening that there should be a comprehensive three-yearly screening programme for all women between the ages of 50 and 64. I recently announced that the first four breast cancer screening centres will be established in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen and Dundee during 1988.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of breast cancer screening machines in each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Cervical Cancer Tests

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many clinics and laboratories are carrying out cervical cancer tests in Scotland; and where are they operating.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Many clinics and GPs take cervical cancer smears which must then be forwarded to laboratories for testing for cervical cancer. The 19 laboratories examining cervical cancer smears in Scotland are as follows:

Health Board	Laboratory
Argyll and Clyde	Inverclyde royal infirmary Royal Alexandra hospital Vale of Leven hospital
Ayrshire and Arran	Ayrshire central hospital
Dumfries and Galloway	Dumfries and Galloway royal infirmary
Forth Valley	Stirling royal infirmary
Grampian	Foresterhill hospital
Greater Glasgow	Royal maternity hospital Glasgow royal infirmary Southern general hospital Stobhill hospital Victoria infirmary Western infirmary
Highland	Raigmore hospital Dunbar hospital
Lanarkshire	Monklands district general hospital
Lothian	Edinburgh royal infirmary
Tayside	Dundee royal infirmary Perth royal infirmary

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given health boards on cervical cancer screening; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have received and am presently considering the report of a Scottish Health Service Planning Council working group which reviewed the cervical cytology service in Scotland. Guidance to health boards will be issued in due course.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Michael J. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to curb drug abuse in Glasgow, Springburn.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's strategy and the measures being taken to tackle the problem of drug misuse throughout the United Kingdom are described in "Tackling Drug Misuse — A Summary of the Government's Strategy", copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Michael J. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds have been spent in Glasgow, Springburn to rehabilitate drug addicts for the years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available.

Mr. Michael J. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to seek to prevent abuse by drug addicts of pain killing drugs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's strategy and the measures being taken to tackle the problem of drug misuse are described in "Tackling Drug Misuse — A Summary of the Government's Strategy", copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what new facilities the Scottish National Health Service has been given, since 1979, for the diagnosis and treatment of drug abusers, including their accommodation.

Dr. Reid asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what new facilities have been made available to the National Health Service in Scotland for the treatment of heroin and related drug abuse since 1983.

Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, what new facilities have been made available to the National Health Service in Scotland for the treatment of heroin and related drug abuse since 1983.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: NHS services for drug misusers are generally provided as part of the usual range of community and hospital-based services. The Government have made substantial increases in resources available to health boards since 1979 and it is for individual health boards to determine the level of expenditure on particular services from within their overall financial allocations.

In 1984 and 1985 in addition the Government provided funds to establish a range of local drug projects run by health boards, local authorities and voluntary bodies in places where drug misuse was prevalent. The support of these projects was the responsibililty of the Scottish Office until April this year when this responsibility was devolved to the relevant health boards. The total cost of these projects which are listed below is about £0·75 million per year.

[2] Provisional: 1985 data are used for Family Planning (Clinic) Services data in Greater Glasgow, whose 1986 data are not available.

[3] In 1983 10 people appear twice in the breakdown by contraceptive method because they used two methods during the year.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and which health boards provide designated young people's birth control services in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not centrally available. It is for individual health boards to determine the pattern of provision of these services and the extent to which designated facilities are provided.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of family planning clinics and family planning clinic sessions in each health board in Scotland for each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (1) National Health Service family planning clinics and (2) general practitioner health centres are designated as training centres for family planning in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not centrally available.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of new patients in each health board diagnosed as having multiple sclerosis for each year since 1975.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not centrally available.

Kidney Transplants

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the number of people in Scotland on the waiting list for kidney transplantation in each year from 1975 to the present.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not centrally available.

Housing

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last held talks with representatives of Scottish tenants' associations, housing co-operatives, Scottish housing associations and local authorities in order to discuss housing in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Both my right hon. and learned Friend and I have frequent discussions and informal meetings with a wide range of bodies involved in housing. Last month we met representatives of SSHA tenants and earlier this month I, myself, held meetings with COSLA and representatives of the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations to discuss housing matters. I have also visited a number of housing co-operatives, housing associations and local authorities.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instruct local authorities to prepare estimates of the required housebuilding programme for warden-serviced sheltered housing for the elderly between 1988 and 1993.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that health boards, housing authorities and social work departments make adequate provision for the provision of housing in the community for people who are mentally handicapped, mentally ill, elderly or disabled.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provision of housing for these groups is a matter for the agencies concerned having regard to their own assessments of local needs and priorities and available finance. For their part the Government have increased the general allocations of money available to local authorities and to health boards. In addition specific funding for housing for the disabled is made available to the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the total new housebuilding starts by Scottish councils in each year from 1977 to 1987;

(2) if he will give the total new housebuilding starts by Scottish housing associations in each year from 1977 to 1987;

(3) if he will give the average house prices in Scotland in each year from 1977 to 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested for the years 1977 to 1986 was published in "Scottish Housing Statistics 1986" which is available in the House Library. Details for 1987 are not yet available.

Private Rented Houses

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the percentage of houses privately rented in Edinburgh in each year from 1977 to 1987;

(2) if he will give the number of private rented houses in Edinburgh in each year from 1977 to 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the percentage of houses privately rented in Scotland in each year from 1977 to 1987;

(2) if he will give the number of private rented houses in Scotland in each year from 1977 to 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested for the years 1977 to 1986 is published in "Housing and Construction Statistics" which is available in the House Library. Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

House Prices

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average house prices in Scotland in each year from 1977 to 1987, repriced for inflation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Householders

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what proportion of the population in Scotland are single adult householders;

(2) what proportion of single adult householders in Scotland are over the age of 60 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information was published in SDD statistical bulletin No. 23, July 1986, entitled "Scottish Household Projections: 1983 based." A copy is available from the House Library.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of single adult householders will pay (i) full rates, (ii) partial rates and (iii) no rates in the financial year 1987-88; and if he will list similar figures for the last 10 years.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the form requested.

Council Housing

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage of housing in each of the regions of Scotland which is council housing and the percentage of the capital allocation for council housing which is allocated to the districts in each of the regions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The percentage of housing in each region that is council housing is given column A of the following table and the percentage of the aggregate Scottish HRA capital allocations for 1987-88 made to the districts in each region is in column B.

Region or Islands Area	[1]Column A	Column B

Fair Rents

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the average registered fair rents of unfurnished let properties in each year from 1977 to 1987 in Edinburgh;

(2) if he will give the average registered fair rents of furnished let properties in each year from 1977 to 1987 in Edinburgh;

(3) if he will give the average registered fair rents of housing association properties in each year from 1977 to 1987 in Edinburgh.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The figures in the categories are not kept separately for the city of Edinburgh and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the average registered fair rents of furnished let properties in each year from 1977 to 1987 in Scotland;

(2) if he will give the average registered fair rents of housing association properties in each year from 1977 to 1987 in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested can be obtained for the years 1977 to 1986 from the Table on page 37 of "Scottish Housing Statistics 1986", copies of which are in the Library. The information for 1987 is not yet available.

Rents

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the average rent rise over the previous year for council houses in Scotland in each year from 1977 to 1987;

(2) if he will give the average rent rise over the previous year for council houses in Edinburgh in each year from 1977 to 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the following table:

Housing Statistics

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total of new housebuilding starts for private sale in each year from 1977 to 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on houses built for sale is not available centrally. Details of house building starts for the years 1977 to 1986 was published in "Scottish Housing Statistics 1986" which is available in the House Library. Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses have been started in the public and private section in Greenock and Port Glasgow and Strathclyde as a whole in the years 1979-1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested for Greenock and Port Glasgow in not held centrally. Numbers of public and private sector housing starts for Strathclyde were published in "Scottish Housing Statistics" which is available in the House Library.

Housing Investment

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the housing investment allocations made to all housing authorities in Scotland for each of the years 1978-79 to 1987-88 at 1987-88 constant prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown).

Housing Capital

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on what principle basis he allocates capital for housing to each of the Scottish district councils.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Allocations are made on an assessment of councils' own programmes to tackle evident needs, within resources available, taking account of councils' housing plans and capital programmes and other information available.

Education Reform

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many responses he has received from parents, schools councils, regional councils and other organisations to his consultation paper "School Management and the Role of Parents".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The consultation is still running; I have not yet made a complete analysis of the responses.

Schoolchildren

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it one of his priorities to encourage the interest of schoolchildren, and young Scots in general, in the learning of science, arts, music, history and of the technical professions.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend's aim is to ensure that young people have the opportunity to study these and other subjects as part of a balanced curriculum, which will equip them for adult life.

Young People

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what specific projects he proposed in order to provide for the training, job creation, sport and cultural recreation of Scottish young people to discourage migration south of the border and to ameliorate its effects.

Mr. Lang: The Government have introduced a wide range of measures to improve and expand training provision and strengthen the employment prospects of young people in Scotland. With the guarantee of a YTS place for all 16 and 17-year-olds no one under 18 need be unemployed. Other measures include the new job training scheme which is primarily geared to the training needs of young people between the ages of 18 and 25; the expansion of the number of places available under the enterprise allowance scheme and the support to employers through the new workers scheme.

We channel aid for sport through the Scottish Sports Council which will receive £4·7 million in the current financial year including provision for promotional work to increase levels of participation, particularly among the 13 to 24-year-old age group. We promote cultural activities through the Scottish Arts Council, which will receive £14·1 million in the current financial year and through a range of organisations some of which, like the Scottish Youth Theatre and the National Youth Orchestra of Scotland, are particularly for young people.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek advice from experts, specialised bodies, trade unions, churches and others in order to establish an all-party and Scottish approach to the problems of migration of young Scots to the south and abroad.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it a priority to give practical support to the efforts of scientific, artistic, musical and sporting organisations to attract, train and occupy young people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government support many organisations in all fields making efforts to attract, train and occupy young people.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to support a research programme for the building of low cost, durable, publicly owned homes, with basic amenities, shopping and recreational facilities, for single young people.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Guidance on housing for young and other single people was published three years ago in the Scottish Housing Handbook No. 7 "Housing for Single People, Shared Accommodation and Hostels". That guidance was based upon Scottish Office research. In addition, a research report "Housing Conversion to meet changing Needs in the Public Sector", issued by the Building Directorate of the Scottish Office in July, described alternatives to new building, including discussion and examples of provision for single people through adaptation.

I have no plans at this time for further research into this type of housing.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has had talks with the regional and local authorities in Scotland in order to co-ordinate a programme for cultural, educational and scientific activities of Scottish young people in the next four years, aimed at providing them with positive alternatives to drug abuse, hooliganism and at alleviating the impact of unemployment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Youth Training Schemes

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in (a) the Dundee, East constituency and (b) the Dundee travel-to-work area are on YTS schemes at the latest available date.

Mr. Lang: Youth training scheme figures are not available on either a constituency or travel-to-work area basis. In Dundee local authority district 1,555 young people were participating in youth training schemes at 23 October 1987.

YTS

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in the Dundee, West constituency are on YTS schemes at the latest available date.

Mr. Lang: YTS figures are not available on a constituency basis. In Dundee local authority district 1,555 young people were participating in YTS at 23 October 1987.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many pupils from Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley have obtained places in higher or further education in each year since 1979; and if he will express that number as a percentage of the age group for each year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not readily available.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what efforts he is making in order to attract European Community support for the Scottish higher education system.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Educational establishments in Scotland have been successful in attracting funds in the first round of the European programme for co-operation between education and industry in training for technology —COMETT—and I look forward to significant further funds in the next round.

I have ensured that all establishments of higher education in Scotland will be fully informed of the opportunities in the new programme to encourage mobility for students within the European Community — ERASMUS — and they have been invited by the ERASMUS bureau of the European Community to make application for inclusion of their courses in the scheme.

The European Community also offers funds in a range of research and development programmes, in which Scottish educational establishments have been actively encouraged to participate.

I shall continue to seek to attract European Community support for higher education in Scotland in these programmes and in further European Community initiatives which may be relevant.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Cunninghame, South can be obtained from Strathclyde regional council.

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the pupil to teacher ratios for Glasgow and Strathclyde, respectively, for primary and secondary schools, respectively, in each year since 1979 and list alongside them the pupil to teacher ratios he assumed for each year in his calculation of relevant expenditure for rate support grant purposes.

Mr. Rifkind: Actual pupil-teacher ratios for primary and secondary schools in Glasgow division and Strathclyde region are published in the Scottish Education Department's annual statistical bulletin "Pupils and Teachers in Education Authority Primary and Secondary Schools", copies of which are available in the Library.

No assumption is made about pupil-teacher ratios for the purpose of determining relevant expenditure for rate support grant.

Mr. Buchan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total numbers of pupils on school rolls and the pupil to teacher ratio in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in the Paisley, South constituency for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Paisley, South can be obtained from Strathclyde regional council.

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total numbers of pupils on school rolls and the pupil to teacher ratio in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Livingston for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Livingston can be obtained from Lothian regional council.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total numbers of pupils on school rolls and the pupil-to-teacher ratio in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in Greenock and Port Glasgow for each year since 1980.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Greenock and Port Glasgow can be obtained from Strathclyde regional council.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils in Greenock and Port Glasgow have obtained places in higher and further education in each year since 1979; and if he will express that number as a percentage of the age group for each year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not readily available.

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total numbers of pupils on school rolls and the pupil to teacher ration in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in Renfrew district for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Renfrew district can be obtained from Strathclyde regional council.

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of pupils in the Renfrew division of Strathclyde regional council who are currently at secondary school; and what is the pupil to teacher ratio in the Renfrew division.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest available information is contained in Statistical Bulletin No 4/B1/1987, a copy of which was sent to the hon. Member. A copy is also held in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total numbers of pupils on school rolls and the pupil to teacher ratio in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in the constituency of Renfrewshire, West and Inverclyde for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Renfrewshire, West and Inverclyde can be obtained from Strathclyde regional council.

School Meals

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average price of a school meal charged by each of the education authorities.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table.

Region	Charge for a fixed price meal
	Primary Pence	Secondary Pence	Primary and Secondary Pence
Borders	—	—	50

Child Care

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the terms of reference of the special review body inquiring into the legal aspects of child care in Scotland under the auspices of the social work services group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The review body's terms of reference, which were announced in the press last August, are as follows:

> "1. To identify, in the light of developments since the implementation of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, options for change and improvement in child care law which would simplify and improve arrangements for protecting children at risk and care for children and families in need.
>
> 2. To assess the resource implications of any proposals for amendment of the law.
>
> 3. To report to the Secretary of State."

The review body will be invited to complete its work within two years. Its membership will be drawn from a wide range of individuals with a contribution to offer and will be led by the Social Work Services Group.

Child Abuse

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what extra resources his Department is making available to deal with the problems of child abuse.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In addition to paying rate support grant to regional and islands councils, whose social work responsibilities extend to child welfare, the Scottish Office provides substantial financial support for research into various aspects of child abuse, for voluntary organisations such as the Royal Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and for the Overnewton child sexual abuse project in Glasgow.

Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of people to date, in each local authority district prosecuted under section 48 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Her Majesty's Inspectors of Education

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance his Department issues to Her Majesty's inspectors of education as to whether they should comment on whether the local authority allocates enough resources to the school.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Auctioneers

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to make the registration of auctioneers obligatory.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Fishery Protection Vessel

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to give approval for the ordering of a new fishery protection vessel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As the introduction of the new Norna at the beginning of 1988 will complete the current modernisation programme, the question of approving an order for a new fishery protection vessel does not arise.

Inshore Fishing (Loch Ryan)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to amend the regulation concerning Loch Ryan under the terms of the Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Act 1984.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so at present but the matter will be considered during the review of the inshore fishing regime next year.

Alcohol Addiction

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money was spent on reseach projects on alcohol addiction by the Home and Health Department in the years 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 5 February, column 745. The figure for 1986-87 is £13,597.

Violent Crime

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of crimes of violence against the person in Scotland (a) in the 12 months ended April 1981 and (b) in the most recent 12 months for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The figures are as follows:

May 1980 to April 1981: 9,050
July 1986 to June 1987: 14,110

For the purpose of this reply, the terms 'crimes of violence against the person' is taken to include all non-sexual crimes of violence — group 1 of the standard classification — apart from robbery, those crimes of indecency—group 2—which contain a violent element, and certain crimes involving malicious and reckless conduct.

Mental Illness Hospitals

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients were resident in mental illness hospitals in Scotland in each year from 1980 to 1986 and in the first six months of 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At 31 December 1986 there were 14,901 residents in mental illness hospitals in Scotland. Comparable data for 1980-85 are given in "Scottish Health Statistics," copies of which are in the Library. Information for 1987 is not yet available.

Enterprise Zone (Greenock and Port Glasgow)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received regarding the possibility of creating an enterprise zone in Greenock or Port Glasgow.

Mr. Lang: The only recent representations have been from Inverclyde district council. The case for an enterprise zone remains under consideration but, as my right hon. and learned Friend has indicated to the district council, no decision can be taken until the findings on the current evaluation of the enterprise zone experiment have been fully considered.

Gynaecological Operations

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by health district the number of gynaecological operations waiting to be performed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of persons waiting for in-patient hospital treatment — not necessarily operations—in the specialty of gynaecology is given for each health board at 31 March 1987 in the following table. The figures are provisional.

	Number
Argyll and Clyde	758
Ayrshire and Arran	591
Borders	27
Dumfries and Galloway	567
Fife	442
Forth Valley	378
Grampian	1,564

Highland	410
Lanarkshire	394
Lothian	1,208
Orkney	0
Shetland	0
Tayside	192
Western Isles	24
Scotland	8,219

Health Authorities (Review of Priorities)

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Scottish health authorities' review of priorities for the eighties and nineties will be published.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This report was prepared by a working group set up by the Scottish Health Service Planning Council and is a working document at present under consideration by the planning council which is collecting views about its recommendations from the organisations from which council members are drawn. The council has sent out over 1,000 copies of the report to all health board members and senior officials, the Common Services Agency, Scottish Home and Health Department, the universities with medical faculties, the chief scientist and the Association of Scottish Local Health Councils and to all members of the national consultative committees and their sub-committees. Arrangements have been made to place copies in the Library of the House.

Legal Aid Regulations

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to amend the Criminal Legal Aid Regulations so far as to remove those provisions which at present prevent an accused person from obtaining assistance at any subsequent diet when he has pleaded guilty without professional help, with the result that a person who has previously been sentenced to imprisonment and is at risk of having this liberty is totally disqualified from being represented under legal aid.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is one of several aspects of the legal aid regime on which I have received representations. I hope to reach a view on all the proposals made to me before the end of the year.

Skoal Bandits

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take at the expiry on 31 December of the agreement with United States Tobacco International Inc. with regard to the manufacture and sale of Skoal Bandits.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government are currently considering the existing voluntary agreement on the promotion of Skoal Bandits. Negotiations have taken place between officials of the Department of Health and Social Security and the company about revising the agreement, but matters have not yet been concluded.

Prisoners

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current population in each of Scotland's prisons, young offenders' institutions and other detention centres; in each case how many of these prisoners are on remand; and what is the capacity of each institution.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 20 October 1987 the position was as follows:

	Total population	Of which: remand	Capacity
Prisons
Aberdeen	163	34	151
Barlinnie	1,069	366	983

Ministerial Engagements (Members' Attendance)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his policy regarding attendance by hon. Members at ministerial engagements in their constituencies;

(2) what constituencies he and his junior Ministers have visited in the past year; and on which occasions the local hon. Member was invited to attend;

(3) what is his practice regarding the arrangements for notifying hon. Members that he or one of his Ministers is to visit their constituency; and what period of notice is normally given.

Mr. Rifkind: My ministerial colleagues and I aim to visit all parts of Scotland as regularly as opportunities arise and other ministerial commitments permit. Attendance at ministerial engagements, wherever they take place, is a matter for Ministers and their hosts. Hon. Members are however normally informed, and are given reasonable notice, whenever Ministers are attending public engagements within their constituencies.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the estimated increased public spending in Scotland as a result of the demands for accommodation for old-age pensioners for 1988 to 1991.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Retirement Pensioners

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated number of retirement pensioners who, during the years 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991, will require accommodation provisions paid from public funds in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new retirement pensioners in Scotland required places in specialised homes provided by the National Health Service, for each year since 1975.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available centrally.

Hospital Building

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many National Health Service hospitals have been built and put into operation in Scotland for each year since 1980.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Details of all hospital developments are not held centrally, as minor capital projects are detailed to health boards. The information for major capital projects is as follows:

Year	Number of hospitals
1980	10
1981	6
1982	5
1983	10
1984	6
1985	4
1986	4
[1]1987	4

NHS (Hamilton)

Mr. Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1979 (a) the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in the Hamilton constituency and (b) the number of National Health Service staff in terms of full-time equivalents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally on a constituency basis.

Medical Teaching and Training

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last discussed with the British Medical Association Scottish universities teaching medical staff the requirements and functioning of medical teaching and training in the light of the new demands of primary care and patient treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no meetings with the British Medical Association or representatives of the Scottish universities to discuss teaching and training. From time to time, he has informal meetings with representatives of these bodies at which many subjects are discussed and officials of my Department meet regularly postgraduate medical deans to discuss matters of mutual interest.

The undergraduate curriculum in medical schools is a matter for the universities to determine taking account of guidance issued from time to time by the General Medical Council. The Joint Committee on Postgraduate Training for General Practitioners has a similar responsibility for the standards of postgraduate training and these bodies will be well aware of the demands facing the medical profession.

Students

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students from countries other than Great Britain there are in Scottish universities and polytechnics.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no polytechnics in Scotland: the nearest equivalents are the central institutions. In 1985-86 the numbers of students, including postgraduates, from countries other than Great Britain who attended Scottish universities and central institutions were 5,580 and 1,180 respectively.

Medical Staff (Glasgow)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of new full-time medical staff serving the medical needs of the population of Glasgow for each year since 1975.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Ward Closures

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many National Health Service hospital wards closed either permanently or temporarily in Scotland during 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986;

(2) how many National Health Service hospital wards have been closed in Scotland, for each year since 1975, either temporarily or permanently due to (a) shortage of medical staff, (b) shortage of deficient equipment, or (c) lack of funds.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Operational management of hospitals is a matter for individual health boards. Whilst from time to time we become aware of temporary bed or ward closures which may occur for a variety of reasons, there is no central record which is either comprehensive or detailed.

Scottish Assembly

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy urgently to publish a consultative paper regarding a Scottish assembly.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Grampian Region (Specialist Treatment)

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what areas of specialist medicine or surgery require to be provided for residents of Grampian outwith the area of Grampian health board; how many patients have had to be so treated for each of the years since 1979; what has been the average waiting time for each specialty; and what plans he has to remedy the situation to provide adequate treatment within the area of Grampian health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The areas of specialist medicine or surgery in which Grampian residents are treated outwith Grampian health board area are cardiac surgery, orthopaedic surgery, neuro surgery and spina paralysis.

The statistical information requested is as follows:

Cardiac Surgery
(Figures available in this category from 1981)

	Number of operations	Average waiting time (in weeks) for operations Glasgow
1981	36	15
1982	26	19
1983	11	19
1984	74	17
1985	30	11
1986	112	21
1987[1]	101	23

Other specialties

	Orthopaedics	Neuro surgery	Spinal paralysis
1979	843	46	—
1980	843	49	—
1981	876	43	—
1982	846	25	—
1983	1030	32	7
1984	1106	28	15
1985[1]	1137	10	6

[1] Latest available figures.

The figures relate to patients treated in each specialty outwith Grampian. Orthopaedic patients are treated in Stracathro hospital, Tayside by Grampian surgeons. Waiting list figures are not available for these specialties.

As the hon. Gentleman is aware, there is at present a committee examining cardiac surgery in Scotland. With regard to the other specialties, it is a matter for individual boards to decide on the level of service necessary taking account of the number of patients requiring treatment. I understand, however, that Grampian health board has long-term plans to provide accommodation in Grampian for its orthopaedic patients presently treated in Stracathro hospital, Brechin.

Aberdeen, North (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland which Ministers at his Department have visited the constituency of Aberdeen, North on how many occasions and for what purpose since 1979; and when such visits took place.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is not readily available.

Grampian Regional Council (Social Work Department)

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to privatise the services of the social work department of Grampian regional council.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans.

Scottish Homes (Government's Proposals)

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the number of responses he has received on the Government's proposals on Scottish Homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my answer today to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown).

Sheltered Accommodation

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of people in sheltered accommodation in each local authority district.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Sexual Assault

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to implement the recommendations of the Scottish Home and Health Department's report on prosecuting sexual assault.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. and learned Friend has today given to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Wray).

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the organisations that have sent him comments on the Scottish Home and Health Department's report "Prosecuting Sexual Assaults" and if he intends to implement the recommendations in the report.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking, following publication of the Scottish Home and Health Department's report "Prosecuting Sexual Assault"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have to date received comments from the rape crisis centres for Edinburgh and Strathclyde on the Scottish Office social research study "Prosecuting Sexual Assault". The report did not contain formal recommendations but a number of changes in procedures relating to the prosecution of alleged sexual assaults have been taken in the light of the conclusions of the study. In particular, restrictions on evidence at trials of rape and other sexual offences have been introduced by the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1985. The effects of these changes are now being monitored as part of an independent research study funded by my Department.

Dogs

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to deal with the problems of stray dogs and canine fouling of public places.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 13 March 1987, at column 334 and on 24 April 1987, at column 705.

A74

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what date he estimates that work will start on bringing up to motorway standards all the remaining stretches of the A74 between Glasgow and Carlisle; and by what date he estimates that this work will be completed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The timetable for upgrading of the A74 to motorway will depend on the outcome of feasibility studies that are under way, and on the time taken to complete any necessary statutory procedures.

Forfar Bypass

Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the up-to-date position on the Forfar bypass.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have already implemented a number of adjustments to the signing and road markings at the junctions which should greatly assist drivers and, as a result of discussions with the Tayside police, who have monitored the situation since the opening of the bypass, I have now decided to provide deceleration lanes at both of the staggered junctions. It is hoped that this work will be completed by Christmas.

M80 Motorway

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the line of the proposed M80 motorway between Stepps and Haggs; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Detailed consideration of alternative viable routes is continuing, but it will be some time before a decision on a preferred route can be made.

Building Agency

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to devote central Government funds to creating a building agency similar to the English Estates Agency funded by the Department of Trade and Industry in England.

Mr. Lang: No. the Scottish Development Agency already performs the same function in Scotland as does English Estates in England.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will be seeking funds from central Government for a crime prevention campaign in Glasgow similar to that recently funded by the Home Department in London for the Metropolitan police campaign.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In common with the rest of Scotland, Glasgow already benefits from the substantial contribution which the Government make towards crime prevention through, for example, the 51 per cent. specific grant on police expenditure, the community programme national crime prevention initiative and the urban programme. In addition, the Government have allocated £250,000 to crime prevention publicity measures in Scotland in the current financial year.

Green Belt (Edinburgh)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review his decision of February 1985 to force the incorporation of 2,300 more private housing units on green-belt and green infill sites in and around Edinburgh.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no such decision. He approved in February 1986 the revised Lothian region structure plan. One of the policies in the plan requires the City of Edinburgh district council to identify sites for a further 2,300 houses to be available after 1991. Where these sites are found is essentially a matter for the district council. It is the responsibility of the regional council to monitor the implementation of the plan and bring forward alterations.

Royal Edinburgh Hospital

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will intervene to resolve the staffing shortage at the Royal Edinburgh hospital and provide the health board with the funding necessary to maintain the welfare of patients.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The staffing of the Royal Edinburgh hospital is a matter for the Lothian health board, which is among the best funded health authorities in Great Britain.

Multiple Tenancies

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek to introduce legislation to enable local councils more effectively to prevent the undesirable proliferation of multiple tenancies in tenements.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no plans to do so.

Anti-Dampness Measures

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make provision for local authorities to undertake effective anti-dampness measures in houses.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for the local authorities themselves to decide what measures to take to combat dampness in their housing stocks and what proportion of the resources available to them to spend on the problem. In deciding on levels of capital allocations for next year, we will again pay particular attention to authorities' plans to deal with dampness.

System-built Housing

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make provision for local authorities to tackle Orlit and similar system-build defects.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is one of the types of work that local authorities tackle, according to their own priorities, from within the unhypothecated capital allocations made available to them.

Schools (Charges)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he plans to introduce charges for certain subjects into Scottish schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have no plans to change the present arrangements in Scotland which seem to be generally well understood and to work satisfactorily.

Arthritis

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the number of specialist units in Scotland available for the treatment of children suffering from serious arthritis.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Current practice and policy is to treat children suffering from arthritis in facilities specifically designed for children and not in specialist arthritis units.

Schools (Sport)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what inquiries are currently being undertaken by his Department concerning the promotion of sport in schools.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have encouraged the Scottish Sports Council to promote new sporting opportunities for school children and to give a new impetus to competitive sport. I hope the seminar on this subject which they are organising on 28 October will be well supported and followed through by education and sporting bodies.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he has made for liaison between his Department, the education authorities and the Scottish Sports Council for the promotion of sport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Promoting sport is primarily a matter for the Scottish Sports Council. Arrangements for liaison between the Scottish Office, the Council and the many other bodies concerned with sport, including the education authorities, are kept under continual review.

Social Work Departments

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements exist for consultation between local authority social work departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My officials are regularly in touch with Social Work Directors and their Departments but arrangements for consultation between local authorities are not a matter for my right hon. Friend.

Scottish Tourist Board

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the decision by the Scottish Tourist Board to give financial assistance to the redevelopment of Butlins holiday centre at Ayr was subject to ministerial approval; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Ministerial approval was given to the Scottish tourist board's financial assistance of £1·2 million to the re-development of the Butlin's site at the Heads of Ayr. Investment decisions of this scale demonstrate growing confidence in the tourism industry in Scotland. The private sector commitment is essential if such developments are to proceed. The government is pleased to be able to bring such projects—with clear economic benefits—to fruition with financial support through the Scottish tourist board.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of the Scottish Tourist Board; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the Chairman of the Scottish tourist board at Scotland's travel fair on 6 May. My noble Friend the Minister of State regularly meets the chairman to discuss tourism policy and strategic issues of importance to the industry.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the members of the Scottish Tourist Board, stating the date of their original appointment, the date of their present appointment and when their current term of office expires.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

Name	Date of first appointment	Date of present appointment	Term of office expires
A. R. Devereux (Chairman)	1 March 1980	1 March 1985	28 February 1990
R. D. Cramond (Member)	1 January 1985	1 January 1985	31 March 1988
Mrs. S. G. Bell (Member)	1 October 1983	1 October 1986	30 September 1989
J. B. B. Stewart (Member)	5 November 1985	5 November 1985	4 November 1988
D. Kinloch Anderson (Member)	1 October 1986	1 October 1986	30 September 1989
N. Renfrew (Member)	1 October 1986	1 October 1986	30 September 1989

The board normally consists of a chairman and six members. The current vacancy will be filled shortly.

Health Boards

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he has for consulting with the chairpersons of health boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I meet all health board chairmen together three times a year. I meet individual chairmen at other times to discuss particular issues.

School Boards

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether the cost of preparing, printing and distributing 800,000 leaflets, dealing with Her Majesty's Government's proposals for school boards will be borne wholly by his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the total cost of preparing, printing and distributing 800,000 leaflets dealing with Her Majesty's Government's proposals for school boards in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total cost of printing and distribution was £23,225. This will be met from Scottish Office votes.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children are receiving free school meals in each of the education authorities in Scotland, expressed as a percentage of the total number of children taking school meals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information taken from the annual census of school meals undertaken in January 1987 is set out in the table.

Number of Children receiving free meals as a percentage of the total number of children taking school meals

Civil Service

Mr. Ingram asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of Civil Service posts, by constituency and by Department, listed by grade and sex in each of the years since 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is not available in the form requested.

Rented Accommodation

Mr. Ingram asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of tenants living in public sector rented accommodation in the constituency of East Kilbride in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally by constituency area.

Rosyth Bypass

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of the Rosyth bypass.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A study of the route options has been completed and a preferred line for the proposed bypass has been identified. It is hoped that draft orders will be published early in 1988.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received on Scottish Homes; and if he will list the organisations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We have received 247 responses to the consultation paper "Scottish Homes—A New Agency for Housing in Scotland" from organisations. The organisations are listed as follows. In addition, a number of letters referring wholly or partly to Scottish Homes have been received from individuals but these have not generally offered any comment on the substance of the proposals contained in the consultation document.

Electronics Industry

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons are employed in the electronics industry in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Total employment in the electronics industry in Scotland in 1986 is provisionally estimated to be some 42,600. The estimates are derived from the regional data system.

Jordanhill College of Education

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the report of the feasibility study into the use of Jordanhill college of education to accommodate paramedical courses.

Mr. Rifkind: Copies of the report are available from the Scottish Education Department on request.

Education (Consultative Document)

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the organisations which have so far commented on his recent consultative document on school boards as being in favour of the proposed ceiling lowers and those who have opposed the proposal ceiling lowers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The consultation is still running; I have not yet made a complete analysis of the responses.

X-ray Equipment

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department last conducted a survey of safety standards of National Health Service X-ray equipment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: X-ray equipment in use in the Scottish Health Service is subjected to regular maintenance and safety checks under maintenance agreements made by health boards. In addition, the equipment is subject to regular inspections by the board's radiation protection adviser to check radiation output levels and radiation safety aspects.

Community Care

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received on community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Community care is an important issue on which my right hon. and learned Friend receives from time to time representations from a range of interests including Members of Parliament, statutory agencies, voluntary organisations and members of the public. We have consistently made it clear that we are committed to promoting a policy of care in the community for such groups as the mentally and physically handicapped, the mentally ill and the elderly.

Woodilee Hospital

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement reporting the proposals for a new build policy at Woodilee hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My Department is currently considering proposals submitted by the Greater Glasgow health board.

Leukaemia

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the incidence of leukaemia as reported by each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about the number of cases of leukaemia occurring each year in Scotland and the incidence of the condition is contained in "Scottish Health Statistics" which is published annually by the information services division of the common services agency of the Scottish Health Service. A copy is available in the Library.

Springburn Job Initiative

Mr. Michael J. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he estimates that the Springburn job initiative will begin.

Mr. Lang: STRIDE, the job-creation enterprise set-up by British Rail, is already in operation and discussions on a wider economic initiative involving the Scottish Development Agency, local authorities and other local interests continue. The agency shares our wish to see the initiative launched as soon as possible, but this depends on agreement being reached on a programme of action and the necessary administrative arrangements.

STRIDE

Mr. Michael J. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what Government funds have been made available to STRIDE in order to re-employ redundant railway workers.

Mr. Lang: None. STRIDE is funded solely by British Rail.

Nursery Education

Mr. Michael J. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the level of nursery school education in Glasgow, Springburn and on what steps he intends to take in increasing nursery school places.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Statute affords regional and islands councils discretion over the level and form of nursery education provided in their areas. I am not disposed to intervene in this matter.

Job Creation

Mr. Michael J. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take to improve job opportunities for under 25s in Glasgow, Springburn.

Mr. Lang: We shall continue with our successful policies of keeping inflation down, stimulating enterprise, sustaining competitiveness in industry and strengthening the private sector, which are the key to creating a stronger economy and reducing unemployment in Springburn as elsewhere. The youth training scheme for 16 and 17-year-olds, the new job training scheme aimed primarily at 18 to 25-year-olds together with the expansion of places available under the enterprise allowance scheme and the assistance to employers through the new workers scheme will all help young people into employment.

Council Housing (Glasgow)

Mr. Michael J. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance he is giving to Glasgow district council in order to enable it to improve the housing stock.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Glasgow district council has received capital allocations in the current financial year of £85·65 million for expenditure on its own housing stock and £53 million for expenditure on housing in the private sector. Furthermore, the council will augment its mainstream expenditure on housing projects by an additional £140 million over the next three to four years through the use of a covenant scheme facility which we made available last year.

Community Programmes (Fraud)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of (a) persons proceeded against and (b) convictions in Scotland since 1984 for offences relating to the fraudulent misuse of misappropriation of moneys advanced by the Manpower Services Commission in connection with community programmes.

Mr. Lang: I understand from the Manpower Services Commission that, according to its central records, there is no record of a case in Scotland resulting in prosecution or conviction since 1984.

Inverclyde Initiative

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is able to estimate the number of full-time jobs, or full-time equivalents, created by the Inverclyde initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: It is not possible to estimate the number of jobs created directly by the Inverclyde initiative. I am satisfied that the initiative is making sound progress and that major projects in prospect, such as the Customs House quay development, will significantly increase employment prospects in the area.

Manufacturing Investment

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate for the percentage fall in the real value of manufacturing investment in Scotland between 1980 and 1985.

Mr. Lang: The percentage fall in the real value of net capital expenditure by manufacturing industry in Scotland between 1980 and 1985 is estimated to have been 2·5 per cent.

Private Medicine

Dr. Reid asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospitals, exclusively for the practice of private medicine, have been built since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Two private hospital developments have been notified to the Secretary of State since 1979, one in 1981 and one in 1982.

House Building

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total new house building starts for private sale in each year from 1977 to 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on houses built for sale is not available centrally. Details of housebuilding starts for the years 1977 to 1986 was published in "Scottish Housing Statistics 1986" which is available in the House Library. Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Contraception

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many and which contraceptives are listed on the drug tariff for general medical practitioners.

Mr. Newton: There are currently 35 contraceptive drugs which can be dispensed free of charge. These are listed in part XVI of the drug tariff. In addition, there is a range of contraceptive appliances set out in part IXA of the tariff. A copy of the tariff is available in the Library.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many general practitioners in England hold the Joint Committee on Contraception certificate in family planning;

(2) how many and what percentage of general practitioners have formal training which would equip them to insert intra-uterine devices.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not held centrally. Advice from the Joint Committee on Contraception indicates that up to 16 October 1987 a total of about 22,500 certificates had been issued to doctors in the United Kingdom. It is not possible to be more specific.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the breakdown of numbers of individuals receiving contraceptive advice and treatment (1) by contraceptive method and (2) by source of treatment clinic or general practitioners in England for the years 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Newton: The available information is contained in the tables. A detailed analysis of contraceptive services provided by general medical practitioners is not held centrally.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals exist for general practitioners to prescribe condoms as part of the AIDS prevention campaign.

Mr. Newton: We have no such proposals.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy on National Health Service family planning clinics making a charge for condoms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Our guidance to health authorities in DHSS circular HSC(1S)32 states that there should be no charge for contraceptive supplies which are prescribed and dispensed, but that in cases where a patient does not wish to consult the doctor, supplies of non-medical methods should be available on sale at clinics. Our advice is that the charge should reflect the purchase price paid by the health authority plus 10 per cent. for handling expenses, and VAT.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the provision of free National Health Service contraceptive advice, treatment and supplies; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he intends to impose a prescription charge for contraceptive supplies provided by the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Contraceptive services are available free of charge as part of the National Health Service and we have no plans to change the present arrangements.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average annual cost per person to the National Health Service of providing (a) the oral contraceptive, and (b) the intra-uterine device through (i) National Health Service family planning clinics, and (ii) general medical practitioner.

Mr. Newton: Information is not available in the form requested. For all health authority family planning services the average annual cost per person is £21·30.

For general medical practitioner services the average annual costs per person, excluding pharmacists costs, which are not available, are as follows:

Intra uterine device—£39·40
Other contraceptives—£16·50

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many condoms have been distributed through National Health Service family planning clinics in each of the last five years.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Births (Costs)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost to the public sector of the average birth.

Mrs. Currie: The estimated gross current health and personal social services expenditure per birth in 1985-86 was around £1,220.

Family Planning Services

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total annual cost of National Health Service family planning services for each of the years 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Newton: The expenditure on family planning provided through the community health services and general medical practitioners (fees and drugs) for England for each of the years 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 is as follows:

Expenditure on Family Planning Services—England

	£ million
1982-83	59
1983-84	66
1984-85	71
1985-86	76

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many and which district health authorities provide designated young people's birth control advisory sessions in England.

Mr. Newton: I regret that we do not collect this information centrally.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how many doctors' sessions Brook Advisory Centres has held in each of its centres in each of the last five years: and what is the estimate for the number of doctors' sessions for the coming financial year.

Mr. Newton: Brook Advisory Centres' annual reports record that the number of doctors' sessions in each of their centres in each of the last 5 calendar years was as follows:

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986

[1] Opened June 1986.

We have no estimate of the numbers for 1987 and 1988.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of family planning clinics and family planning clinic sessions in each regional health authority in England for the last five years.

Mr. Newton: The available information is given in the tables.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department is taking to ensure adequate financial provision for the continuation of family planning clinics in view of the important role family planning clinics play in prevention of AIDS.

Mr. Newton: The allocation of funds for local family planning services is a matter for individual health authorities, subject to the defined consultation procedures if substantial variations in services are proposed. Authorities will be aware of the implications of AIDS for family planning services, for example through the provisional guidance prepared by the Family Planning Association and the National Association of Family Planning Doctors.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many and which regional health authorities in England include young people's birth control advisory services as a priority in their strategic plans.

Mr. Newton: The hon. Member may wish to approach regional health authorities direct about their policies towards these services as their strategic plans do not deal with such matters in detail.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the degree of choice to be offered in National Health Service family planning provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Our policy is that people should be free to choose their source of family planning advice. The detailed arrangements for the provision of health authority family planning services is a matter for individual health authorities. DHSS guidance on family planning services recommends that a choice of sources of advice and provisions should be available and that people should be free to change from one source to another and to attend clinics outside the geographic area of the health authority if they wish.

Women wishing to receive contraceptive services from a general medical practitioner may apply either to their own doctor or to another who has indicated willingness to accept patients other than their own for this service. The doctor has discretion to accept or decline individual applications.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (1) National Health Services family planning clinics and (2) general practitioner health centres are designated as training centres for family planning in England.

Mr. Newton: The following information is recorded by the Joint Committee on Contraception, which is concerned with family planning training for doctors and on which the DHSS is one of six bodies represented. The figures refer to the number of approved premises for family planning training and United Kingdom totals only are available.

	Number
Community and Hospital Clinics	1,035
GP premises	30

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is Government policy on funding for young people's birth control advisory services, including Brook Advisory Centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Health authorities are advised to consider the need for separate facilities for young people but the allocation of funds for such arrangements is a matter for them. We are, also, currently funding three family planning and pregnancy counselling projects for young people under 25 years which it is hoped will identify models of good practice which can be disseminated to the National Health Service. The Department has given grants towards the headquarters administrative costs of Brook advisory centres since 1978 and an application for a renewed grant is currently being considered.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what role National Health Service family planning clinics are playing in the Government's campaign against AIDS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We recognise the relevance and importance of family planning work to the AIDS issue. Family planning staff are well placed to offer advice and guidance to the public, and condoms are available free of charge on prescription in clinics.

We have provided a grant of £7,960 to the Family Planning Association towards the cost of pilot training courses in five health authorities on the AIDS aspects of the work of family planning staff.

The "Handbook of Contraceptive Practice", prepared by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and the Royal College of General Practitioners and issued to family planning doctors and other family planning professionals, is currently being revised to take account of AIDS.

Conception Rates

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the rates of conception (i) inside and (ii) outside marriage, by age of women, in each regional health authority in England in 1985.

Mr. Newton: The table gives the information for England and Wales as a whole. Details of the definitions and methods of estimation used are given in OPCS monitor FMI 87/2. The rates for each regional health authority of England are not available because the annual estimate of the populations by marital status are made only for England and Wales as a whole.

Conception rates to women resident in England and Wales: 1985

Age of mother at conception	Conceptions outside marriage per 1,000 unmarried women	Conceptions inside marriage per 1,000 married women
All ages	60·0	85·0
Under 20	53·8	326·7
20–24	73·7	214·0
25–29	82·8	161·8
30–34	63·6	81·1
35–39	33·0	25·1
40 and over	9·2	5·8

Note: Rates for women of all ages, under 20 and 40 and over are based upon the populations of unmarried and married women aged 15-44, 15-19 and 40-44 respectively.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the rates of conception and resultant maternity or abortion by age of women in 1985 in England.

Mr. Newton: The table gives the information. Details of the definitions and methods of estimation used are given in OPCS monitor FMI 87/2.

Conception rates per 1,000 women resident in England: 1985

Age of mother at conception	All conceptions	Leading to maternities	Leading to abortions under 1967 Act
All ages	74·1	60·7	13·4
Under 20	61·4	40·4	21·0
20-24	121·2	100·4	20·8
25-29	136·2	121·4	14·8
30-34	77·8	67·3	10·5
35-39	26·6	19·7	6·9
40 and over	6·4	3·4	3·0

Rates for women of all ages, under 20 and 40 and over are based on the population of women aged 15-44, 15-19 and 40-44 respectively.

Male Sterilisations

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many male sterilisations have been carried out in (1) National Health Service family planning clinics, and (2) National Health Service hospitals in each of the last five years.

Mr. Newton: The information requested, for the last five available years is as follows:

Numbers of ligation or vasectomy of vas deferens performed in NHS non-psychiatric hospitals and clinics, England, 1981-1985

Year	Number in NHS hospitals (thousands)	Number in NHS family planning clinics (thousands)
1985	45·8	13·3
1984	42·1	14·7
1983	39·9	13·8
1982[1]	28·1	12·7
1981	35·7	13·8

[1] Surgical activity in the NHS was depressed in 1982 due to industrial action.

Female Sterilisations

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many female sterilisations were performed in each regional health authority in England in each of the last five years; how many and what percentage were day cases; how many and what percentage were in conjunction with abortion; how many and what percentage were on medical grounds; and how many and what percentage were carried out (1) on the National Health Service (2) privately, and (3) as agency agreement.

Mr. Newton: I regret I cannot give the hon. Member all the information she seeks. The information so far as it is available centrally, is given in the tables.

Medical Research

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has had talks with his European counterparts aimed at common medical research arrangements to enhance the prospects of scientific advance in treatment to improve the use of funds for such purposes.

Mrs. Currie: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster recently attended the Council of Ministers of the European Communities in Brussels on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

The Council adopted a new framework programme of research and development which makes provision for a programme of medical and health research to include work on AIDS, cancer and preventive medicine. That programme is expected to be approved in the near future.

Retirement Pensioners

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated number of retirement pensioners who will need special care by the National Health Service between 1988 and 1991.

Mrs. Currie: It is not clear what the hon. Member means by the term "special care". If he writes to me with details, I will do my best to respond to him.

NHS (Staff)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is reviewing the economic and financial conditions necessary to keep National Health Service medical staff from emigrating to countries where their pay is higher.

Mr. Newton: Doctors' pay is reviewed annually by the Doctors and Dentists Review Body which takes account of all relevant factors in bringing forward its advice. We are not aware of significant emigration of medical staff, but the evidence is being reviewed by an advisory committee on medical manpower planning.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospital wards had to close for lack of doctors or nurses in 1986; and what were the comparable figures in 1978.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally. The day-to-day management of hospitals is the responsibility of local health authorities.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many private hospitals have been built and put into operation in the London region for each year since 1979;

(2) how many hospitals for the practice of private medicine have been built and put into operation since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not available in the form requested. However, I understand from the Independent Hospitals Association that since 1979 there has been a net increase of 50 private hospitals in England, nine of which are within the area covered by the four Thames regional health authorities. Information for Scotland and Wales is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

NHS (Private Patients)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest figures for the accumulated debt owed to the National Health Service for services given to private patients since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: This information is not collected centrally. However, from the summarised accounts of health authorities in England for 1986-87 (as yet unaudited) we estimate that some £11 million was outstanding at 31 March 1987, the vast majority of which health authorities expect to recover. Departmental guidance, issued in March 1986, should ensure that proper statutory charges are levied and collected.

Hospitals

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many National Health Service hospitals have been built and put into operation since 1975.

Mrs. Currie: Hospitals are normally built in stages, comprising a series of individual building schemes. Information held centrally shows that in England since 1975, 308 National Health Service hospital building schemes, each costing over £1 million, have been completed and brought into operation. National Health Service building elsewhere in the United Kingdom is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

NHS Establishments (Hygiene)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of deficient hygiene were found for each year since 1985 in National Health Service establishments now served by private contractors.

Mr. Newton: Information on any occasional lapses from the National Health Service's normally high standards of hygiene, whether by contractors or by directly employed staff, is not collected centrally.

Hospitals (Cleaning and Maintenance)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available to him on the minimum of personnel needed in each hospital for cleansing and maintenance operations.

Mr. Newton: The staffing levels required for such services are a matter for those responsible for providing them.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what (a) medical and (b) other specialised advice is given to private contractors for the cleaning and maintenance of National Health Service installations and equipment.

Mr. Newton: This is a matter for health authorities who, before awarding contracts, have to satisfy themselves about contractors' competence to meet the detailed specifications set out in tender documents. These specifications include details of any special procedures, requirements or policies which apply to the service under contract.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what penalties are imposed on private contractors in charge of the cleaning and maintenance of National Health Service installations who have been found to provide deficient services.

Mr. Newton: This is a matter for health authorities. Normally when putting such services out to tender an authority will include in the contract documents detailed specifications of the service required of the contractor and the action to be taken should the contractor fail to meet the specifications.

NHS (Doctors)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many new full-time doctors the National Health Service has employed for each year since 1979 to work in hospitals.

Mr. Newton: Information requested is not available centrally in the precise form requested. However, the table sets out numbers of doctors in the pre-registration house officer grade in England. Doctors in this grade are mainly United Kingdom graduates in the course of their first year in medical practice. It is estimated that in addition some 1,200 overseas qualified doctors enter the training grades each year, mainly at senior houe officer and registrar level, for a limited period of postgraduate training.

Numbers of Pre-registration House Officers[1] in post at 30 September: England

Year	Number
1979	2,610
1980	2,564
1981	2,716
1982	2,710
1983	2,826
1984	2,773
1985	2,838
1986	2,813

[1] Includes a small number of overseas-graduated doctors with full or limited registration with the General Medical Council.

Tracheo-oesophageal Fistula

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what financial support his Department will be giving to aid research into the medical condition known as TOF (tracheo-oesophageal fistula) which affects one in 3,000 babies in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: The Department has no plans at present to provide financial support for research into tracheo-oesophageal fistula but is always willing to consider well-founded applications for research grants.

The main Government-funded body carrying out biomedical research in this country however is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science.

Low Income Households

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the 1985 family expenditure survey data on the number of low income households.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 7 July, at column 115.

Abortions

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names, addresses, directors or licensees of each private abortion clinic or agency operating in Britain, together with the number of beds available in each.

Mr. Newton: Places in England approved under the Abortion Act, the proprietors and numbers of approved beds are shown in the table. Details about directors, like any other commercial information, is supplied to the Department on an "in confidence" basis.

Information about premises in Scotland and Wales is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will now update the evidence which his Department supplied to the 1976 Select Committee on Abortion concerning the financial links between doctors and agencies who refer women for abortions and the clinics in which such abortions are performed by approaching the agencies concerned and asking that the normal commercial confidentiality be waived in this instance.

Mr. Newton: We see no need to do so. My hon. Friend is free to approach the agencies for this information if he wishes.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what specific steps have been taken by his Department to monitor the occurrence and treatment of post-abortion stress disorder;

(2) whether he will introduce a system of notification so that his Department is kept informed of the incidence of post-abortion stress disorder and other abortion-related conditions.

Mr. Newton: The Department has funded since 1976 a long-term study by Manchester research unit of the Royal College of General Practitioners on attitudes to pregnancy. This unit is preparing a paper about psychiatric morbidity experienced by women having abortion treatment.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to alter the conditions governing the financial links between doctors and agencies who refer women for abortions and the clinics in which such abortions are performed.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of abortions performed in the last year for which figures are available upon non-resident women in England and Wales were performed in non-National Health Service facilities or in pay beds in National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. Newton: In 1986, 24,589 (99·7 per cent.) of abortions to non-resident women were performed in non-National Health Service facilities. Figures are not available centrally to show how many of the remaining 78 (0·3 per cent.) abortions which were performed in NHS hospitals were done in private beds.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information his Department requires licensed abortion clinics to keep on the after-care which is provided for non-resident women who have abortions in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: Information is not recorded on the after-care provided to non-resident patients, but they are provided with an information sheet and a discharge letter to their own doctor, usually in their own language.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of abortions performed at 18 weeks or more gestation in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available were performed because the child was likely to be born handicapped.

Mr. Newton: In 1986 there were 8,276 notifications of abortions which took place with a gestation period of 18 weeks or more. Of these, 648 contained a mention of ground 4 of the 1967 Abortion Act, which states,

> "there is a substantial risk that if the child was born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped".

This represents a percentage of all abortion notifications of 7·8.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) why his Department does not make available information concerning the numbers of abortions which are performed in pay beds in National Health Service facilities;

(2) what would be the cost of collecting and publishing information on a regular basis concerning the numbers of abortions which are performed in pay beds in National Health Service facilities;

(3) whether his Department will arrange for the collection and publication of information concerning the number of abortions which are performed in pay beds in National Health Service facilities if the cost of such an exercise is met by the private sector.

Mr. Newton: A special analysis of a 10 per cent. sample of in-patient records has shown that in 1985 there were an estimated 560 abortions, including spontaneous abortions, in private beds in NHS hospitals in England. This compares with the total of 65,254 legal abortions done in NHS hospitals in that year. We see no reason to collect and publish this information on a regular basis.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the abortion counselling agencies of which his Department is aware currently have any financial link with abortion clinics.

Mr. Newton: Eight.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in how many cases of which he is aware any individual is both a director or trustee of a company or charity providing abortion counselling and also of a clinic providing abortions.

Mr. Newton: The Department's records show that there are 32 such individuals.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are taken by his Department to ensure that the administrative condition that financial arrangements between abortion agencies and clinics are reported is fulfilled.

Mr. Newton: All nursing homes are required to give an assurance to the Secretary of State that they will notify any changes to existing financial arrangements between the nursing home and any medical practitioner, pregnancy advice bureau or referral agency and to report, as soon as it is made, any new arrangement. Pregnancy advice bureaux also are required to identify financial links with other businesses. These requirements are drawn to the attention of administrators of premises when the first visit of inspection is made. Checks continue to be made on subsequent visits and company searches are carried out as necessary. Proprietors and administrators are well aware that failure to comply with an assurance could constitute grounds for withdrawal of registration of bureaux or approval of nursing homes.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in how many cases an individual doctor who performs abortions at any clinic is also a director or trustee of a company or charity which provides an abortion counselling service.

Mr. Newton: We know of no such cases.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will confirm that the present administrative condition relating to financial links in the abortion industry permits a doctor working on a salaried or retainer basis at an abortion agency to perform abortions upon the women whom he has referred for abortions elsewhere.

Mr. Newton: It is not a requirement that a doctor working on a salaried or retainer basis at a bureau should not also perform abortions on these patients in a nursing home/clinic. It is, however, a requirement that doctors employed on a per capita basis should not also operate upon the women whom they see at the bureau.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abortions were done privately on National Health Services premises at 18 weeks and over in the last year for which figures are available; and what were the statutory grounds on which the abortions were performed.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information requested is not available: the abortion notification form does not seek information about the private or other status of patients in NHS hospitals.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abortions performed at 18 weeks or more gestation in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available were performed (a) in emergency to save the life of the mother and (b) in cases of rape.

Mr. Newton: Information on abortion notifications mentioning ground 5 of the Abortion Act 1967 (which allows abortions in emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman) by details of gestation weeks for individual years cannot be released for reasons of confidentiality. However, in the five years 1982-86 there were 26 such notifications, of which 13 were performed at 18 weeks or more gestation.

Prior to 1987 it is not possible to identify reliably all those notifications of abortion which mention rape. Arrangements are being made in order to provide this for current and future abortions.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions his Department has had with the health services of other countries in the European Economic Community in order to ensure that after-care is available for non-resident women who travel to the United Kingdom for abortions.

Mr. Newton: None. The after care of non-resident abortion patients is a matter for the doctors and medical institutions involved in any individual case.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average cost of a National Health Service abortion performed at (a) under 12 weeks, (b) under 18 weeks, (c) 18 weeks or more and (d) 20 weeks or more.

Mr. Newton: The estimated revenue cost of an abortion in National Health Service hospitals is £170. Information on the average cost at different gestations is not available centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information his Department collects concerning the fees charged by abortion agencies.

Mr. Newton: The Department approves the level of fees in the case of pregnancy advice bureaux and nursing homes with more than six beds approved for use for abortion cases, or with more than 25 per cent. of its total beds so approved.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the source of the evidence available to him to support the claim that a high percentage of pregnant women who go to pregnancy advice bureaux do proceed to have an abortion.

Mr. Newton: Pregnancy advice bureaux are required to maintain registers which show, inter alia, whether or not women are referred for abortion. These registers are inspected by the Department's investigative officers in the course of their inspection visits.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of abortions performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available on pregnancies of 18 weeks or more was performed upon single women.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the table.

Single women as a percentage of all abortions, 18-28 weeks gestation, residents and non-residents, England and Wales 1986

	Number
All abortions	8,276
Single women	6,123
Percentage	74

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of abortions performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available on pregnancies of 18 weeks or more was performed on women with (a) no previous children, (b) one previous child, (c) two previous children, (d) three previous children, (e) four previous children, (f) five previous children and (g) six previous children.

Mr. Newton: The information is not available in precisely the form requested; the available information for 1986 is shown in the table.

Number of notifications of abortions at 18 weeks or more gestation by parity, England and Wales, 1986

Number of previous children	Number of notifications of abortions	Percentage
All abortions	8,276	100
0	5,770	69·7
1	1,181	14·3
2	696	8·4
3	352	4·2
4	157	1·9
5 and over	70	0·8
Unknown	50	0·6

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list by each English district health authority area the number of abortions undertaken in each year since 1967.

Mr. Newton: Information on abortions by district health authority of termination is not released for reasons of confidentiality. Tables showing data by district health authority of usual residence for 1983-86 are available in the OPCS annual Series AB, "Abortion Statistics"; for 1975-82, the same series gives data for health districts; for 1974, data are available only for regional health authorities. The years 1968-73 are covered for hospital regions in the Registrar General's "Supplement on Abortion" for the annual "Statistical Review of England and Wales". These publications are available in the Library.

NHS (Pay)

Mr. Matthew Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision have the Government made for the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority to implement pay rises whilst remaining within its expenditure budget.

Mrs. Currie: Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority has received a cash allocation this year of £79·6 million, 8·6 per cent. more than in 1986-87. The allocation includes a special addition to help health authorities maintain and develop services following this year's review body awards. Health authorities must take the necessary steps to balance the cost of service developments against other cost pressures.

Benefits

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate (a) the net cost to each local authority of housing benefit payment made to tenants in private sector housing 1986-87, (b) the amount paid by each authority in respect of individual rents which were in excess of 180 per cent. of the average registered rent in the respective DHSS area in 1986-87 and (c) the anticipated net cost to each authority of making such payments following the introduction of housing benefit subsidy arrangements set out in circular LHB(87)5.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information sought in relation to the current housing benefit scheme is not held centrally. It is not possible to predict the net cost to individual local authorities of the proposed subsidy arrangements under the reformed scheme since that cost will be strongly influenced by such factors as the extent to which each authority succeeds in limiting benefit on unreasonably high private sector rents.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the backlog of outstanding claims to social security benefits in the local offices of his Department in Greenock and Port Glasgow in August.

Mr. Portillo: The table shows the number of outstanding claims to social security benefits in Greenock and Port Glasgow in August.

	Greenock ILO	Port Glasgow ILO
Sickness/Invalidity benefit	33	35
Maternity allowance	4	6
Retirement pension	159	42
Severe disablement allowance	22	12
Supplementary benefit	35	55
TOTAL	253	150

Source: Social security management information statistics for four week period ending 25 August 1987.

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will review the subsidy granted to Leeds city council for housing benefit 1988 preparation costs; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are the criteria used by his Department to settle the allocations for local authorities in respect of the preparation costs involved in the 1988 housing benefit charges.

Mr. Portillo: Following discussions with the local authority associations, it was decided that the £25 million grant which is being made available to local authorities to support their costs in preparing for the reformed housing benefit scheme should be allocated to authorities on the basis of a formula which took account of their recent administration costs and caseloads. The formula was adjusted so that the relationship between authorities' estimates and their allocations would be broadly comparable for each size of authority. The share of £231,289 due to be paid to Leeds city council has been calculated on this basis. We have no plans to review the amount of the grant payable to the council.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in the United Kingdom are currently in receipt of housing benefit; what plans he has to ensure that all entitled to such benefit will receive it; what assistance he is willing to give to the take-up campaigns organised by voluntary organisations and local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Figures are readily available only on a Great Britain basis. Our latest estimate is that in autumn 1986, some 7·2 million households were in receipt of housing benefit. Responsibility for administering housing benefit rests with local authorities, who have a statutory duty to publicise the scheme. It would be for the authority concerned to decide how to respond to a locally organised take-up campaign.

At a national level, housing benefit is one of the benefits which will feature in the new series of leaflets being redesigned as part of our communications strategy. It will also feature in the advertising campaign we are planning to explain the social security reforms.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total number of claimants in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole who have been refused benefit following a restart interview.

Mr. Lee: I have been asked to reply.

Any refusal of benefit subsequent to a restart interview follows not from the interview itself but from the decision of an independent adjudication officer operating under longstanding legal rules adopted by successive Governments.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to uprate child benefit in line with inflation at the forthcoming up-rating.

Mr. Scott: An announcement about benefit rates will be made shortly.

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received a letter from the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Leith dated 27 April regarding the withdrawal of the estate heating allowance for a number of constituents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that I have no record of having received this letter.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total amount of supplementary benefit paid to claimants in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde region and (c) Scotland in the financial year 1979-80 to 1985-86.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information is not available in respect of Greenock and Port Glasgow or Strathclyde region. Information in respect of Scotland is as follows:

Financial year	Amount £ million
1979-80	218
1980-81	286
1981-82	464
1982-83	599
1983-84	570
1984-85	639
1985-86	743

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total amount paid to social security claimants in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde region and (c) Greenock and Port Glasgow for additional requirements in the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information to answer part (a) of the question is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. No information is available to answer parts (b) and (c).

Single Payments

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many appeals against decisions relating to single payments for those people in supplementary benefit are currently being dealt with by the local offices serving (a) Scotland and (b) Strathclyde region; and what were the comparable numbers for June 1985 and June 1986.

Mr. Portillo: It is regretted that not all of the information requested is readily available. For Scotland as a whole the latest figures for single payment appeals at local offices awaiting submission to social security appeal tribunals are as follows:

	Number
June 1985	1,047
June 1986	2,081
December 1986	6,176

Statistics about types of decision appealed against are not collected below regional level. Information specific to Strathclyde area could therefore only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Staff

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff are currently employed in the local offices of his Department in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Strathclyde region and (d) Greenock and Port Glasgow: and how many staff in each of these are planned for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Portillo: The latest comprehensive information on the number of staff in post in local offices of the Department relates to 1 October 1987 and is as follows:

	Number
(a) England and Wales	62,471·5
(b) Scotland	8,270·5
(c) Strathclyde Region	4,622·0
(d) Greenock ILO	176·5
Port Glasgow ILO	81·5

The number of staff planned for the end of 1987-88 takes account of workload reductions and is as follows:

	Number
(a) England and Wales	60,884
(b) Scotland	8,188
(c) Strathclyde Region	4,572
(d) Greenock ILO	174
Port Glasgow ILO	80

The number of staff planned for 1988-89 for each of these areas is not yet available

Notes: Figures exclude cleaners

ILO = Integrated Local Office

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received calling for more assistance in dealing with the work load in his Department's local offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: A provisional claim for more staff in local offices has been lodged by the trade unions and this is currently under consideration.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time staff have been employed in local offices of his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The number of full-time staff equivalents in the Department's local offices on the 1 April each year was as follows:

	Number
1979	65,207
1980	64,036·5
1981	66,847
1982	64,159
1983	63,650
1984	60,861
1985	63,136
1986	62,911
1987	64,888·5

Included in these totals are part-time staff but it is not possible to give a breakdown as information on part-time staff in local offices is not held centrally.

Mobility Allowance and Social Security Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if Her Majesty's Government plan to amalgamate the mobility allowance tribunals and social security appeal tribunals, as recommended in the Oglesby report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Under the present system, non-medical questions arising on mobility allowance claims are decided, on appeal, by social security appeal tribunals; medical questions are decided by medical boards and thereafter, if necessary, by medical appeal tribunals. We have no plans at present to revise this aspect of medical adjudication.

Deaf People (Communication)

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the level of funding for the Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People for each of the past three years.

Mr. Portillo: The Department awarded the council a grant of £40,000 in each of the past three years.

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the proposed withdrawal of funding by his Department to the Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People.

Mr. Scott: This Department is by far the largest single contributor to the funds of this voluntary organisation and funding is not being withdrawn. On the contrary, we are making a grant of £40,000 in 1987-88, the same amount as in the previous three years. The council has explained its current financial difficulties. We have extended further help by bringing forward the first three quarterly instalments of our grant. We are also actively discussing with the council and others with an interest longer term financial arrangements for supporting the council's work.

Eye Treatment (North-West)

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consultant ophthalmologists there are in (a) England, (b) North West regional health authority and (c) central Manchester district; what is the current waiting list at the Manchester royal eye hospital; what is the current shortfall in (a) medical and (b) nursing staff at that hospital; and if he will now take steps to provide further medical staff to the hospital to seek to reduce this waiting list.

Mr. Newton: The information held centrally is as follows:

(i) Consultant ophthalmologists, whole time equivalents, at 30 September 1986

England	North Western Regional Health Authority	Central Manchester Health Authority
382	30	6

(ii) Inpatient waiting list for Manchester Royal Eye Hospital at 31 December 1986: 1,917. Information is not held centrally on the waiting time of these patients or whether they are urgent or non-urgent cases.

Information is not held centrally on medical or nursing manpower at the Manchester royal eye hospital. Numbers and appointments are matters for the authorities locally.

The hon. Member may wish to seek further information from the chairman of the central Manchester health authority, which is responsible for managing the Manchester royal eye hospital.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Jack asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to change the arrangements for the exceptionally cold weather payments scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The current arrangements, based on clear criteria, can be expected to give extra help more often and more quickly to those most at risk from the cold than any previous systems since the scheme was first put on a regulated basis in 1980. Last winter, we estimate that over 950,000 people received help, more than twice as many as in any previous year. The total cost of benefit paid was £10·2 million.

For this winter we plan to make it easier for claimants to get help during repeat periods of exceptionally cold weather. We intend to provide that, where a successful claim is made in respect of one period of exceptionally cold weather, that claim will remain valid in respect of subsequent periods of cold weather during the winter. At the same time, we will be correcting a number of technical errors in the description of areas covered by particular weather stations. This will not change the links between local offices and weather stations themselves. Regulations to make these changes will be laid before the House shortly.

These arrangements will apply for the coming winter. For subsequent winters, the Social Security Bill proposes an amendment to the Social Security Act 1986 to provide for help to be given towards the cost of heating in cold weather when single payments have been abolished, and replaced by loans and grants from the social fund. This help with heating will be regulated, and paid as of right in a similar way to the arrangements for maternity and funeral payments within the social fund. This amendment provides reassurance that help will continue to be available following the social security reforms next April.

Hospital Waiting Times

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) why the hospital waiting list figures for England for March issued by his Department included no figures for Hampstead district health authority;

(2) what estimates of hospital waiting lists for Hampstead district health authority for March were included in the national, regional and sub-regional figures;

(3) what were the actual hospital waiting list figures for Hampstead district health authority for March.

Mr. Newton: Computing problems prevented the Hampstead district health authority from producing hospital waiting list figures for March 1987.

The table shows the estimates which were included in the national and regional summaries. These were produced by assuming that the Hampstead waiting lists experienced the same percentage changes since September 1986 as the rest of North East Thames region.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table based on table 3.15.1 of the public expenditure White Paper (Cm 56-II) with all the figures converted to 1986-76 prices;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table based on table 3.15 of the public expenditure White Paper (Cm 56-II) with all figures converted to 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is set out in the tables. The figures have been converted to 1986-87 prices using the GDP deflators (a different price deflator from the one used for uprating benefits) for assumed future inflation underlying the figures in Cm 56.

Glaucoma

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to see that all three of the necessary tests for glaucoma are made a mandatory part of the National Health Service test for spectacles for those in the over 40 years risk group; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The use of ophthalmoscopy which can detect glaucoma is already part of the routine NHS sight test. It is open to practitioners to carry out any other tests they judge to be appropriate in individual cases.

AIDS

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which voluntary organisations have received grants as part of the Government's AIDS prevention and education campaign; and how much each organisation has received.

Mr. Newton: The following voluntary organisations have received grants since the start of the Government's AIDS public education campaign. The figures include planned spending in the current financial year. Grants paid to some organisations such as the Terence Higgins Trust cover both support for those infected with HIV or suffering AIDS and for preventative and educational work.

	£
AIDS Ahead (organisation representing the hearing impaired)	75,000
The Royal National Institute for the Blind	13,000
The Terrence Higgins Trust	453,000
Healthline	298,023
Standing Committee on Drug Abuse	43,000
London Lesbian and Gay Switchboard	13,735
Family Planning Association	20,860
The Brook Advisory Service	33,800
British Association for Counselling	5,600
Accept services United Kingdom	102,690
National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux	17,000
London Lighthouse	600,000
St. Catherine's Hospice	60,000
Mildmay Mission	200,000

£1,339,829 has been paid to three organisations, Broadcasting Support Services, Network (Scotland) Ltd and AIDS Helpline (Northern Ireland), which jointly provide free 24-hour telephone advice and information services as part of the national AIDS helpline.

The Scottish Home and Health Department has provided a grant of £46,400 in 1987/88 to the Scottish AIDS Monitor, a voluntary body which provides information, counselling and support for AIDS sufferers in Scotland, people infected with the AIDS virus, those who fear they are at risk of infection and to families and friends of AIDS patients.

The National AIDS Trust has been set up with Government support totalling £800,000 to provide funding to voluntary bodies and co-ordinate their activities.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate, for England and Wales, for the most recent month for which figures are available, and in addition on a cumulative basis (a) the number of persons who have died from AIDS-related causes, (b) the number of persons diagnosed as suffering from AIDS and (c) the number of persons estimated to be HIV-positive.

Mr. Newton: Figures for the reported cases of AIDS are published monthly. Figures for the number of people reported to be HIV antibody positive are published quartely. Copies of the figures are available in the Library.

There are a number of unknowns involved in the estimation of the number of people who are HIV antibody positive. These include the number who may be susceptible to infection, the proportion of those infected who go on to develop AIDS, the varying incubation period and the proportion of those infected who present themselves for testing. At the moment, therefore, it is not possible to make an accurate estimate of the number of people who are HIV antibody positive.

National Health Service Operations

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many doctors, nurses and other medical staff were involved in operations performed on National Health Service patients during 1986; and what were the numbers performing similar operations in 1978.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is not available centrally. We are unable to identify staff actually involved in operations. The table includes figures for medical staff in surgical specialties and anaesthetics and operating department assistants for the relevant years. Information on nursing staff in operating theatres is not available prior to 1981.

[4] On 1 April 1984 Operating Department Assistants were re-classified from Ancillary to Professional and Technical Staff Group. Figures include trainees.

n.a.—Not available.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many major operations were performed on National Health Service patients during 1986.

Mrs. Currie: No information is yet available centrally on the number of operations performed on National Health Service patients during 1986. The National Health Service in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Hospital Admissions

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients were hospitalised for more than seven days in National Health Service hospitals during 1986.

Mrs. Currie: There were 1·95 million discharges following an in-patient spell of more than seven days during 1985, the latest year for which information is available centrally.

Laboratories (Medical Tests)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many laboratories there are doing National Health Service medical tests, and of what classification;

(2) how many National Health Service medical and test laboratories there are.

Mrs. Currie: There were 385 NHS laboratories in England in 1986. The number of such laboratories undertaking work in each main specialty in 1985 (the latest year for which information was available) was:

	Number
Chemical Pathology	300
Cytogenetics	27
Haematology	341
Histopathology	267
Immunology	50
Microbiology	299

Cancer Screening

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how the existing laboratories for the testing of cervical cancer are distributed;

(2) how many laboratories there are which test for cervical cancer.

Mrs. Currie: The available information for England is given in the table. Figures for Scotland and Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

NHS (Staff Accommodation)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the present arrangements and co-ordination for solving the lack of accommodation for nurses and other medical staff in the south of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: In conjunction with health authorities we are currently reviewing the availability of National Health Service residential accommodation and the measures which might be taken to assist NHS staff to enter the private housing market.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of applications for invalid care allowance from married or cohabiting women has been rejected.

Mr. Scott: At 16 October 1986, 131,300 claims to invalid care allowance had been received from married or cohabiting women. The independent adjudicating authorities have decided that the conditions of entitlement to an allowance are not satisfied in about 14 per cent. (18,000) of these claims.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications from married and co-habiting women for invalid care allowance had been received by 31 August.

Mr. Scott: At 31 August about 126,000 claims for invalid care allowance had been received from married or cohabiting women.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of applications for invalid care allowance is rejected.

Mr. Scott: About 18·6 per cent.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services by what percentage the limit on earnings for recipients of invalid care allowance without abating that allowance has risen since November 1982; and by what percentage (a) the retail prices index and (b) the average earnings index has increased over the same period.

Mr. Scott: The weekly earnings limit governing entitlement to invalid care allowance has not changed since it was doubled from £6 to £12 in November 1982. In the period November 1982 to August 1987, the latest date for which information is available, the retail price index rose by 24 per cent.; in the same period the average earnings of manual and non-manual workers in all industries and services rose by 42 per cent.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for invalid care allowance from married and cohabiting women have been abated due to receipt of (a) supplementary benefit, (b) other benefits and allowances and (c) retirement pension.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the requested information is not available. Since June 1986, when the allowance was extended to married and cohabiting women, payments to some 568 women have been reduced on account of the payment of other social security benefits, including supplementary benefit and retirement pension.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for invalid care allowance from married or cohabiting women have been outstanding for (a) six months or less, (b) six to 12 months and (c) over 12 months; and how many of each category relate to women in Wales.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the requested information is not available, but at 16 October some 131,300 invalid care allowance claims had been received from married and cohabiting women of which about 17,900 were awaiting decision. The average time taken to process an invalid care allowance claim is currently about 11·5 weeks.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many outstanding claims for invalid care allowance there are.

Mr. Scott: At 16 October, some 26,300 invalid care allowance claims were awaiting a decision.

Pensions

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the number of elderly people in receipt of supplementary pension in (a) the Dundee, East constituency and (b) the Dundee district authority area, for the latest available date and for each year since 1979;

(2) how many people in (i) the Dundee, East constituency and (ii) the Dundee district authority area are currently in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit, (b) family income supplement and (c) housing benefit, and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the number of elderly people in receipt of supplementary pension in the Dundee, West constituency for the latest available date and or each year since 1979;

(2) how many people in the Dundee, West constituency are currently in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit, (b) family income supplement and (c) housing benefit; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The constituencies of Dundee, East and Dundee, West and Dundee district authority are served by Dundee, East and Dundee, West local offices but the boundaries are not conterminous.

The table sets out the information requested for these offices on 28 July 1987 and for each year since 1979.

	Dundee East Local Office		Dundee West Local Office

The count of cases in action includes some cases where benefit has ceased to be paid but other action is proceeding.

No information is available concerning the number of people claiming family income supplement.

[1] Housing Benefit was introduced from April 1983; before this date rebates were awarded.

[2] Provisional.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures showing the number of pensioners in receipt of supplementary pensions in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde region and (c) Scotland in May of each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The table shows the number of pensioners in receipt of supplementary pension in Greenock local office, Port Glasgow local office, Strathclyde region and Scotland in May of each year since 1979.

Cancer Patients, Leeds

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will ask for a report for Leeds Eastern health authority on the resources available for treating children cancer patients at St. James hospital, Leeds; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will meet the chairman of Yorkshire regional health authority and Leeds Eastern health authority to discuss the funding of the treatment of children cancer patients at St. James hospital, Leeds; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he has any plans to make more resources available to Leeds Eastern health authority in order to assist the care of children cancer patients at St. James hospital, Leeds.

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will establish an inquiry into the adequacy of resources for the treatment of children cancer patients in St. James hospital, Leeds.

Mrs. Currie: Responsibility for the allocation of resources to Yorkshire district health authorities, including Leeds Eastern, rests with Yorkshire regional health authority. Matters of this kind are for the respective authorities to resolve. The funding of paediatric oncology services must, however, be considered in the context of other services in Yorkshire. I understand that the Yorkshire regional health authority is currently reviewing funding arrangements for services which cover more than one district. This will include paediatric oncology.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current average length of time which it takes him to reply to letters from right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Moore: On average 37 calendar days elapse between receipt of a letter from a right hon. or hon. Member and a reply being sent by a DHSS Minister.

Attendance Allowance Board (Guidance)

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the guidance issued by the Attendance Allowance Board will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Attendance Allowance Board's guidelines to its delegated medical practitioners will be published as a priced document after Parliament has completed consideration of the current Social Security Bill, which contains a clause to amend one of the qualifying medical criteria for entitlement to an allowance.

Mobility Allowance (Appeals)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will end as soon as possible the practice of his Department's medical appeals tribunals, covering mobility allowance appeals, of obliging claimants to walk up and down outside in public thoroughfares when assessing their walking ability.

Mr. Portillo: The administration of medical appeal tribunals is the responsibility of the president of social security and medical appeal tribunals, His Honour Judge Byrt, QC.

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Ingram asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the average waiting time from date of appeal to hearing under the social security appeal tribunal system in each year since 1979;

(2) if he will give the number of appeals under the social security appeal tribunal system in each year since 1979;

(3) if he will give the number of appeals upheld in part or total under the social security appeal tribunal system in each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Prior to April 1984 appeals statistics which measured the time between lodgement and hearing were kept only for supplementary benefit appeal tribunals. There are no comparable figures available for the pre-1984 national insurance local tribunals. The table gives details of the number of appeals to supplementary benefit appeal tribunals lodged and heard in the years 1979 to 1983 and for the first quarter of 1984.

From April 1984 supplementary benefit appeal tribunals and national insurance local tribunals were unified into social security appeal tribunals. At the same time, responsibility for the administration of social security appeal tribunals was transferred to the independent office of the president of social security appeal tribunals. The table gives figures for appeals to social security appeal tribunals for all social security benefits for the period from April 1984 to the quarter ending 31 March 1987 (the latest quarter for which figures are available).

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the sums spent on bed-and-breakfast accommodation and paid through supplementary benefit in the Thanet district and Canterbury city council areas in each of the years 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Gynaecology

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list by each district health authority the number of gynaecological operations waiting to be performed.

Mrs. Currie: A table showing the number of patients on the March 1987 in-patient waiting list for the gynaecology specialty has been placed in the Library. The information available centrally on in-patient waiting lists is categorised according to the speciality of the consultant not the intended method of treatment.

Income Support Regulations

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is now in a position to reply to the letter from Mr. Richard Horton of the West Midlands Welfare Rights Agency, sent to him on 27 July, regarding the draft Income Support (Transitional) Regulations 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that we have no trace of this correspondence. However, I understand that a copy of the draft Income Support (Transitional) Regulations 1987 was sent to Mr. Horton in July. If the hon. Member would forward a copy of Mr. Horton's letter, I shall ensure that he is sent a reply.

Heating Allowances

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider giving extra heating allowances to senior citizens and disabled people with restricted mobility over the coming winter period in recognition of Scotland's colder climate.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) today.

Extra weekly help with heating costs is currently available to supplementary benefit householders aged 65 or over and to disabled people through the system of supplementary benefit heating additions. The two main rates are £2·20 and £5·55 a week. Like previous Governments, we consider that it would not be right to deviate from the principle of national benefit levels.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Passports

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements will be made for passports for Queens Messengers following the introduction of the European Community common format; and what distinctive feature such passports will display.

Mr. Renton: There are no plans at present to change either the arrangements for issue or the format of the distinctive couriers passport currently used by members of the Corps of Queen's Messengers in the course of their official duties.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the department equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act and (f) what action has been taken to facilitate job share, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Hurd: The Home Office has two equal opportunities officers, one for staff in prison service establishments, and the other for staff in the rest of the Department. The former spends about 10 per cent. of his time on work relating to equal opportunities and the latter about 20 per cent. of hers. Both have support from other staff. Both are also departmental training officers. The Prison Department EOO has, in addition, personal management responsibilities; the other EOO has responsibility for industrial relations, communications with staff, and certain other management matters.

The departmental budget breakdown for equal opportunities work is not readily identifiable. The promotion of equal opportunities in the Home Office involves not only EOOs and their supporting staff, but personnel management divisions, training branches and line managers throughout the Department, as well as trade union representatives. In addition, because of its wider responsibilities, the Home Office has staff working to promote equality of opportunity in the community generally, and funds the work of the Equal Opportunities Commission and the Commission for Racial Equality. The EOOs meet their counterparts from other Departments at an annual meeting arranged by the office of the Minister for the Civil Service, and on other occasions as necessary. No formal guidelines have been issued concerning the application of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act.

The Department has informed staff that it will try to meet requests from those who wish, because of their domestic responsibilities, to work part-time or to share a job. The names of those wishing to share are noted so that they can, when the opportunity arises, be put in touch with a prospective partner. Staff inspectors have been asked to review the scope for part-time work or job sharing. In addition, special leave may be granted to staff to enable them to cope with temporary domestic difficulties.

Prisons (Privatisation)

Mr. Steinberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to privatise the recruitment of prison ancillaries, night patrols, moving staff, prison kitchen staff and dog patrols.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans to do so.

Isle of Man (Arms Shipments)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Government of the Isle of Man on the situation in which a bank account on the island was set up in order to facilitate the shipment of arms to Iran via South Africa; and what action is being taken by the Manx authorities to deal with the individual concerned and to prevent a recurrence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no statutory provisions either in the United Kingdom or the Isle of Man regulating the use of a bank account in relation to arms shipments. I understand that the Isle of Man authorities have no information to suggest that a bank account in the island has been improperly conducted; and there is no evidence to suggest that there has been a breach of export controls. The Isle of Man authorities are well aware of the need to take whatever steps may be necessary within their domestic jurisdiction to conform with the Government's policy in relation to these matters.

African National Congress

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken by the authorities to protect leading members of the African National Congress living in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I understand that leading members of the African National Congress have been seen by the police and given advice about their personal security.

Television Licence Fees

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is yet able to announce the level of the television licence fees to take effect from 1 April 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The television licence fee has remained at £58·00 for a colour licence and £18·00 for a monochrome licence since 28 March 1985. On 14 January this year, at column 263, I announced that the fee would be increased only in line with the increase in retail prices index. I also said that the increase would be calculated from a notional baseline fee of £60·00 for a colour licence and £20·00 for a monochrome licence.

The principle of indexation and the choice of the baseline were both designed to encourage increased efficiency and economy by the BBC. Its costs had historically risen at a higher rate than the RPI and it was then planning to spend money on the provision of television and radio services in the present financial year at a rate higher than that represented by the baseline fee.

The RPI figure for September published on 9 October showed a year on year increase of 4·2 per cent. I have accordingly decided that from 1 April 1988 the colour licence fee should be £62·50 and the monochrome fee £21·00. The necessary regulations will be laid before the House in due course.

As I have already announced, the licence fee for the two years starting 1 April 1989 and 1 April 1990 will also be calculated in accordance with changes in the RPI, which themselves determine the rate of increase of pensions and other state benefits.

TRANSPORT

M40

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the present position with regard to the siting of a motorway service area on the proposed M40 extention in the Bicester area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Cherwell district council has objected to our proposal for a motorway service area at Ardley. Esso plc has appealed against the refusal of its application for a services facility at an adjacent site. The Department of the Environment proposes to hold a joint inquiry. The date is not yet settled.

Wardie Bay

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he discussed the proposed Wardie bay development and reclamation scheme when he recently met the Forth Ports Authority in Leith; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Forth Ports Authority outlined to my right hon. Friend the plans it has formulated, in a joint venture with GA Group Ltd of Glasgow called Edinburgh Maritime Ltd, for the regeneration of the waterfront between the ports of Granton and Leith. Last month Edinburgh Maritime submitted an application for planning permission for a £400 million mixed-use redevelopment scheme to the city of Edinburgh district council aimed at enhancing the environment and creating jobs and new housing. The planning application has now been called in by Lothian regional council. I understand that the proposals have been welcomed by the Scottish Development Agency as complementing the work that it and its partners have achieved in the Leith project.

A417-A419

Mr. Simon Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for improvements to the A417-A419 link between Swindon and Gloucester, beyond those already programmed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. The published national trunk road programme contains schemes covering almost the entire length between Swindon and Gloucester where improvements have not yet been effected.

Prestwick Airport

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the current responsibility for determining the status of Prestwick airport as Scotland's transatlantic gateway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The 1985 airports policy White Paper explained that if Prestwick airport's financial results had not shown steady improvements by 1989, the Government would review their present policy for air traffic distribution among the Scottish lowland airports. This remains the case; we shall naturally have regard to BAA plc's assessment of Prestwick's performance and future prospects in deciding whether to conduct a review.

M1-A1 Link

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what date work will start on the construction of the M1-A1 link.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Subject to the satisfactory completion of the remaining statutory procedures, in the late spring or early summer of next year.

Pedestrian Crossings

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an approved specification for a tactile warning device for pedestrians using pedestrian crossings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The specification for a tactile warning device for pedestrians using pelican crossings was approved and issued on 6 August 1987.

National Bus Company

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is satisfied with the progress being made by the National Bus Company in the implementation of its disposal programme.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am impressed by the progress made by the National Bus Company in the implementation of its disposal programme, as shown by the company's annual report and accounts published today. Already some 50 subsidiaries have been sold, and there is an encouraging level of interest in the remainder. I congratulate Mr. Lund, chairman of NBC, and his colleagues.

To facilitate the remaining sales, I have modified NBC's disposal programme to enable it to offer for sale two or more bus operating subsidiaries together. This modification, made at NBC's request, will not affect NBC's statutory duty to promote fair and sustained competition in disposing of its subsidiaries, but will give NBC more flexibility in fulfilling this duty. All sales will remain subject to the consent of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. I have placed a copy of the amendment in the Library of the House. I have also laid before the House a revocation of two directions given to NBC on 13

February and 7 April 1986, in relation to the preparation of its disposal programme. The directions had ceased to have effect once the programme was approved.

ENVIRONMENT

Conservation Policy

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has studied the publication "This Pleasant Land" which has been sent to him; and what are his policies on (a) establishing protected green belt areas, (b) designating housing restraint areas and (c) creating strategic development boundaries, in the light of the publication;

(2) if he will introduce regulations to establish (a) protected green belt areas, (b) housing restraint areas and (c) strategic development boundaries to be protected from development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: "This Pleasant Land" is an interesting discussion of current planning issues. However, it understates the strength and success of existing conservation policies. The Government have vigorously maintained the protection afforded to the green belts and other sensitive areas, and will continue to do so. I see no need for new designations of the kind proposed. The success of policies for housing development in existing urban areas is evidenced by the extent to which land for housebuilding is coming from previously developed sites and vacant land within urban areas—in the last two years about 46 per cent. of land developed for housing came from these sources.

Land use surveys can provide valuable information, but assessments of housing land supply must also take account of such factors as ownership, market demand and the availability of services, which can only be assessed at the local level. That is why, within the context of structure and local plan allocations, we have urged local authorities and housebuilders to undertake joint studies of housing land availability in each area.

Rating Reform

Mr. Raison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the likely impact of the proposed unified business rate after revaluation on non-domestic ratepayers in each of the districts of Buckinghamshire, expressed as a percentage change.

Mr. Howard: The table shows the effect on business rates in Buckinghamshire districts if a uniform non-domestic rate had been set in 1987-88 at the present national average poundage. Arrangements for the revaluation of non-domestic property are not yet sufficiently far advanced to predict what the impact will be in Buckinghamshire.

	Present poundage	Uniform poundage	Per cent. change
Aylesbury Vale	220·9p	224·1p	+1·5
South Bucks	222·0p	224·1p	+1·0
Chiltern	227·2p	224·1p	−1·4
Milton Keynes	236·9p	224·1p	−5·4
Wycombe	223·6p	224·1p	+0·2

Commons Court (Asbestos)

Mr. Butler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish estimates of the presence of asbestos fibres in the air in Commons Court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Air samples taken on 23 October from all three floors at Commons Court block show a reading of less than 0·01 fibres/ml. This is below the minimum safety level and is the same as the reading taken before the removal of sprayed asbestos from structural beams and girders in 15 offices during the summer recess. It is intended that the remaining 34 offices will be treated during the next summer recess.

Council House Sales

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council and new town commission houses or flats have been sold in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Roe: Sales of dwellings by English local authorities and new towns for 1982 and 1983 were published in table 9.6 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1976-1986" and figures for 1984 to 1986 were published in table 2.12 of "Housing and Construction Statistics Part 2 June 1987" copies of which are available in the Library.

Home Ownership

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on future plans to encourage wider home ownership.

Mrs. Roe: The Government's commitment to supporting the growth of owner occupation was set out in chapter 2 of the recent White Paper "Housing: The Government's Proposals" (Cm. 214). The Government will encourage the operation of a free market in buying, selling and constructing homes, and will continue to assist homebuyers through tax relief on mortgage interest. They will also encourage the development of initiatives such as shared ownership which reduce the initial cost of home ownership, and will maintain the right of council tenants to buy their homes.

Hares

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make it his policy to establish an independent scientific survey into the hare population with a view to including the species under schedule 5 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Moynihan: No. The conservation status of the brown hare was carefully considered by the Government's statutory adviser on wildlife matters, the Nature Conservancy Council, as part of its recent statutory review of schedules 5 and 8 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, following its first five years of operation. Its advice following this review was that the brown hare does not merit inclusion in schedule 5 on conservation grounds. I understand the blue hare is not under threat.

Housing Action Areas

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress made by his Department on declaring housing action areas in Handsworth, Birmingham, since the Parliamentary Under-Secretary replied to the Adjournment on 14 July, Official Report, columns 1105-8.

Mr. Waldegrave: Further discussions took place between officials of the Department and Birmingham city council on 11 September. A formal submission for the declaration of Charles as a housing action area is now awaited from the city council. A decision on whether or not the declaration is allowed to stand will be made as quickly as possible after the submission is received.

The other area referred to in the Adjournment debate was Turville. I understand that the city council will need to carry out further survey work before it will be ready to make a submission in this case.

Enveloping Schemes

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many enveloping schemes he has approved in Birmingham since 14 July.

Mr. Waldegrave: Since 14 July 1987, four envelope schemes submitted by Birmingham city council have been approved. They involved a total of 525 dwellings, at a cost of £4,279,177.

Home Loan Scheme

Mr. French asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have received assistance from the Government's home loan scheme in (a) Gloucester and (b) England and Wales for the most recent year for which figures are available; how this compares with previous years; what proportion of first-time buyers this represents; and what action the Government takes to promote the scheme.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information on the take-up of the home loan scheme is not available for individual areas.

The take-up of the scheme for the last five years is shown in the table:

Financial year	Number of first-time buyers benefiting
1982-83	6,277
1983-84	4,240
1984-85	3,580
1985-86	3,520
1986-87	1,660

The number of people receiving assistance in the financial year 1986-87 represents about 0·25 per cent. of first-time buyers who received advances from banks and building societies.

The Government make a full range of promotional material for the scheme available through banks, building societies and other mortgage lenders and savings institutions.

Rate Support Grant

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals for the rate support grant settlement for 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: I am today issuing a consultation paper to the local authority associations and local authorities setting out my detailed proposals for the 1988-89 rate support grant settlement. The associations and individual local authorities have been asked for their written comments and representations on these proposals by 17 November.

Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Growth Rates

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the most recent estimate of the growth rate in the European Economic Community, the United States of America, Japan and the United Kingdom respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The latest available data for the United Kingdom, the United States and Japan are for the second quarter of 1987. Over the year to that quarter, GDP grew by 3·8 per cent. in the United Kingdom, 2·7 per cent. in Japan and 2·4 per cent. in the United States. The latest complete data for the EC are for the first quarter of 1987. Over the year to that quarter, GDP in the EC grew by 2·6 per cent.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and amount, of the departmental budget which is allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to his departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act and (f) the action taken to facilitate job share, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Brooke: The departmental equal opportunities officer reports to the principal establishment officer. In addition to work on equal opportunities, for which no fixed proportion of the time is allocated, there are other duties, including policy on personnel management. The officer attends the annual meeting of departmental equal opportunities officers, and meets them frequently on other occasions throughout the year. No specific part of the departmental budget is allocated to equal opportunities.

No guidelines have been issued, either to departmental training officers or to departmental equal opportunities officers, on the operation of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act.

All personnel managers in my Department are encouraged to identify opportunities for job sharing and part-time working. Individual requests are dealt with sympathetically, taking into account the working needs of the Department. The Department offers maternity leave. Requests for special leave caused by domestic emergencies are considered on an individual basis.

Tax Arrears

Mr. Steel asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy that, where tax arrears result from errors made by the Inland Revenue, there be no obligation on the taxpayer to pay such arrears.

Mr. Lawson: The general rule is that tax arrears remain legally payable, whether or not the underpayment is attributable in some measure to Inland Revenue error. The Inland Revenue does, however, operate an extra-statutory concession under which arrears of tax may be wholly or partly waived if they have arisen because of a departmental error which involved the failure to make proper and timely use of information about income or personal circumstances supplied by the taxpayer so that he could reasonably believe that his affairs were in order.

The proportion of arrears remitted under this practice varies according to the size of the taxpayer's income. The terms of the concession (ESC A19) are published in the Inland Revenue's list of extra-statutory concessions.

Arts (Tax Incentives)

Mr. Simon Coombs asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the effect on the arts of tax incentives for individuals and companies introduced in the Finance Act 1986.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The tax incentives which the Government introduced last year to encourage personal and corporate donations to charities were widely and warmly welcomed. Inland Revenue records do not distinguish between different types of charities, but arts charities can benefit in the same way as other charities. It is too soon to judge the full effect of the 1986 measures, but the early signs are encouraging. I hope donors and charities will take full advantage of the opportunities which the Government have provided to increase the flow of funds into charities.

Computer Records (Access)

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how access to taxpayers' computer records will be governed when the new computer system proposed by the business review of the collection service is introduced by the Inland Revenue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The new computer system, BROCS, is planned to be implemented in stages from 1990. It will be designed to improve both the efficiency of the revenue's operations and the service provided to taxpayers. In particular, it will provide accurate and up-to-date information in three main areas where present systems are now generally seen to be unacceptably slow and fallible:

(i) where a tax inspector needs to have information held on collection records relevant to an assessment for which he is responsible.

(ii) where a collector needs to have information held on tax office records relevant to a tax debt which he is handling—to ensure that recovery procedures start with an accurate knowledge of the taxpayer's position.

(iii) where a collector needs to know of information on other collection records—to confirm the payment position of outstanding liabilities, co-ordinate handling of cases where a taxpayer may have several tax debts outstanding and ensure prompt banking of tax receipts.

These facilities are, in essence, the same as those that tax and collection offices are authorised to have under the present collection procedures. It is proposed to adopt standard access rules for BROCS and the other main computer systems linked with it: COP (for PAYE); CODA (for schedule D) and OCTA (for corporation tax).

Access to information under these systems will continue to be strictly controlled on a "need to know" basis. In some circumstances, it will be given only to certain nominated officers and generally on a view-only basis. There will continue to be special controls for certain sensitive records. Additional safeguards built into the new system will include a separate record and audit trail of all accesses to computer records.

EC Budget

Dr. Godman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest figure for the proportion of the European Commission budget for 1987 on (a) all fisheries support, (b) all agricultural support, (c) the social fund and (d) the regional fund; and how these sums compare with those of 1986.

Mr. Brooke: The information requested is given in the table.

European Communities Budget

	1986 Payment appropriations mecu	Percentage of total budget	1987 Payment appropriations mecu	Percentage of total budget
All fisheries support	164·0	0·5	177·3	0·5
All agricultural support	22,902·2	65·1	23,804·0	65·8
European Social Fund	2,533·0	7·2	2,542·3	7·0
European Regional Development Fund	3,373·0	6·7	2,497·3	6·9

These figures are based on the payment appropriations entered into the 1986 and 1987 European Communities budgets.

WALES

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of hip replacement operations under the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Between 1979 and 1986 the number of hip replacement operations performed by the National Health Service in Wales rose from 1,541 to 1,908—an increase of some 24 per cent.

Community Care

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he will take to ensure that adequate short-term funds are made available to local health authorities to meet the cost of setting up properly funded community care schemes for the elderly, mentally ill and physically disabled people.

Mr. Grist: A variety of mechanisms already exist to provide central funds to health authorities in support of community care schemes for elderly, mentally ill and physically disabled people. These include joint finance, under which the Department collaborates financially with health authorities, local authorities and voluntary organisations, and the mental health development scheme, under which health authorities receive 100 per cent. central funding for projects for mentally ill people. In addition, the elderly initiative grant scheme launched in January this year provides grant-aid to health authorities and other agencies to set up innovative projects to test new patterns of community care for elderly people.

Low-paid Workers

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the number of workers in Wales who earn less than £3 per hour and the percentage which they constitute of the total Welsh work force.

Mr. Peter Walker: An estimate of the number of workers is not available, but results of the 1986 new earnings survey indicate that 28·6 per cent. of full-time adult workers in Wales whose earnings were not affected by absence earn less than £3 per hour.

Education

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of children under the age of 16 years in Wales are educated in state schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In January 1987, 97·9 per cent of all school pupils aged under 16 years in Wales were educated in maintained schools.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Soviet Union (Mail)

Mr. John Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assurances the Post Office has (a) sought and (b) received about the delivery of mail in the Soviet Union; and what steps it takes to monitor their implementation.

Mr. Butcher: International postal operations are governed by the provisions of the Universal Postal Union convention, to which both the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom are signatories. The UPU convention makes provision for the prohibition of the importation of articles whose importation and circulation is prohibited in the country of destination. The precise internal regulations under which Soviet customs or postal officials operate in confiscating items are not publicly available. But the Soviet notification to the UPU of prohibited articles is so widely drawn as to allow the Soviet authorities, in theory, to refuse entry or to confiscate items we would consider innocuous. We find this situation far from satisfactory.

The Soviet authorities are well aware of our views, which we have made known to them on a number of occasions. As I said in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 21 October, at columns 811-12, we have raised the matter at the CSCE follow-up meeting currently taking place in Vienna.

I understand that most mail to the Soviet Union is registered, and all registered items are individually listed before dispatch. It is therefore always possible to check whether a particular letter has been forwarded. The Post Office sets inquiries in train with the Soviet postal authorities as necessary about the non-delivery of specific items.

Marble, Granite and Stone

Mr. William Powell asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list in the Official Report the value and country of origin, of imports into the United Kingdom of finished (a) marble, (b) granite and (c) stone in each year since 1980.

Mr. Butcher: Building and monumental stone is classified in the standard international trade classification revision 2 (SITC R2) under item heading 661.32, but marble and granite are not separately identified. Information by country of origin is not readily available at SITC item level: information on a country of origin basis for the years 1980 and 1986 has been prepared within cost limits.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Butcher: My Department intends to make no charge in respect of subject access requests made by its employees in respect of information that it holds under the Act in its capacity as their employer. For all other requests, including external requests, a fee of £10 will be charged in order to cover the cost of providing the service. This is in accordance with Treasury guidelines on charging.

Music Industry

Sir David Price asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will use his statutory powers to prevent increased control of music publishers by record, film and television groups, in the light of the effects of such control on the contractual and royalty terms of composers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Any such increases of control may constitute mergers which qualify under the terms of the Fair Trading Act 1973 for reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for further investigation. My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State announced on 7 October that the proposed merger between enterprises carried on by or under the control of Chappell and Co. Inc. and enterprises carried on by or under the control of Warner Communications Inc. had been referred to the MMC. In assessing whether a merger may operate against the public interest, the MMC has a statutory duty to take into account all matters which it considers in the circumstances to be relevant.

Films

Mr. Gale asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to release the Director of Fair Trading's report on practices relating to the public exhibition of films.

Mr. Maude: I intend to do so shortly in order to consult the industry and other interested parties about the appropriate follow-up action to the report.

UNCTAD

Mr. Oppenheim asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will report on the outcome of the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development held in Geneva from 9 July to 3 August 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: This session of the conference adopted a Final Act which set out the consensus reached on the main substantive item under consideration — the revitalisation of development, growth and international trade.

I have arranged for copies of this document, the speech I made at the conference and the text of the closing statement by the United Kingdom following the adoption of the Final Act to be placed in the Library of the House.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Oppenheim asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will report on the Internal Market Council held on 5 October.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, agreed a common position on a revised proposal by the European Commission to amend the EC directive on the rules for public sector supplies contracts. The Council also discussed proposals for a directive on the mutual recognition of member states professional qualifications and for amending the existing directive on sound power levels of lawnmowers, and heard a Commission statement on its proposal for a regulation on the control of concentrations between undertakings (the "Merger Control" regulation).

Listing Particulars (EC Directive)

Mr. Charles Wardle asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the adoption of a European Community directive on listing particulars.

Mr. Maude: A Council of Ministers adopted on 22 June a directive on the mutual recognition of listing particulars, the information document required to be published when securities are admitted to official stock exchange listing. This directive requires listing particulars which have been approved by a competent authority in one member state to be accepted throughout the Community. During negotiations on the proposal the United Kingdom secured important improvemens to the original proposal which materially reduced the scope for listing particulars of an unacceptable standard to benefit from mutual recognition. There was a real risk that these improvements might have been undermined had the United Kingdom delayed adoption of the proposal beyond 1 July, the date on which the Single European Act came into force. I therefore judged that it was in the United Kingdom's interest not to delay adoption until the House had completed its consideration of the measure. I regret that the normal scrutiny procedures were not followed on this occasion, but I hope the House will understand the special reasons why the Government agreed to the adoption of the directive in these circumstances.

PRIME MINISTER

Pembrokeshire

Q7. Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Prime Minister when she next intends to make an official visit to Pembrokeshire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Blowpipe Missiles

Q14. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have yet responded to the Soviet protest in connection with deliveries of Blowpipe missiles to Afghanistan.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 13 July at column 335.

Darnchurch

Q21.Mr. Pawsey asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Darnchurch, near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Burgh Island

Q41. Mr. Steen asked the Prime Minister when she next intends to visit Burgh Island.

The Prime Minister I have at present no plans to do so.

Plutonium

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister on what basis, and for what reason, Her Majesty's Government have given permission to British Nuclear Fuels to sell the equipment and know-how to make weapons-grade plutonium to other countries; whether any other of Britain's NATO allies were consulted; and if she will make a statement on the implications for non-proliferation agreements.

The Prime Minister: All exports of nuclear materials, equipment and technology are made within the guidelines set out in the statement by the then Foreign Secretary, the right hon. Sir James Callaghan, on 31 March 1976 at columns 514-16. Those guidelines ensure that any such export will be wholly consistent with our international non-proliferation obligations under the non-proliferation treaty.

Space Research

Sir Trevor Skeet asked the Prime Minister what response she has made to the representations from ACOST to the effect that further funds should be committed to space research and development or the United Kingdom should withdraw from the European venture.

The Prime Minister: I have in the last few days received advice from ACOST on the subject of space research and development. That advice was given in confidence. My hon. Friend should not assume that the advice coincides with his description of it. I shall be responding to ACOST in due course.

Security Services

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on co-operation of the British security services with the South African authorities; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on security matters.

Engagements

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 October.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 October.

Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Reform

Mr. Livingstone asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what basis he will determine the specific objective ratings for school attainment scores, in particular with mathematics, once the regular testing of children at seven, 11 and 14 years comes into force.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has appointed expert working groups on mathematics and on science to advise on the national attainment targets for these subjects and arrangements for assessment and testing performance in relation to these targets. He has also appointed a task group on assessment and testing to make recommendations for a national assessment system, including ways in which results should be expressed and reported to meet the various purposes of assessment.

The mathematics and science working groups are to produce interim reports in November and final reports by July 1988. The task group on assessment and testing has been asked to report by Christmas 1987. There will be consultations about its recommendations before new arrangements are brought into effect.

Truancy

Mr. Cyril Smith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will collect and publish statistics on the incidence of truancy amongst 12-year-old and 13-year-old children (a) in authorities with a middle school system and (b) in authorities which have an 11 to 16-year-old school system.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not collect any statistics on the incidence of truancy.

A-Level Examination

Mr. Cyril Smith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will collect and publish statistics on A-level passes obtained by pupils, as a percentage of those entered for the examination in (a) authorities with a middle school system, (b) authorities with an 11 to 16-year-old school system, (c) sixth form college system authorities and (d) authorities with a tertiary college system.

Mr. Dunn: Information on the A-level attainments of English school leavers is published in "Statistics of Education: School Leavers CSE and GCE", a copy of which is in the Library.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mrs. Rumbold: My Department's policy on subject access fees is to recover the direct costs of meeting a request for personal data, on an estimated average basis. My Department has eight register entries at present.

The cost to a data subject of obtaining his personal data would in most cases be £8 but, very exceptionally, might total a maximum of £40.

Merseyside (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Merseyside.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: In the course of my visit to Liverpool on Monday 5 October I was able to see a nursery, a primary, and a comprehensive school, and to lunch at Liverpool polytechnic. I welcomed the opportunity to meet members of the authority and to discuss matters of common concern with a group of young people at Shorefields comprehensive school in Toxteth.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much has been spent by the Medical Research Council on research into the causes of the post viral fatigue syndrome in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council has not funded any research directly on post viral fatigue syndrome. However, the council does support research on immune responses to muscle, nerve cells and related structures which may shed light on this problem. The council is always willing to consider soundly based scientific proposals in competition with other applications.

Examination Courses

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will now give details of the arrangements in place to approve examination courses offered in the compulsory years of secondary education against national criteria.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend announced earlier this month interim non-statutory arrangements for the approval of all public examination courses for 14 to 16-year-olds against national criteria. Under these arrangements, agreed by the major examination bodies concerned, all examinations offered to the 14 to 16 age group will be subject to approval and monitoring by the Secondary Examinations Council in the same way as GCSE courses.

All single-subject courses will be approved against the existing GCSE national criteria. New criteria are being introduced for approving integrated courses, that is those which cover a range of subjects and occupy most of a pupil's time. Approved courses will be offered in schools from September 1988.

These arrangements are based on advice made to my right hon. Friend by the SEC in the light of consultation on the report of a working party chaired by Mr. R. S. Johnson, director of education for Leeds. We are grateful to the SEC for its advice and to the working party for its recommendations.

Our proposals for a national curriculum, which my right hon. Friend intends to present to the House this coming Session, will put these arrangements on a statutory basis. They may also necessitate changes to the integrated course criteria.

Copies of the interim integrated course criteria have been placed in the Library.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the Green Paper on permanent arrangements for settling teachers' pay and conditions will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today laid before Parliament a Green Paper entitled "Teachers' Pay and Conditions: a Consultative Document". Copies are available in the Vote Office.

Mr. Haselhurst asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions will be given its remit.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today written to Lord Chilver, the chairman of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions, a letter which sets out the issues on which the advice of the committee is sought. The text of my letter is as follows:

Lord Chilver FRS, FEng, CBIM
Chairman
Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions 27 October 1987

Dear Henry,

1. I am grateful to you and your colleagues for agreeing to be members of the Interim Advisory Committee. The purpose of this letter is to set out the issues on which the Government now seeks the Committee's advice.

2. As you know, the Committee has a statutory basis, Sub-sections (1) and (4) of Section 2 of the Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act provide that:

> "The Secretary of State shall appoint an Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions to examine and report to him on such matters relating to the remuneration and other conditions of employment of school teachers in England and Wales as he may refer to them."
> "The Secretary of State may give directions to the Committee with respect to matters referred to them as to considerations to which they are to have regard and financial or other constraints to which their recommendations are to be subject, and as to the time within which they are to report to him."

3. Sub-section (5) of Section 2 provides that the Committee shall give notice of matters referred to the Committee and of any relevant directions to the appropriate associations of local education authorities and any individual local education authority with whom consultation appears desirable, bodies representing the interests of governors of voluntary schools and organisations representing school teachers, so as to afford them a reasonable opportunity of submitting evidence and representations.

4. In accordance with Section 2 of the Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1987 I invite the Interim Advisory Committee to examine and report on the following matters subject to the considerations in paragraph 5 and to the constraints in paragraph 6.

- (i) What changes should be made in the figures for salaries and allowances, and other details, set out in the Pay section of the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1987?
- (ii) Should there be any modifications to the provision for differentials within the pay structure? In particular do the differentials between heads' salaries and deputies' salaries and between heads' and deputies' salaries on the one hand, and other teachers' salaries on the other, reflect appropriately the responsibilities of heads and deputies in primary and secondary schools (including special schools)?

(iii) In the light of the operation of the arrangements in the Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1987 should there be any modifications to the provision relating to teachers' duties?

(iv) Should there be any change in London area allowances, and should any other regional variations in salaries be introduced taking account of shortages of teachers in particular areas and of particular skills?

(v) Is the existing social priority allowance still appropriate?

5. In considering these matters I direct the Committee under sub-section (4) of Section 2 to have regard to the following considerations.

(i) The Government's view is that school teachers' pay and conditions of service should be such as to enable the maintained school system to recruit, retain and motivate sufficient teachers of the required quality both nationally and at local level within what can be afforded.

(ii) The School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1987 sets out a new pay structure and a new definition of teachers' duties and working time. It was prepared taking account of work undertaken during the long period of discussions between the local authority associations and the teachers' unions with the assistance of ACAS, the recommendations in the Main Report, and views expressed in consultations with local education authority associations, teacher unions and bodies representing the interests of governors of voluntary schools. The Government does not intend to make major changes to the pay structure consisting of a main professional scale and five rates of incentive allowances or to the provisions relating to teachers' duties and working time for 1988-89.

6. I further direct under sub-section (4) of Section 2 that the Committee's recommendations are to be subject to the following constraints.

(i) The rates of salaries and allowances to be recommended by the Committee shall be in respect of the period 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989. The Committee may also consider and make recommendations about the London area allowances from 1 July 1987.

(ii) The recommendations of the Committee should be such that they do not cost more than an additional £300 million in the 1988-89 financial year or in later years.

7. My Department will in due course place evidence before the Committee in relation to these matters.

8. I further direct the Committee to report to me the results of their examination of these matters, with their recommendations and such other advice relating to these matters as they think fit, by 31 March 1988. Sub-section 7 of Section 2 of the Act requires me to arrange for your report to be published.

Yours sincerely
KENNETH BAKER

ENERGY

National Grid

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Energy what contingency arrangements he proposes to make for national or regional emergencies affecting the national grid in the proposals he will be putting before Parliament for the privatisation of electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Our proposals for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry will ensure that the industry maintains the ability to operate the national grid in a flexible manner, during national and regional emergencies and at other times.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Frank Larsen and Others (Prosecution)

Mr. Spearing asked the Attorney-General if, pursuant to his statement and answers given to the House on Friday, 23 October, he will list those criminal charges which on available evidence, could be made against the persons discharged from Lambeth magistrates court; and if he will request the Director of Public Prosecution to consider prosecutions accordingly.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has already considered all the available evidence and all possible criminal proceedings arising therefrom. It is not his practice, nor is it mine, to detail allegations, whether or not they are capable of substantiation, against persons who are not subject to criminal proceedings.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

India

Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the total aid budget given to India in the past financial year by Her Majesty's Government, and (b) the estimated aid budget for India in the coming financial year; and what proportion of Her Majesty's Government aid budget comprises loans to the Indian Government to be paid back to Her Majesty's Government with interest.

Mr. Eggar: Firm figures for gross public expenditure on aid in the last financial year are not yet available by country. In the calendar year 1986, gross public expenditure on aid to India was £143·5 million.

It is not our practice to reveal planning allocations for future years: these are of a provisional nature.

All aid expenditure in India in 1986 was in the form of grants, which have been the standard form of aid to India since 1975.

Aid Budget

Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what was the total United Kingdom overseas aid budget for the last financial year as a percentage of United Kingdom gross national product;

(2) if he will list the total percentage of United Kingdom gross national product given as overseas aid in comparison with similar percentages of the member nations of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Eggar: The percentages of gross national product given in 1986 as net official development assistance by European Community states which are members of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development were:

	Percentage
Belgium	0·48
Denmark	0·89
France (excluding overseas departments and territories)	0·49
Germany	0·43
Ireland	0·28
Italy	0·40
Netherlands	1·00
United Kingdom	0·32

Details of other European Community member states are not available for 1986.

Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total overseas aid budget given by Her Majesty's Government to (a) Bangladesh, (b) Pakistan and (c) Sri Lanka in the last financial year; and what proportion of this aid comprised loans to be paid back to Her Majesty's Government with interest.

Mr. Eggar: Firm figures for gross public expenditure on aid in the last financial year are not yet available by country. In the calendar year 1986, gross public expenditure on aid to Bangladesh, Pakistan and Sri Lanka was as follows, excluding transactions by the Commonwealth Development Corporation:

	£ million
Bangladesh	38·3
Pakistan	20·7
Sri Lanka	13·4

None of these disbursements was in respect of an interest-bearing loan. Since 1975 the standard form of aid to these countries has been grant. In addition, the Commonwealth Development Corporation disbursed £2 million to Sir Lanka in 1986 in loan form.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Jonathan Wash

Sir Trevor Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the death of Jonathan Wash in the Ivory Coast on 19 November 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The file on this case prepared by the examining magistrate in the Ivory Coast has been sent to the Bedfordshire police who are conducting an investigation into Mr. Wash's death at the request of the Bedfordshire coroner. A team from the Bedfordshire police expects to visit the Ivory Coast shortly.

Citizenship

Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many citizens of (a) India, (b) Pakistan and (c) Bangladesh were granted full United Kingdom citizenship for each year since and including 1983;

(2) how many citizens of (a) India, (b) Pakistan and (c) Bangladesh applied unsuccessfully for United Kingdom citizenship for each year since and including 1983.

Mr. Renton: I have been asked to reply.

Grants of citizenship by nationality are published annually in Home Office statistical bulletins, most recently in bulletin 29/87; the figures requested are given in the table. Corresponding information on refusals of applications for citizenship is not readily available.

Grants of British citizenship

Numbers

Previous citizenship or nationality	1983	1984	1985	1986
India	7,865	12,567	5,907	3,833
Pakistan	7,728	10,272	6,931	4,882
Bangladesh	2,234	3,787	2,968	2,748

EMPLOYMENT

Community Programme

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from voluntary organisations on Merseyside about planned changes in the operation of the community programme; if he plans to meet such organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have received correspondence from a number of hon. Members on this matter. I have already met national representatives of the voluntary sector to discuss the proposed improvements to community programme provision, but I have no current plans to meet voluntary organisations from Merseyside.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the current levels of unemployment in France, Italy, West Germany, the United States of America and the United Kingdom respectively; and what were the comparable figures of the calendar years 1973 and 1982, respectively, for each country.

Mr. Lee: Following is the information requested. The figures are not fully comparable becaue of national differences in definitions and the methods of compiling the statistics.

Thousands

	Current level (Seasonally adjusted—latest month)	Annual average
		1973	1982
France	2,638 (July)	394	2,000
Italy	3,233 (May)	1,005	2,163
West Germany	2,255 (September)	274	1,855
United States of America	7,221 (August)	4,365	10,678
United Kingdom[1]	2,775 (September)	545	2,626

[1] Excluding school leavers on consistent basis, allowing for changes in coverage.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing, in respect of the most recent date for which figures are available, the percentage of unemployed men in France, Belgium, West Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States of America respectively, who have been unemployed for a year or more; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is given in the following table. The figures are not directly comparable because of national differences in definitions and methods of compiling the statistics. In particular, the figures for the United States of America are based on surveys rather than registrations at unemployment offices.

Percentage of unemployed men who were unemployed for a year or more in 1986

France	28
Belgium	52
West Germany	32
United Kingdom	46
United States of America	11

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Meat Imports

Mr. Wray asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures Her Majesty's Government will take so as to strictly abide by the European Community ban of hormone treated meat imports from the United States of America.

Mr. Gummer: The Imported Food Regulations 1984 give powers to prohibit, by notice in the London Gazette, the import of meat and meat products which do not satisfy the relevant requirements of EC legislation.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he plans to meet the Farm Animal Welfare Council working group on religious slaughter before announcing his conclusions on the Farm Animal Welfare Council report on religious slaughter.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Yes. In fact yesterday I met the chairman of the Farm Animal Welfare Council and members of the council's working group on religious slaughter.

Organic Farming

Mr. Colvin asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the definition of organic farming used for the purposes of his Department.

Mr. Gummer: My Department does not currently use any one definition of organic farming. However, the United Kingdom Register of Organic Food Standards has recently been established by Food From Britain to consider the question of standards to be observed in organic production and I shall seek advice from that body as required.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he now has concerning the number of farmers, in total and by county in England and Wales, who are using (a) organic methods and (b) low-input, low-output methods.

Mr. Gummer: Such information is not currently available. In due course, however, it should be possible to produce data on the number of farmers using organic methods and who have registered with the United Kingdom Register of Organic Food Standards.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect the operation of the Sheep Variable Premium (Protection of Payments) (Amendment) Order 1983 (S.I. 1983/1009) and the (Recovery Powers) Regulations 1983 (S.I. 1983/1010) have had on sheep meat prices and the cost of the sheep variable premium scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: These regulations form a necessary part of the sheep variable premium scheme operated in Great Britain. Their effects on prices or SVPS costs cannot be meaningfully isolated.

Freezer Trawlers

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the freezer trawlers which received de-commissioning grants, the amount of grant in each case, and the amount of money obtained by the sale of each of these vessels; how much money was paid by the state, by way of a grant, to assist in the construction of each of these vessels; and if he is able to estimate the annual depreciation of each of these vessels.

Mr. Gummer: Information about decommissioning grants and construction grants paid in respect of 17 freezer trawlers is shown in the table. The decommissioning scheme did not require vessel owners to supply my Department with details of the selling prices. I am therefore not able to estimate the annual depreciation of decommissioned vessels.

Vessel Name	Decommissioning Grant £	National Construction Grant £
Arctic Raider	484,400	113,177
Arctic Freebooter	587,600	145,496

Sharks

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many basking sharks were taken from British territorial waters in each of the past five years; which countries took them; for what purposes; what is the estimated population of basking sharks in British waters; and if he will consider a total ban on their being fished.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 22 October 1987, c. 890]: The only known directed fisheries for basking sharks in British fishery limits are carried out by Norwegian vessels fishing within quotas allocated under the EC-Norway fisheries agreement and by an individual Scottish fisherman who has taken a number of basking sharks each year since 1983 in the Clyde and the Irish sea.

The Norwegian quota is 400 tonnes of basking shark liver.

In the last three years Norwegian catches against this quota are understood to have been 48·7 tonnes, 39·4 tonnes and 13 tonnes liver weight respectively, taken in ICES area VIIg (Celtic sea), only part of which falls within British fishery limits. Information on catches in earlier years is not readily available.

As regards the Scottish catches, it is not the normal practice to publish statistics relating to an individual enterprise, but the catches have declined substantially in the last three years.

The main purpose for which basking sharks are caught is for their livers, which are used for the production of liver oil products. It is understood that the reduced catches in recent years reflect reduced demand.

There is no estimate available of the population of basking sharks in British fishery limits. In common with many other species which in British waters are at the limits of their north eastern Atlantic distribution, these are likely to be subject to natural fluctuations in local abundance.

The Nature Conservancy Council has recommended that basking sharks should be protected in United Kingdom territorial waters under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. This recommendation is currently being considered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health Boards

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the per capita expenditure and revenue allocations of each of the four area health boards in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The revenue allocation for each board in 1987-88 and the corresponding per capita figure, based on mid-1986 population estimates are:

	£	£ per capita
Northern	95,472,000	252
Southern	90,199,000	312
Eastern	320,439,000	499
Western	88,344,000	344

This information is meaningless for the purposes of comparison between boards. Estimated board populations do not coincide with actual catchment populations for many services; for example, regional medical services, acute hospital services, psychiatric and mental handicap hospital services.

Royal Ulster Constabulary (Code of Conduct)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) when the Royal Ulster Constabulary code of conduct as approved by the Police Authority (Northern Ireland), will be published;

(2) whether he will place a copy of the Royal Ulster Constabulary code of conduct, as approved by the Police Authority (Northern Ireland), in the Library.

Mr. Tom King: The Chief Constable has issued a document entitled "Professional Policy Ethics" to be incorporated in the RUC manual, which is an internal document for police use only. Any decision on publication is a matter for the Chief Constable.

Payment for Debt (Temporary Provisions) Act 1972

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have had deductions made under the provisions of the Payment for Debt (Temporary Provisions) Act 1972 from moneys due to them from state bodies, in each year since the passage of the legislation, broken down according to religion and local authority area.

Mr. Stanley: Information on the number of people from whom deductions have been made under the Payments for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1971 in respect of moneys due to them from state bodies is not readily available in the form requested and could not be compiled except at disproportionate cost.

United States of America (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost to the British Government of the recent 11-day trip by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to the United States of America.

Mr. Tom King: I regret that the information requested is not yet available. I shall write to the hon. Member with the detailed information as soon as possible.

Contraception

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the breakdown of numbers of individuals receiving contraceptive advice and treatment (1) by contraceptive method and (2) by source of treatment clinic or general practitioner in Northern Ireland for each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. The information available is given in the table.

Table A

Year	Health[1] and Social Services Boards	General Practitioners[1]			Total
		Oral Contraceptives	Intrauterine Devices	Total
1982	[3]60,064	35,379	1,429	36,808	96,872
1983	[3]64,542	39,635	1,558	41,193	105,735
1984	74,660	39,139	1,950	41,089	115,749
1985	75,483	40,424	2,010	42,434	117,917

[2] Numbers of individuals attending for advice and treatment.

[3] Figures for Western health and social services board not available.

Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of abortions undertaken in each health authority area since 1967.

Mr. Needham: In Northern Ireland abortions are carried out only on therapeutic grounds where the life of the woman is threatened by the pregnancy or where continuance of the pregnancy is likely to cause grave danger to her physical or mental health.

Statistical information is not collected in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Gynaecological Operations

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each health board the number of outstanding gynaecological operations.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the total number of patients, by health and social services board, awaiting admission to a gynaecological bed at 30 June 1987 was:

	Number
Eastern Board	1,058
Northern Board	263
Southern Board	284
Western Board	496

Hospitals

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is his policy on the maintenance of acute hospital services facility in Down unit of management;

(2) if he accepts the findings of PA Management Consultants in respect of hospital services in Down unit of management which was presented by Down district council to the Department of Health and Social Services.

Mr. Needham: As the hon. Member knows, decisions on the pattern of hospital services are in the first instance a matter for health and social services boards. I understand, however, that in its area strategic plan for 1987 to 1992, a copy of which is available in the Library, the Eastern board has concluded that it should attempt to maintain acute services at the Down hospital over the current planning period.

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he is prepared to instruct the Eastern health board to make an allocation from the capital budget towards the construction of a new hospital to replace the Down hospital, Downpatrick;

(2) what is his policy on the need for a new hospital building programme in Downpatrick.

Mr. Needham: It is not for me to instruct boards about the need for specific capital developments in their areas. Boards are responsible for the planning and management of services in their areas and must assess not only the justification for each specific proposal but the priority of such proposals in relation to other demands on resources. Since the replacement of the Down hospital would involve major capital expenditure it would require the approval of the Department of Health and Social Services. The Department, however, has not yet received any formal proposal from the Eastern board for such a capital scheme.

Castlewellan Factory

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what purpose the Moss Lane factory, Castlewellan has been transferred from the IDB to the Department of Health and Social Security.

Mr. Needham: The lease on premises at Bessbrook, Co. Armagh, which the DHSS uses for emergency stores, expired on 30 September 1986. The Moss Lane factory was declared surplus to IDB requirements and first offered to Government Departments and public bodies under normal disposal rules. The offer was taken up by DHSS which had an immediate need to find alternative accommodation for the stores.

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the exact location and size of the existing site in the south of Northern Ireland which it is proposed the Castlewellan factory will replace.

Mr. Needham: The present store is located within the industrial estate on the outskirts of Bessbrook Village, Co. Armagh. This store is approximately 25,000 sq ft and occupies four floors of a former mill.

Nuclear War

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many stores of medical supplies for use after a nuclear exchange are there in Northern Ireland; and what is their location.

Mr. Needham: There are two such stores in Northern Ireland, one at Bessbrook, Co. Armagh and one at Ballymoney, Co. Antrim.

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what district councils will be serviced by the Castlewellan factory in a post-nuclear situation.

Mr. Needham: All 26 district councils.

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether there will be any communication between the Castlewellan factory store and the three nuclear stations which the Government have proposed to site in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: It is assumed that the nuclear stations referred to are the proposed emergency centres which would be used among other things in the event of a nuclear attack. There will be no special communication link between the Castlewellan factory store and any of the three proposed emergency centres other than by the public telephone network.

Floods

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, in view of the recent severe flooding, what additional resources are to be given to help those affected by flood damage; and what financial aid will be given to farmers who have suffered stock losses.

Mr. Viggers: It is too early yet to say what measures if any might be taken, but it is a general rule that the Government do not compensate for losses caused by the weather. Nevertheless, my colleagues and I are looking at the nature of the circumstances surrounding the flooding emergency in Northern Ireland.

Police Secondments

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many officers from police forces in England, Wales and Scotland were seconded to duties in Northern Ireland in each of the past three years.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 22 October 1987, c.877]: No formal secondments have been made, but under normal co-operation arrangements some officers may have been temporarily attached to the RUC over this period.

DEFECTIVE PRINTING

SCOTLAND

Drug Abuse

56 Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures for drug abuse increase in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In Scotland in 1986, 616 new addicts were notified by medical practitioners to the Home Office and 348 former addicts were re-notified. In the same year there were 3,437 seizures of controlled drugs by the police and HM Customs and Excise in Scotland and 5,318 drugs offences were recorded by the police.

There were increases in the total number of seizures and in the number of drugs offences recorded compared to 1985 but the rates of increase were lower than in the previous year. The total number of addicts notified in 1986 decreased by 12·5 per cent. compared to 1985 when there was a 51 per cent. increase over 1984.

These statistics are not an accurate measure of the extent of drug misuse but may serve as indicators of general trends. These and other indicators suggest that the problem may not now be increasing in scale at the same rate as experienced in 1980-85. The incidence of drug misuse remains unacceptably high, however, and the Government will continue to accord a high priority to tackling the problem.

Housing

Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the housing stock in Scotland is owned by local authorities or governmental agencies; and what information he has about the equivalent proportions in other European countries.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The percentage of housing stock in Scotland owned by local authorities, new towns and the Scottish Special Housing Association at 31 December 1986 was 49·4 per cent. Comparative figures are not readily available for many European countries, partly due to differences between countries in the type of institutions and organisations which finance the provision of rented housing and the allocation of these between the public and private sector. Information available on the breakdown of tenure is shown in the table.

All figures including totals have been individually rounded.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make and publish a detailed analysis of waiting lists for public sector houses in each district and island area in order to ascertain whether there are enough suitable houses available to let to meet local needs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A two-year research project, to assess the extent to which waiting lists can be used as an indication of housing need, was announced by the Government in December 1986.

Public Advice Services

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the total level of Government spending, including urban aid, as well as expenditure by the Manpower Services Commission and the unemployed voluntary action fund, on independent public advice services in Scotland for the financial years 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Lang: Many Government-supported programmes and projects, for example, funded through Manpower Services Commission schemes, contain elements of advice and information but the total amount of Government support for independent public advice services cannot be readily quantified.

Information on public advice services funded through the urban programme and the unemployed voluntary action fund is set out.

School Leavers

Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils at local authority schools in Scotland left without any academic qualifications in 1985-86; what was the comparable figure in similar schools in England and Wales; and if he will publish a breakdown of the overall Scottish figure by regional council.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: 19,385 of the pupils leaving Scottish education authority schools in 1985-86 (24·4 per cent. of the total) did not hold a Scottish certificate of education (SCE) qualification. However, some of these school leavers would have held qualifications such as the certificate of secondary education (CSE), the SCOTVEC national certificate or other qualifications. Information on the numbers involved is not available.

The table gives a breakdown by region and islands area of the school leavers not holding an SCE qualification, together with the percentages these represent of all school leavers in the respective areas.

74,705 of the pupils leaving maintained schools in England and Wales in 1985-86 (10·4 per cent. of the total) did not hold a graded CSE or GCE qualification. Because these figures include CSE awards, they are not directly comparable with the figures for Scotland.

Comparisons will be easier once the GCSE and SCE standard grade examination have been introduced.

Education

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of pupils on school rolls and the pupil to teacher ratio in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in the Western Isles for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is contained in the statistical bulletins on "Pupils and Teachers in Education Authority Primary and Secondary Schools" which are published annually. Copies of these are held in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils from the Western Isles have obtained places in higher or further education in each year since 1979; and if he will express that number as a percentage of the age group for each year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Estimates of the percentages of school leavers from the Western Isles entering full-time further education have been published for sessions 1979-80 and 1981-82 in Scottish Education Department statistical bulletins (Nos. 2/E1/1983 and 10/E1/1983), copies of which are held in the House of Commons Library. The corresponding estimate for 1983-84 school leavers, to be published in a forthcoming bulletin, is 31 per cent.

These estimates must be treated with caution since, for the Western Isles, they are based on small sample numbers.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total numbers of pupils on school rolls and the pupil to teacher ratio in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in the Monklands, West constituency for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Monklands, West can be obtained from Strathclyde regional council.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce legislation to provide for participation by parents in the management of private schools.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total numbers of pupils on school rolls and the pupil to teacher ratio in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in East Lothian for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in East Lothian can be obtained from Lothian regional council.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of pupils on school meals and the pupil-teacher ratio in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in the Cunninghame, North constituency since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Cunninghame, North can be obtained from Strathclyde regional council.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils from East Lothian have obtained places in higher or further education in each year since 1979; and if he will express that number as a percentage of the age group for each year.

Mr. Doran asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils from the Aberdeen constituency obtain places in higher or further education in each year since 1979; and if he will express that number as a percentage of the age group for each year.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils from Cunninghame, North have serious higher or further education plans in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not readily available.

School Boards

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate and publish the cost of setting up school boards in the Western Isles.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I would expect the cost of implementation of our proposals to be a very small element in the education budget. Costs could vary depending on factors such as the number of boards established and the range of responsibilities they had.

Abortions

Mr. Doran asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of abortions performed on women residents in the Grampian health board area in 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

	Number
1985	1,087
1986	[1]1,186

Legal Aid

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his discussions with the Law Society of Scotland and other bodies about the legal aid system; and if he intends to propose any amendments to the legal aid regulations and legislation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations from the Law Society and others, and observations from the Scottish Legal Aid Board, on the operation of the new legal aid legislation. He hopes to reach a view on the various suggestions by the end of November.

Torness Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will extend the zone covered by contingency emergency plans for Torness nuclear power station to a radius of 25 km; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 14 May at column 302.

Mortgage Defaulters

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish information available to him concerning the number of mortgage defaulters in Scotland in each of the last five years involving (a) private sector houses and (b) public sector houses purchased under the right to buy legislation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Rents

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on changes in rent levels in Scotland since 1979 and on the Government's policy for rent levels and measures to protect tenants on low incomes in the future.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Average local authority rents in Scotland have risen from £4·92 per house per week in 1979-80 to £14·65 per week in 1987-88. Over the same period average SSHA rents have risen from £5·43 to £17·28, and average Scottish new town rents have risen from £6·36 to £18·26. Average registered rents in private sector unfurnished accommodation have risen from £3·50 per house per week in 1979-80 to £16·29 in 1986-87 and registered housing association rents have risen from £7·58 per house per week to £19·17 over the same period.

Responsibility for setting rent levels for public sector housing lies with the individual local authority or agency concerned, not with the Secretary of State. The Government, however, have a legitimate interest in determining the amount of overall public expenditure which the nation can afford to spend on housing in Scotland. In recent years, the Government's priority has been to reduce expenditure on indiscriminate housing subsidy and to concentrate the resources available upon capital investment in the public sector housing stock, whilst targeting subsidies directly to those individual tenants who need help with their housing costs.

Public sector rents in Scotland are generally lower than those south of the border. It is the Government's policy to encourage authorities to set rents that enable them to meet more of their housing costs from revenue, but to restrict excessive year-on-year rent increases by continuing Exchequer subsidies. For those tenants who have difficulty in meeting their full housing costs direct assistance is, and will continue to be, available through the housing benefit system. In addition, most increases in rent following registration of a higher rent for private sector and housing association tenants are subject to limits on the amount by which the existing rent may be increased each year.

Housing Policy

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on Government policy towards people who want to remain or become public sector tenants; and if he will undertake to ensure that Scottish Special Housing Association tenants will have the option of remaining public sector tenants if they so choose.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government's proposals for the future development of housing policy will be set out in full in a White Paper which it is intended to publish shortly. My right hon. and learnd Friend has already made it clear that tenants of the Scottish Special Housing Association would remain public sector tenants, with all of the statutory rights which this Government have conferred on such tenants, under the Government's proposals to create a new unified housing development agency for Scotland, Scottish Homes.

Rating Reform

Dr. Reid asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the nature and estimated amount of funding given to local authorities in Scotland for the purpose of collecting the proposed community charge.

Mr. Lang: Provision for local authority current expenditure provision in 1988-89 includes £9 million for the cost of introducing the community charge and £3 million for the cost of related changes to housing benefit arrangements. Provision for subsequent years will reflect the cost of collecting the community charge in the same way as for the cost of rate collection at present. Local authority expenditure is supported by rate support grant from central Government. In 1989-90 this will be replaced by revenue support grant. Both of these are grants in aid of the general revenues of authorities and are not hypothecated to individual items of expenditure.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. Ingram asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average waiting time from the date of application for regional development grants to date of approval or rejection by constituency.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of applications from companies which have been rejected in each calendar year since 1984 are as follows:

	1984	1985	1986	1987
RDG I	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a
RDG II	[1] Nil	9	19	32

[1] No applications submitted

Mr. Ingram asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of companies in the East Kilbride constituency which have been unsuccessful in their application for regional deveopment grants in each year since 1984.

Mr. Lang: I regret the information is not readily available on a constituency basis; however, the average processing time in Scotland for application for regional development grants is currently 16 weeks.

Hypothermia

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of deaths in Scotland from hypothermia for each month since January 1981 broken down by age group.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987, c. 744]: The information is as follows:

DEFENCE

Absent Without Leave

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of service personnel in each branch of the services were absent without leave in each of the last four years; and what was the number in each branch.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 2 April 1987, at column 566. The figures for those deserting or being declared absent without leave given in that answer can be expressed as percentages of the average strength of the services in the years in question as follows:

	Royal Navy and Royal Marines	Army	Royal Air Force
1983	0·21	0·42	0·02
1984	0·16	0·41	0·02
1985	0·17	0·34	0·01
1986	0·15	0·32	0·01

Zimbabwe and Mozambique

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the total numbers of the Zimbabwe and Mozambique armed forces who have received training in the United Kingdom since 1980.

Mr. Freeman: Some members of the Zimbabwean armed forces received training at Ministry of Defence establishments in the United Kingdom in each of the years 1980 to financial year 1986-87. A small number of Mozambiquan military personnel also received training at defence establishments in the United Kingdom in the financial years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87.

It is not our policy to reveal the details of training provided to foreign armed forces since such agreements are confidential between Her Majesty's Government and the Governments concerned.

Helicopter Rescue Service

Mr. Galloway asked the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements climbers and hillwalkers will be expected to make in the event of privatisation of the helicopter rescue service.

Mr. Freeman: On its initiative, Bristow Helicopters Ltd. has put forward proposals advocating the transfer to commercial contractors of the search and rescue helicopter service currently provided by the RN and RAF. We are studying its ideas but have not yet reached any conclusions. It would therefore be premature to comment on arrangements for any particular interest group in the event of privatisation.

While the Ministry of Defence's concern is primarily the recovery of military personnel, I can assure the hon. Member that the decisions taken will reflect the Government's commitment to maintaining an efficient search and rescue service, for both military personnel and civilians.

Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital (Young Patient)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances an 11-year-old girl came to be held in a psychiatric ward at Queen Elizabeth military hospital, Woolwich; what steps have been taken to obtain more appropriate care and treatment for her; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I shall write to the hon. Member.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Waiting Lists

1. Mr. Vaz asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to reduce waiting lists in Leicestershire.

Mr. Newton: Leicestershire district health authority is receiving £151,500 from the waiting list fund. This will enable its hospitals to treat 210 extra in-patients and 500 extra out-patients. This is in addition to the measures being taken within existing resources to improve waiting lists and times.

Income Support

17. Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to set the levels of income support; and if he will make a statement.

38. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends fully to compensate claimants on income support for having to pay an element of rates.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Members to my right hon. Friend's statement to the House today.

Disabled People

18. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what current proposals he has for further help for the disabled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: In developing all our policies we continue to bear in mind the special circumstances of disabled people. We expect to be greatly helped by the results of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' survey of disabled people.

Health (Lifestyle)

20. Mrs. Gillian Shephard asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures the Government are taking to encourage the adoption of healthier lifestyles.

Mrs. Currie: Together with the Health Education Authority we are running a number of campaigns designed to provide the information that will help people choose healthier ways of living. One of these—the "Look After Your Heart" campaign—is a national strategy aimed at encouraging the adoption of healthier lifestyles in England and reducing the amount of unnecessary death and illness from heart disease. We are firmly committed to taking this campaign forward into the 1990s.

Cancer Screening

21. Mr. Mullin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the cervical cancer screening programme.

Mrs. Currie: We are committed to reducing mortality from cervical cancer. Sir Roy Griffiths, deputy chairman of the National Health Service management board, is leading a team to oversee the implementation of the Government's policies on cancer screening. Health authorities are on target to have computerised call and recall schemes for cervical cytology in operation by next spring. Laboratory and other back-up services are being expanded. The Department is currently consulting on revised guidance on all aspects of cervical cytology screening and related services, which it intends to issue later this year.

24. Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in the introduction of a cervical cytology call and recall system by the South Bedfordshire Health Authority.

Mrs. Currie: The cervical cytology call and recall scheme for south Bedfordshire is operated by the Bedfordshire family practitioner committee, and came into operation in January 1985. The scheme covers the whole of the county, with costs being shared by the two client authorities, North and South Bedfordshire health authorities. The scheme, which is computerised, covers all women between the ages of 35 and 60 who are registered with a GP.

Following our request in February this year, the family practitioner committee and the district health authorities will be making plans to reduce the minimum age to 20.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date he received an application from Quest for a Test for Cancer for funding cervical smear tests using an integrating microdensitometer; and when he expects to reach a decision on the application.

Mrs. Currie: An application for DHSS funding for a research development project entitled "The screening of cervical neoplasia by quantitative assay of a hydrolysed DNA component present in the nuclei of cells exfoliated from the cervix uteri", was received from Dr. A. M. Sincock on 31 July 1987. This method would employ an integrated microdensitometer. Dr. Sincock is employed as a senior research fellow in the academic department of obstetrics and gynaecology in the Middlesex hospital; his work is currently supported by Quest for a Test for Cancer and the Newman Foundation. The application has been sent to academic referees. A decision on funding is expected by the end of November.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans further to assist family practitioner committees in meeting the Government's targets for cervical cytology.

Mr. Newton: I have now authorised an allocation of funds to four family practitioner committees whose existing equipment is in need of upgrading in order to meet the timetable to which the Government are committed. Those FPCs are:

	£
Devon	46,000
Kirkless	40,250
Croydon	8,000
Bury	1,500

Child Abuse

22. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to improve the procedures for dealing with child abuse and neglect.

Mr. Newton: In my reply to my hon. Friend on 30 June, at column 69, I referred to the new guidance and circular on multi-agency working which was issued in draft last year. I also referred to the special initiative to help training of professional staff. Two stages of this have started. Further projects are being considered. In my statement to the House on 9 July, at columns 526-27, announcing the inquiry at Cleveland, I referred to the preparation of practice guidelines for social workers and for nurses and of guidance for doctors on the clinical diagnosis of sexual abuse. I would expect all this work, including the guidance on inter-agency working, to be published when we have considered the report from Mrs. Justice Butler-Sloss on Cleveland.

Social Fund

23. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to modify the draft guidelines issued on the social fund in the light of the representations he has received.

Mr. Scott: Yes. The final version of the social fund manual will incorporate some of the points raised by those who commented on the draft.

47. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received since the issue of draft guidelines for the social fund.

Mr. Portillo: A total of 108 representations were received on the draft social fund manual.

Schools (Charges)

25. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to seek to change social security legislation in order for charges for music lessons, field trips, school visits and books to be met, where the parents of pupils are in receipt of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Scott: It is not the purpose of the supplementary benefits scheme to help with educational expenses; these fall within the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Pensions

19. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in implementing new pension choices made available as a result of the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: We have made considerable progress. After an extensive period of consultation, we laid regulations in July which established the detailed framework for the new pensions choices.

We are now well on course towards the introduction next April of the changes affecting occupational schemes, in particular the start of money purchase contracting-out. In July 1988 we will complete the process of reform by giving people the right to take a personal pension in place of state earnings-related pension scheme.

29. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to seek powers to link the pension received for age with a fixed percentage of the average manual wage.

Mr. Scott: No. We are pledged to maintain the value of retirement pension against inflation, and the legislation gives power to increase it further if it is appropriate to do so. We do not believe a restriction such as is suggested would be appropriate.

39. Mrs. Mowlam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to phase in an equalised pension age for women and men.

Mr. Scott: We acknowledge the arguments for equalising state pension age for men and women, but the social and economic implications of doing so are considerable. We need to examine these in full before deciding whether to make any particular change.

42. Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how the Government propose to make it easier for employers to set up new pension schemes.

Mr. Scott: From 6 April 1988, employers will be able to set up occupational pension schemes which can be contracted out of the state earnings-related pension scheme on a money purchase basis, instead of having to make the open-ended promise of a salary-related pension. The minimum level of contribution required will be equal to the contracted-out national insurance rebate, so a scheme could be set up at virtually no cost to the employer, and new schemes will also qualify for an extra financial incentive until 1993. In addition, we have already simplified the contracting-out conditions for employers with salary-related schemes.

Housing Benefit

26. Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations on the documents on the new housing benefit scheme he has received since they were issued in draft.

Mr. Portillo: Representations have been received so far from each of the local authority associations consulted on the draft Housing Benefit Regulations under statutory arrangements. In addition, about 40 letters, containing general representations, have been received from individual local authorities and other organisations, to whom the regulations were sent for information.

NHS (Administration)

27. Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to improve the administration of the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on 23 July 1987 at columns 454-55.

Disability

28. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the results of the survey on disability presently being carried out.

Mr. Scott: The results of the survey of disabled people currently being carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys are expected to be published in instalments starting in 1988.

Resource Allocation Working Party

30. Mr. Robert G. Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the workings of the resources allocation working party formula for distribution of resources to health authorities.

Mr. Newton: The workings of the resource allocation working party (RAWP) formula for distribution of resources to health authorities are explained in two documents, "Sharing resources for health in England, Reports of the Resource Allocation Working Party 1976"; and "Report of the Advisory Group on Resource Allocation 1980".

In December 1985 the then Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Sutton Coldfield, (Mr. Fowler) asked the NHS management board to carry out a review to identify the scope for refining the RAWP formula and improving its measurement of need. The initial report on the review, published in December 1986, recommended a further programme of analysis and research which is now in progress.

Copies of all three reports are in the Library.

Elderly People

31. Mr. Riddick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how Britain's total expenditure on benefits and support for elderly people, as a proportion of gross domestic product, compares with that of other countries in the European Economic Community.

Mr. Portillo: Britain's total expenditure on the elderly as a proportion of gross domestic product was the third highest in the European Community in 1983, the latest year for which full information is available. Partial figures for 1984 show that Britain's expenditure had increased as a proportion of GDP, whilst that of other countries making a return had declined slightly. Full details are in the table.

Expenditure on programmes for old age as a proportion of GDP at market prices for EC member states (excluding Greece) in 1983

Source: Eurostat Social Protection Statistical Bulletins, March 1985.
Note: Figures include state and occupational pensions and cash benefits for the elderly, expenditure on residential and nursing homes, local authority services for the elderly and other expenditure on the elderly. They do not include the cost of health care or increases in pensions for dependants.

Well Women Centres

32. Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to encourage and support the establishment of a well woman centre in every health district.

Mrs. Currie: The establishment of well women centres to provide services such as cervical screening is an option open to all health authorities and one which a number have taken up. We welcome the additional flexibility that this model of service delivery offers but recognise that it is for individual health authorities to decide on the most appropriate method of providing services locally.

Trent Regional Health Authority

33. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will meet the chairman of the Trent regional health authority to discuss staff shortages.

Mrs. Currie: We have regular meetings with all regional chairmen to discuss a wide range of issues including manpower.

AIDS

34. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what additional funding is being provided in the current financial year in relation to HIV and AIDS.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South-West (Mrs. Shephard) on 23 October.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the AIDS public education campaign.

Mr. Moore: We embarked last year on a sustained campaign of health education to give the general public the basic facts about AIDS and HIV infection and to encourage changed attitudes to sexual and other behaviour, particularly among groups most at risk.

On 2 September I launched the second stage of the campaign, which concentrates on the risks of infection from the injection of drugs. As we have already announced, further stages of the campaign will be carried forward by the new health education authority in close co-operation with the other United Kingdom health education agencies and the Government Departments concerned.

Leeds (In-patients)

35. Mr. Kirkhope asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the reduction in the in-patient waiting list in the Leeds eastern district.

Mr. Newton: The latest available figures for March 1987 show that 6,064 people were on the in-patient waiting list in the Leeds eastern district health authority. Whilst the total list size is now some 7·1 per cent. higher than in March 1986, there has been a welcomed continuing fall in the numbers waiting over one year. On 31 March 1987, 907 people had been on the list for more than a year, 32·6 per cent. fewer than in March 1986.

Leeds eastern DHA has received £425,300 from the waiting list fund, for projects to enable its hospitals to treat 2,050 additional waiting list cases in 1987-88. This is in addition to the measures being taken to reduce waiting lists within existing resources.

Pensioners (Income)

36. Mr. Mans asked the Secretary of State for Social Services by how much pensioners' average weekly incomes have increased since 1979.

Mr. Scott: Between 1979 and 1985, the latest date for which information is available, pensioners' average weekly net incomes increased by some 18 per cent. in real terms.

Embryo Experiments

37. Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Government intend to bring forward legislation to clarify the law on embryo experiments.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 30 June at columns 80-81.

Long-term Sick and Disabled

40. Sir George Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much spending on the long-term sick and disabled has changed since 1979.

Mr. Scott: In 1979-80 expenditure on benefits and services for long-term sick and disabled people provided direct by the Department is estimated to have totalled £2,160 million. Latest estimates are that such expenditure in 1986-87 was about £6,130 million, an increase in real terms of 70 per cent.

Information on provision of services by health authorities and by local authorities specifically to this group is not available.

Severe Weather Payments

41. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to modify the severe weather payments scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 26 October.

Liverpool (NHS Services)

43. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will meet a deputation of hon. Members from Liverpool to discuss funding of the National Health Service in the city.

Mrs. Currie: As responsibility for the allocation of resources to Liverpool health authority lies with Mersey regional health authority, the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman first.

Social Security Reforms

44. Mr. Brazier asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how the introduction of the social security reforms will help to alleviate the unemployment and poverty traps.

Mr. Scott: One of the main aims of the reforms is to improve work incentives. The introduction next April of family credit, which is expected to help over twice as many low-income working families as family income supplement, and the closer alignment of help for people in and out of work, are expected to alleviate the unemployment trap. In addition, assessing income-related benefits on net, rather than gross, income eliminates the possibility that in-work income-related benefits reduce net spending power when earnings rise. This eliminates one of the worst features of the poverty trap.

Nurses (Working Hours)

45. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to seek to increase the proportion of a nurse's working day spent with patients.

Mr. Newton: It is the responsibility of individual health authorities to ensure that the most effective and efficient use is made of the nursing and midwifery work force. The Department assists by distributing management services reports on, for example, the work of hospital-based midwives and (shortly) night nursing services. It must be the aim of each employing authority to maximise the amount of time devoted to patient care.

South-East Thames (Non-urgent Surgery)

46. Mr. Evenett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time for non-urgent surgery in the south-east Thames region.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend the information he seeks in precisely the form requested. The estimated median interval between the date a patient was placed on the waiting list and admission as an in-patient to a surgical department of a NHS hospital in the South-East Thames regional health authority area during 1985, the latest year for which information is available centrally, was eight weeks.

Insulation Payments

48. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to introduce a new scheme for assistance with insulation payments to replace the existing scheme from April 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: When the current system of single payments of supplementary benefit for draught-proofing materials ends in April 1988 new arrangements will continue to provide support for the work of the community insulation projects. My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Energy announced on 8 April 1987, at columns 223–225, that from April 1988 help with the cost of draught-proofing materials will be provided through the Manpower Services Commission. The category of those eligible will be widened to include all households in receipt of income support, housing benefit or family credit. In the longer term, it is intended to include the cost of draught-proofing materials within a revised home improvement grant system.

Mersey Region (Waiting Lists)

49. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the waiting lists in the Mersey region.

Mr. Newton: On 31 March 1987 there were 29,147 people on the in-patient waiting list in Mersey regional health authority. This represents a fall of 1,632 (5·3 per cent.) since March 1986. The number of people waiting over a year for treatment has fallen by 18 per cent. to 6,257.

Mersey RHA has been allocated £1·35 million from the waiting list fund for 1987-88 for projects to enable the region to treat some 7,700 extra patients from the in-patient lists. This is in addition to the measures being taken to reduce waiting lists and times within existing resources.

Nurses (Pay)

50. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the future of levels of nurses' pay.

Mr. Newton: The pay of nurses, midwives and health visitors is determined on the recommendations of the independent Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives and Health Visitors. I understand that the review body will shortly be taking evidence from the health departments, trade unions and professional associations with a view to reporting to the Prime Minister in the spring of next year.

The Government have implemented all four reports of the independent review body since it was established in 1984. As a result, nurses' pay has risen by some 16 per cent. in real terms during this period and by nearly 30 per cent. in real terms since 1979.

Royal United Hospital, Bath

51. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to visit the new royal united hospital in Bath.

Mrs. Currie: The last complete development at this hospital included 168 acute beds and a boilerhouse, costing £4·4 million, and was opened on 31 March 1987. It is part of the largest ever sustained National Health Service building programme. Throughout England 480 schemes, each costing over £1 million, with a total value of over £3 billion, are at various stages of planning, design and construction.

Ministers have no plans to visit this hospital at present.

Review Procedures

52. Mr. Jack asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has for reviewing the effectiveness of the review procedures at both regional and district health authority level.

Mr. Newton: The Department keeps the system for conducting accountability reviews with regional health authorities under constant review, drawing on experience of past reviews to assess its effectiveness and ensuring that any necessary improvements are implemented. Reviews at district level are the responsibility of regional health authorities.

St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington

53. Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the St. Mary's hospital development in Paddington.

Mrs. Currie: The new 10-storey building, to be known as Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother wing, has been built at a cost of over £35 million. The wing has a total of 337 beds, 224 of which are allocated to surgical specialties, and when fully open it will provide a broad range of facilities. These include the accident and emergency department, which opened on 4 September and has one of the first computerised patient administration systems in London, the Paddington Green children's unit, eight operating theatres, an intensive care unit, and two day surgery units. Among other departments which form a part of the complex are the radiology department, facilities for the St. Mary's hospital medical school and central catering facilities.

This development is part of the largest health building programme in the history of the NHS. There are currently more than 480 building schemes each costing over £1 million at various stages of planning, design and construction. The total value of the programme is estimated to be over £3 billion and it will provide over 24,000 new hospital beds.

Nurse Recruitment (Thames Region)

54. Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the current position on nurse recruitment in the Thames region.

Mr. Newton: The ability to recruit varies considerably between health authorities. There are particular recruitment difficulties in mental illness, mental handicap and the specialist acute areas—theatres and intensive care. These recruitment difficulties are more marked in London and the south-east.

The NHS management board has commended a number of measures to improve the recruitment and retention of nursing and midwifery staff. It is also currently considering what further action may be required at national or local level in the light of the latest information about the recruitment and retention situation in London.

Bradwell New Geriatric Hospital, North Staffordshire

55. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the Bradwell new geriatric hospital in North Staffordshire.

Mrs. Currie: The Bradwell new geriatric hospital is due for completion at the end of October at a total cost of £5,260,821. The hospital's 96 beds and associated facilities are expected to open at the beginning of 1988.

Supplementary Benefit

57. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the discontinuation of the single payment for mothers on supplementary benefit.

Mr. Portillo: During the last 12 months we have received approximately 500 letters about the new maternity benefit arrangements. Some of these letters have referred to the discontinuation of supplementary benefit single payments for maternity expenses and their replacement by flat rate payments of £80 from the social fund.

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the average waiting time for a decision on supplementary benefit claims for (1) his Department's Hackney office, (2) his Department's Stoke newington office, (3) London north region and (4) London south region;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the number of non-caller claims for supplementary benefit received in the last four week period for which records are available, the percentage of non-caller claims awaiting a decision at the end of that four-week period; and if he will supply this information in respect of (1) his Department, Hackney office, (2) his Department, Stoke Newington office, (3) London north region as a whole and (4) London south region as a whole;

(3) if he will list in the Official Report the number of supplementary payment claims received by his Department in the last four week period, the total number of single payment claims which are awaiting a decision and the average waiting time between receipt of claims and a decision; and if he will supply this information in respect of (1) his Department, Hackney office, (2) his Department, Stoke Newington office, (3) London north region, and (4) London south region.

Mr. Portillo: The table sets out the information requested, where it is available, for the four-week period up to 22 September 1987.

Where the information is not available in the precise form requested the most relevant figures available have been quoted.

For four week period ending 22 September 1987	Hackney office	Stoke Newington	London north region	London south region
1. Claims to Supplementary Benefit Average Clearance Times	7 days	21 days	7 days	8 days
2. Non-caller Claims A. Number Received	885	673	63,229	60,415
B. Outstanding	329	629	25,113	24,781
C. B as a percentage of all non-caller claims outstanding	28 per cent.	49 per cent.	28 per cent.	30 per cent.
3. Single Payments Claims	No information is available on number received.
A. Decisions Made	396	265	26,621	23,468
B. Cases Outstanding (may involve more than one decision)	323	116	5,231	5,889
C. Average Clearance time	No information is available

Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers

58 Mr. David Porter asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on progress within the Whitley council on 1987 pay negotiations for medical laboratory scientific officers; and if he will make a statement about the Government's intention to recognise the professionalism of medical laboratory scientific officers with a better pay structure.

Mr. Newton: Pay is a matter for the Whitley council. I understand that on 5 October the management side made a pay offer to the staff side representing MLSOs about which it is now consulting its members. They also undertook to meet again as soon as possible to discuss proposals for restructuring MLSO grades.

Storm Damage

59 Mr Nelson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures he is taking to ensure the continued provision of health services in areas which have suffered damage and disruption from the storms on the night of the 15-16 October.

Mrs. Currie: Officials were in contact with health authorities in the south and east throughout Friday 16 October and monitored the situation throughout. It soon became clear that everything possible was being done to maintain health services and patient care despite damage to buildings and public utilities and disruption of communications and transport in many places.

The splendid response of hospital and ambulance staff in finding alternative means of getting to work and in many cases giving up their off-duty time ensured adequate staffing levels. Ambulance services were hard pressed but their problems lessened as roads were cleared and communications were restored. Fortunately there were no major incidents involving multiple serious casualties.

Emergency arrangements were made for a few patients requiring artifical ventilation or home dialysis. Where power supplies failed hospitals turned to their standby generators or to portable versions supplied by the Army.

It was necessary to curtail or postpone some out-patient clinics because of damage or transport problems. Some non-emergency operations were postponed to ease severe pressure on the South London blood transfusion centre. Blood donors responded to appeals, allowing the full blood supply to be resumed within a few days.

I was particularly glad that the Department had surveyed health authorities' contingency plans earlier this year and found them to be generally satisfactory. This form of monitoring will continue and we will consider any lessons learnt in the recent episode.

Disabled Persons Act 1986

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to speed up the implementation of the Disabled Persons Act 1986 during the current Session of Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he now has for implementing sections 1, 2, 3, 5, 6 and 7 of the Disabled Persons Act 1986; and whether he will estimate the cost of doing so under each section.

Mr. Scott: Discussions with the local authority associations on the costs of the various outstanding sections of the Act are proceeding, and decisions on the timing of implementation will be taken in the light of the outcome of those discussions. I met the local authority associations on 16 September, and there have subsequently been two meetings between the Department and the associations at official level. Recent discussions have concentrated on sections 5 and 6 of the Act, and I hope to make an announcement shortly about the implementation of those sections.

HIV Positive Patients (Dental Treatment)

Mr. Hinchliffe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific provision is proposed for the dental treatment within the National Health Service of HIV positive patients to avoid the possibility of cross-infection.

Mr. Newton: The chief dental officer issued guidance to all dentists in the hospital, community and general dental services in April of last year. This stressed the importance of following high standards of cross-infection control when treating patients. By following simple procedures dentists will be able to minimise the risks from exposure to the virus during the course of routine dental treatment.

Additionally, the guidance recommends specific precautions to be followed when the patient receiving treatment is a known carrier of HIV. At present, there are no plans to issue further guidance to dentists on this subject, though the need to do so is kept under regular review.

These measures may require some additional expenditure by general dental practitioners. Consequently, on the recommendation of the Dental Rates Study Group, the fees paid to practitioners in 1987-88 reflect amongst other factors exceptional expenditure on cross-infection procedures.

Ward Closures (West Berkshire)

Mr. Redwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning ward closures and other cuts in services in the West Berkshire district health authority area.

Mrs. Currie: We have received representations from the chairman of the West Berkshire district health authority, Reading council and from a number of hon. Members.

Health authorities are expected to live within their budgets. This means balancing the cost of increasing activity against other pressures. It is for health authorities to decide on suitable measures which will enable them to sustain activity within their budgets without detriment to essential services.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Redwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give figures for the last three years showing (a) the increase in spending on the National Health Service in England and Wales and (b) hospital bed reductions in England and Wales.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is as follows:

NHS Expenditure, England (Gross)

	£ million	Growth in cash percentage
1983-84	12,921	—
1984-85	13,871	7·4
1985-86	14,676	5·8
1986-87	15,762	7·4

Average number of beds available daily in NHS hospitals in England

	Beds	Percentage change
1983	343,091	—
1984	334,513	−2·5
1985	325,487	−2·7
1986	315,817	−3·0

The information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Redwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has as to any correlation between higher National Health Service spending and areas of rapid population growth;

(2) if he will make it his policy to allocate extra national Health Service moneys to areas of high housing and population growth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Resources are allocated to regional health authorities using the method recommended by the Resource Allocation Working Party. The underlying objective of this approach is to secure progressively through resource allocation equal opportunity of access to health care for people in equal need. The population served by each region and projected population growth are important factors in this process and bear directly on the distribution of resources between regions.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time staff are currently employed by his Department in preparing the way for the full implementation of the Social Security Act 1986 in April 1988; how many of these were recruited especially for this task; and what is the cost of the preparatory work.

Mr. Scott: Information is not held in the precise form requested.

At 1 October 1987 there were 71,100 full-time equivalent staff in local offices both maintaining the current social security scheme and preparing for implementation of the Social Security Act 1986 from April 1988. Some 2,400 of these staff were recruited especially for the latter task. In addition, 110 full-time equivalent staff—increasing to 600 by 1 April 1988—are working on family credit which will be administered from North Fylde central office. Thus, at April 1988 there will be about 3,000 additional staff in post to introduce the new benefits. These staff, who will have cost an estimated £23 million, are required for a temporary period only.

Lorazepam

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what efforts he is making to assist patients suffering from the withdrawal effects of taking lorazepam; how this assistance is being given; at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The services of general practitioners, hospital psychiatric departments, and specialist drug treatment and advice agencies — many of which have been provided through special funding from this Department — are available to those people taking lorazepam who suffer withdrawal effects. The cost cannot be separately identified.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he has any plans to ban the prescribing of lorazepam to new patients; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has set up or plans to set up a study of the problems associated with the prescribing and represcribing of lorazepam; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he has now received a copy of the report of the Committee on safety of Medicines concerning the prescribing and represcribing of lorazepam; and when it is likely to be published.

Mr. Newton: On the advice currently available to us, benziodiazepines have a place in medical practice if prescribed with appropriate care. The data sheet for Ativan (the trade name under which lorazepam is sold) was amended earlier this year, following discussion with DHSS medicines division to advise that it should be used only in the short term and to give doctors additional advice about avoiding dependence.

The Committee on Safety of Medicines is at present considering whether further steps should be taken in relation both to lorazepam and to other benziodiazepines. It would be premature for me to comment on the question of possible publication before the committee has completed this work.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions and by what means his Department has drawn the attention of the medical profession to the dangers of represcribing lorazepam.

Mr. Newton: Advice is given in the British National Formulary, which is distributed to all NHS doctors every six months, that treatment with benzodiazepines, of which lorazepam is one, should be limited to the lowest possible dose for the shortest possible time and that withdrawal of the drug after long-term administration should be gradual. "Guidelines of Good Clinical Practice in the Treatment of Drug Misuse", which have been issued to all doctors, contain advice on the addictive potential of benzodiazepines and on withdrawal procedures. The data sheet for lorazepam, sent by Wyeth Laboratories to all doctors, which provides guidance and warnings to doctors on the prescribing of lorazepam, has recently been amended in agreement with the Department to re-emphasise the potential problems of dependence on lorazepam. The data sheet now recommends lorazepam tablets for short-term use only and gives guidelines for treatment to minimise the risk of benzodiazepine-related dependence.

The Department funds the distribution to all general medical practitioners of a number of independently produced prescribing publications. Several articles about benzodiazepines have been published in the last 5 years.

DEFECTIVE PRINTING

These include "some problems with Benzodiazepines" and "Lessening the Use of Benzodiazepines" in the Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin. "Adverse Effects of Prolonged Benzodiazepine Use" in the "Adverse Drug Reactions Bulletin" and "Benzodiazepines and transient insomnia" in Prescribers' Journal. More general articles on, for example, repeat prescribing and the hazards of abrupt withdrawal of drugs have also contained references to benzodiazepines. In March 1980 the British Medical Journal published an article provided by the Committee on Review of Medicines entitled "A systematic review of benzodiazepines" which referred to the problems of dependence.

Social Fund Manual

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what basis and to how many individuals and organisations advance copies of the social fund manual have been supplied; and whether copies are available to hon. Members.

Mr. Portillo: An advance copy of the social fund manual has been sent to a total of 90 organisations which commented on the draft manual. Where both the national office and local branches of an organisation commented an advance copy has been sent to the national office only. Copies have also been placed in the Library.

Abortions

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abortions were done in the latest year for which figures are available in (a) private clinics or agencies and (b) the National Health Service at 18 weeks or over, and if he will distinguish between residents and non-residents.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the table.

Notification of abortions at 18+ gestation weeks by category of premises, residents and non-residents of England and Wales, 1986

Category	Number
Residents
NHS	1,176
Non NHS	3,412
Non-residents
NHS	3
Non NHS	3,685

Child Benefit

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what change he estimates there will be in the number of people entitled to claim means-tested benefits in the course of a full year as a result of his decision in regard to the uprating of child benefit; and what will be the number of their dependants.

Mr. Portillo: On the basis of the benefit rates announced today and the tables showing the likely distributional effect of the new schemes, around 15,000 more families with 30,000 dependent children are expected to be entitled to income related benefits.

Hospital Medical Career Structure

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is yet in a position to report progress on the recent negotiations on the hospital medical career structure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Following the consultative document "Hospital Medical Staffing: Achieving a Balance" published in July last year the steering group which I chair, has today published its subsequent report "Hospital Medical Staffing: Achieving a Balance — Plan for Action".

The various measures in the report are based on three principal needs:

—to increase the number of consultants, to provide both the leadership and the career opportunities an expanding service requires;

—sensible planning of the numbers of doctors in training grades, taking account of career prospects;

— maintenance of the necessary levels of support for consultants, particularly in the acute specialties.

The purpose of the reforms is to improve the quality of care doctors will be giving to their patients, by increasing the extent to which fully trained doctors are involved in direct patient care and in the supervision of their junior staff and by making a career in the hospital service more secure and therefore more attractive.

The reforms have already begun, with the announcement in February of 45 new consultant posts this year, and a further 55 on offer next year. Other parts of the package will be introduced over the next few months, so that work will have started on all parts of it by next April. Completing the programme of reform, in particular to achieve the right balance between doctors in training and career posts, is however expected to take several years.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 28 October 1987

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Reform

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether religious instruction will be included in the national core curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Religious education is already a compulsory subject for pupils in maintained schools under the provisions of the Education Act 1944. The Government's recent consultation document on the national curriculum reflects our strong conviction that religious education must continue to be taught in schools and makes clear that time must continue to be found for it for all pupils. We shall seek to ensure that the present statutory requirements relating to religious education are enforced as effectively as those proposed for the foundation subjects of the national curriculum.

General Teaching Council

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the case for a general teaching council; what consideration he has given to this proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received no representations recently about the establishment of a general teaching council. Our position has been for some time, and remains, that we are prepared to consider the case for such a body if a specific proposal made is likely to command widespread support from all the interests involved.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the latest progress in research into schizophrenia.

Mr. Jackson: I understand from the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department, that the Council's schizophrenia and allied conditions committee has recently reviewed the current state of research in this area. A report of the committee's findings, including recommendations for future research, will be published shortly.

In addition the Department of Health and Social Security is funding epidemiological research on morbidity and mortality in schizophrenia at the unit of clinical epidemiology, Oxford and is also supporting studies on community-based services for people with mental illnesses such as schizophrenia.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much the Medical Research Council spent of its 1986-87 budget on research on (a) mental health and (b) schizophrenia; and what percentage these figures represent of the Medical Research Council's total budget.

Mr. Jackson: It is for the Medical Research Council to determine its priorities from within the annual grant-in-aid which it receives from the Department's science budget. I understand that in the financial year 1986-87 the Medical Research Council spent £9·4 million, 8 per cent. of its overall budget, on research on mental health, including research on addiction. Out of its expenditure on mental health, the Council spent £506,000, 0·4 per cent. of its budget, on schizophrenia. The Council is also funding other work in which mental health and schizophrenia are minor components.

Social Workers

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what efforts are being made to maintain provision of courses of training for social workers specialising in work with the deaf; how many colleges are providing such courses; and if he will list them and provide comparable figures from five years ago.

Mr. Jackson: Initial training courses for social workers do not include any specialist element related to working with the deaf, but the development of a two-year post-qualifying Open University course by distance learning is under consideration.

Some local education authorities provide training courses in colleges of further education on communication with the deaf, as part of their adult education programme; also, charitable bodies offer courses for people working with the deaf and hearing-impaired. The number of such courses is not known, nor are the figures for five years ago.

Conductive Education

Mr. Bowis asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps are being taken by the Government to provide or encourage the provision of conductive education for children with motor disorders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has agreed to provide grant assistance of £326,000 to enable Birmingham university to carry out a research evaluation of the conductive education project being established in Birmingham by the Foundation for Conductive Education. In the Government's view, it would be preferable to await the outcome of this assessment before coming to any decisions about wider provision of conductive education for children with motor disorders.

Sixth Forms

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number and names of all city areas in England which do not have any schools with sixth forms within their city boundary.

Mr. Dunn: Information on schools in city areas is not readily available centrally.

Derby (Post-primary Education)

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received (a) in favour of and (b) against the proposals of Derbyshire county council for the reorganisation of post-primary education in the Derby city area.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend received around 800 representations objecting to the proposals. In addition, a number of statutory and non-statutory objections were lodged with the LEA.

CERN

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to fund CERN; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The United Kingdom's subscription to CERN is paid by the Science and Engineering Research Council from its grant-in-aid. Following the report of the Kendrew review into United Kingdom participation in high energy particle physics, the United Kingdom proposed a review of CERN with a view to identifying savings that would reduce the subscription of member states. The CERN Council agreed to set up such a review under the chairmanship of Professor Abragam and the final report is expected within the next month.

Pupil Costs

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current annual cost to public funds of educating a child at a maintained secondary school.

Mr. Dunn: The latest information available is for the financial year 1985-86. The net recurrent institutional expenditure per secondary school pupil in England in that year was £1,175. This figure includes the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection, debt charges and revenue contributions to capital outlay.

School Teachers

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has considered the report of the working group on the collection of ethnically-based statistics on school teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The report of this working group, which was set up by my predecessor in answer to a recommendation of the Swann committee, recommends that I should require local education authorities to provide aggregate and anonymous data on the ethnic composition of their school teacher forces. I accept this recommendation. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales agrees that the proposals should apply to Wales as well. We now intend to consult all interested parties on the arrangements for data collection. A draft circular has been issued for consultation today and copies have been placed in the Library together with copies of the working group's report.

Education Standards

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further proposals he has for improving educational standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government have published consultation documents setting out their detailed proposals for educational reform. Copies of these and of the main responses to have been placed in the Library. We hope to introduce an Education Bill embodying our proposals in the next few weeks.

PRIME MINISTER

Crayford

Mr. Evennett asked the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to visit Crayford.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

National Insurance Files (Access)

Miss Mowlam asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply of 23 October, Official Report column 905, why she will not refer to the Security Commission's allegations concerning improper access by security service officers to national insurance files.

The Prime Minister: These allegations relate to matters of a kind which do not come within the Security Commission's terms of reference.

WALES

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to publish urgently a consultative paper regarding a Welsh Assembly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: No.

Craig-y-nos Castle

Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will instruct his Department to give grade one listing to the theatre at Craig-y-nos castle.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend on Monday 26 October.

Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Wales why sales details for Craig-y-nos castle are not currently available to prospective purchasers from the nominated estate agent's office.

Mr. Grist: Now that we have decided that the theatre should be listed grade I and the remainder of the building listed as grade II the property will be placed on the market. Sales details will then be available to prospective purchasers.

Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will change the terms of sale for Craig-y-nos castle from freehold to leasehold in order that his Department may retain its interest in the long-term future of the building.

Mr. Grist: No. A previous attempt to sell the leasehold of this property did not produce a satisfactory offer. The freehold of Craig-y-nos is soon to be offered for sale, with the theatre subject to a grade I listing and the remainder of the building at grade II. This should realise the maximum financial benefit for the NHS while offering the protection listed status affords.

Farms (Radioactivity)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many farms in Wales have been affected by restrictions on the sale or movement of livestock due to excessive levels of radiation since the nuclear plant explosion at Chernobyl.

Mr. Peter Walker: Around 5,100 holdings in north Wales were affected when restrictions were first introduced on 20 June 1986. Currently some 416 of these holdings are still subject to restrictions. Schemes to permit the movement and marketing of sheep from restricted holdings were introduced in August 1986 and are continuing.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Emergency Aid (Airline Contracts)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the air companies his Overseas Development Administration has contracted to deliver emergency aid in each of the years 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Eggar: Information in the form requested is not readily available. Civil and military airlines used in our disaster relief operations include the following:

MISR Overseas Airways
ZAS Airlines
Trans Arabian Air Transport
AER Turas
ARAX Airlines
African International Airways
Belgian Air Force
Flash Airlines
Air Atlantique
Air Botswana
KLM
GASAIR
Gemini Airlines
Heavylift Cargo Airlines
Southern Air Transport
Transamerica
Qantas
Flying Tigers
German Cargo Services
Alitalia
Iberia
TAROM
TAAG
Panamerican
Airbridge Carriers
Anglo Cargo
Tradewinds
Cargolux
Martinair
Lufthansa
JAL
Aeroflot
Sabena
Air France
PIA
Polish Air Force
Varig
St. Lucia
MEA
TMA
Ford Vlahos
Iran Air
LAP
SAA
Korean Air
Air Algerie
La Point
Yemen Airways
British Airways
British Caledonian
Sudan Airways
Garuda
Royal Jordanian Airlines
The Royal Air Force
The Queen's Flight

Southern Air Transport

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will issue instructions that the Overseas Development Administration should enter into no further contracts with Southern Air Transport.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Emergency Aid (Airline Contracts)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what non-commercial considerations are used in selecting an air company for the delivery of emergency aid.

Mr. Eggar: Each disaster response is considered on its merits. The primary concern in the delivery of disaster relief, irrespective of the mode of transport used, is the speed, effectiveness and cost of the operation.

Heat Grid (London)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated cost of building a heat grid of insulated hot water pipes for London.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government have no estimates of the cost of building a heat grid of insulated hot water pipes for London as a whole.

However, following publication of the Marshall report on "Combined Heat and Electrical Power Generation in the United Kingdom", the Government commissioned W.S. Atkins and Partners Ltd. to carry out a study on the feasibility of combined heat and power district heating in nine cities.

The report of this study, published as Energy Paper No. 53 in 1984, estimates that the cost of laying heat mains in the boroughs of Tower Hamlets and Southwark alone could be of the order of £174,574,000 at 1982 prices.

Electricity

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Energy what improvements he seeks in the performance of the national elecricity generation and supply system.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The industry has a statutory responsibility to provide efficient and economical supplies of electricity. It is our intention that privatisation should lead to improvements in this service which will benefit the consumer.

Severn Tidal Group

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he now expects to receive the final report of the Severn tidal power group; how much public funding has been committed to this investigation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Severn tidal power group expects to produce its report towards the end of 1988. The study is expected to cost £4.26 million and the cost is being shared equally between the Severn tidal power group, the Central Electricity Generating Board and my Department.

South African Coal Industry

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Energy what contacts there have been between Ministers or officials in his Department and representatives of the London office of the South African coal industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Storm Damage

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the actions he has taken in his capacity relating to the areas damaged by the hurricane on 15-16 October;

(2) if he will list the areas damaged by the 15-16 October hurricane which he has visited in his capacity as co-ordinator of relief operations; and what procedures he has adopted to secure advice on the nature and extent of the damage.

Mr. Hurd: The immediate test of responding to the damage caused by the storms on 15-16 October fell to the emergency services, the local authorities and public utilities. In order to ensure that they were fully supported in their attempts to deal quickly and effectively with the consequences of the storms, I obtained regular situation reports, from early on 16 October, from the areas most badly affected. In the light of the initial reports on the morning of 16 October, I called an immediate meeting of the Ministers most directly concerned, which reviewed in detail the information available and the action which each Minister was taking in the field of his own responsibilities.

Passports

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy that the laminate chosen to protect the personal details page of the new European Community common format British passport be the most secure available;

(2) if he will make it his policy to give the highest priority to the level of security in choosing the laminate used to protect the personal details page of the new European Community common format British passport;

(3) if he has had discussions with the Governments of Australia and Canada regarding the most secure laminate used in their passports and as to what level of security was thereby obtained.

Mr. Renton: The laminate chosen will need to meet exacting security requirements. The Government are aware that the type of laminate used by the Governments of Australia and Canada offers a satisfactory standard of security.

Medical Health Review Tribunals

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department currently takes when, in relation to a patient to whom section 73 of the Mental Health Act 1983 applies, a mental health review tribunal includes in its written decision a recommendation that a patient be granted leave of absence or be transferred to another hospital or be transferred into guardianship.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Any such recommendation received in the Home Office is acknowledged, and any comments are offered which can usefully be made at that stage. Correspondence with the tribunal is copied to the patient's responsible medical officer, since it is for this officer to consider the recommendation in the first instance. If the responsible medical officer submits a proposal based on a tribunal's recommendation, full account is taken of the tribunal's views. At any subsequent hearing of the case, the statement which the Home Office provides will explain the outcome of any recommendation which the tribunal had made.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to seek the amendment of section 73 of the Mental Health Act 1983 to give mental health review tribunals statutory power to make recommendations that a patient to whom section 73 applies be granted leave of absence or transfer to another hospital or transfer into guardianship.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those convicted of crimes in England and Wales in each of the last five years have ever been admitted to National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units with a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not available centrally. The readily available information, which is given in the following table, relates to persons compulsorily admitted to hospital under part V of the Mental Health Act 1959, part III of the Mental Health Act 1983 or the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1984. They provide for the admission to hospital by the court of a person convicted of an offence or under certain circumstances of a person who the court is satisfied did the act but did not convict him. Further details are given in "Statistics of Mentally Disordered Offenders England and Wales 1984"—Home Office statistical bulletin 31/85; it is planned to bring this bulletin up to date early next year.

Persons classified as suffering from mental illness compulsorily admitted to National Health Service hospitals under a hospital order, after transfer from a Prison Department establishment or recalled following an earlier discharge; England and Wales, 1982-86

Prisons (Staffing Levels)

Mr. Steinberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes have been made in the staffing levels at Frankland, Durham and How Newton prisons from the levels agreed between the manpower team, local management and Prison Officers Association representatives.

Mr. John Patten: The fresh start review teams did not set and agree complements with local management and staff. Their task was to make recommendations about management structure, working arrangements and complements for consultation locally, regionally and at headquarters. Final complements have not yet been promulgated.

Mr. Steinberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the adequacy of staffing levels proposed for prisons under the fresh start scheme.

Mr. Hurd: Trade union representatives have been consulted about staffing levels under fresh start at each establishment. Discussion at local, regional and national level has in most cases brought about a resolution of any differences. Staffing matters have been raised in two recent meetings which I have had with representatives of the Prison Officers' Association.

Mr. Steinberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the recruitment of prison officers in one area for posts in another; and how many vacancies have (i) occurred and (ii) been advertised in (a) Durham and (b) London in the past year.

Mr. John Patten: Recruitment for the England and Wales prison service is on a national basis as prison officers are a mobile grade. Advertising, whether in the press or jobcentres, is therefore for mobile posts and not for specific vacancies in particular establishments.

While account is taken where possible of an individual's preferences and domestic circumstances, officers may be required to fill posts in any establishment in England and Wales. In the 12 months October 1986-September 1987, 24 new entrant prison officers were posted to establishments in County Durham and 216 to the London area.

Prison Staff

Mr. Steinberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prison staff have accepted the interim measures under the fresh start scheme; and what proportion of prison staff will be on the fresh start pay structure from 1 November.

Mr. Hurd: Over half—53 per cent.—of prison staff in the unified grades were on fresh start working on 25 October, including 17 per cent. working under transitional local agreements. We remain firmly committed to a cut off date of 1 November for introducing fresh start at all establishments. The extent to which this is achieved depends on the outcome of local discussions. The position is not yet clear.

Firearms

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what compensation will be available for the owners of automatic firearms which he proposes to ban;

(2) if he has any plans to restrict the magazine capacity of registered automatic weapons;

(3) if he will make it his policy to have individual shotguns registered;

(4) if he will make a statement on the implication for gun control or the absence of present certification for ammunition loading kits.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As my right hon. Friend announced in the House on 26 October in the debate on firearms, we are considering suggestions in addition to the proposals already announced for strengthening the controls on firearms. These include the matters raised by the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) which will be carefully examined. We hope to announce comprehensive proposals by the end of November with a view to introducing a new firearms Bill before Christmas.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his policies for more effective control of firearms, he will offer refunds for the unexpired portion of firearms licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The fee reflects the cost of issuing a certificate and a refund for an unused period of its validity would not be justified.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it is proposed that the police national computer be linked with his Department's computer centre at Bootle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans to link the police national computer with the Department's computer centre at Bootle.

Child Prostitution

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute an urgent inquiry into child prostitution.

Mr. John Patten: We have no present plans to do so.

Missing Children

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instigate an immediate inquiry into the number of children reported to the police as runaways from home or local authority care.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Responsibility for investigating reports of missing persons, including children who run away from home or local authority care, is a matter for chief officers of police. The Association of Chief Police Officers has set up a working party to review police procedured for dealing with inquiries relating to missing persons and in the light of its report we will consider the need for action by the Home Office.

Dog Licensing

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when and in what form he proposes to amend the legislation on dog licensing.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply.

Clause 32 of the Local Government Bill would have the effect of abolishing the duty on dog licences in Great Britain, and part IV of schedule 6 to the Bill would repeal the various references to dog licences which would be redundant on abolition of the duty. The Bill is currently being considered by Standing Committee A.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EC-Israel (Relations)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the nature of the dispute between the European Economic Community and Israel which led to the visit to Israel on 10 October by Mr. Cheysson; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that M. Cheysson took advantage of his routine visit to Israel to discuss the Community's concern to secure early implementation by the Israeli authorities of the measures for access to EC markets for produce from the occupied territories, agreed by the Community last year. He also raised some outstanding difficulties about the operation of the Tamah tax which is imposed on imported goods that compete with domestic Israeli products.

Iraq (Chemical Weapons)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Iraq about their use of chemical weapons in the Gulf conflict; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Iraqis can be in no doubt of our condemnation of the use of these weapons. We have raised the question on a number of occasions recently, for instance when my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary met the Iraqi Foreign Minister in New York, and during the new Iraqi ambassador's introductory calls at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise at the Security Council of the United Nations the use of chemical weapons by Iraq in the Gulf conflict; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We raise at every suitable opportunity the deplorable use of chemical weapons by Iraq. We strongly supported the statement by the president of the Security Council on 14 May, demanding a halt to the use of their weapons in accordance with the 1925 Geneva protocol. We played a leading role in obtaining SCR 598 which deplores, inter alia, the use of chemical weapons in the conflict.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget which is allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to his departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act and (f) the action taken to facilitate jobshare, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Eggar: There are two equal opportunity officers in the diplomatic wing and one in the aid wing. The proportion of their time allocated to equal opportunity work is 15 per cent., 10 per cent. and 10 per cent. respectively. They combine their equal opportunity duties with personnel management, policy and training responsibilities as assistant heads of departments.

Cross-border Trade (Republic of Ireland)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of the Republic of Ireland following the recent decision by the EEC Commission that the Dublin Budget restrictions on shoppers visiting Northern Ireland are in conflict with EEC legislation; what effect the Budget restrictions have had on the economy of border towns in Northern Ireland; and if he will request an urgent removal of these budgetary restrictions to cross-border trade in Ireland before Christmas in the current year.

Mrs. Chalker: We made clear to the Commission in April that the measures taken by the Irish Government were in our view inconsistent with EC law. The Commission has now instituted legal proceedings against the Irish Government under the EC treaty. We hope that these proceedings will lead to the measures being rescinded. Although this is primarily a matter of EC law, we have also taken up the matter directly with the Irish Government, on a number of occasions. The issue of what impact the measures have had on the economy of Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Human Rights

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government intend to sign the European convention for the prevention of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment when the convention is opened for signature on 26 November.

Mrs. Chalker: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Beggs asked the Attorney-General if he has any plans to review the use made of the legal aid system in Northern Ireland; and what is his assessment of the current level of abuse to the system.

The Attorney-General: The legal aid system and the criteria determining the availability of legal aid in Northern Ireland are broadly similar to those pertaining in England and Wales. The relevance to Northern Ireland of the proposals contained in the White Paper "Legal Aid in England and Wales: A New Framework" (Cm. 118 published on 26 March 1987) is currently being assessed.

Legal aid legislation in Northern Ireland incorporates certain safeguards against abuses. There is no evidence of major abuse of the system.

Commonhold

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Attorney-General what information he has in regard to the meaning of the word commonhold used as the title of the Law Commission's report, Cm. 179, and when it was first used in relation to property occupied as flats.

The Attorney-General: The word commonhold has at present no dictionary meaning. It was adopted by the working group responsible for the report Cm. 179 at the start of its deliberation as being apt to describe a form of freehold tenure involving common rights and obligations. At the time of its adoption the group was unmindful of its earlier use by my hon. Friend in a series of private Member's Bills on co-ownership of flats going back to 19[illegible].

Freehold Flats

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Attorney-General if it is the Government's intention to take steps to implement the recommendations of the Law Commission in regard to freehold flats.

The Attorney-General: The working group report Cm. 179 to which my hon. Friend refers was published by the Law Commission as recently as July last. A decision on implementation will be taken when the recommendations have been fully considered.

Judges and Magistrates

Mr. Fraser asked the Attorney-General what steps are taken before appointment to ensure that magistrates and judges are free from racial prejudice.

The Attorney-General: Before appointing or recommending the appointment of a candidate to judicial office the Lord Chancellor carries out wide-ranging consultations with the judiciary and senior members of the legal profession in order to assess the personal and professional suitability of all candidates.

In the case of lay magistrates the Lord Chancellor and the Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster receive annual recommendations from their local advisory committees about new appointments to magisterial benches within their respective geographical areas. The persons appointed are required to be personally suitable for judicial work and one of the purposes of the interviews which candidates undergo is to satisfy the committees that they possess the necessary judicial qualities.

Anyone who is found to be racially prejudiced would be excluded from further consideration for either a professional or a lay appointment.

Mr. Fraser asked the Attorney-General how many judges have been reprimanded by the Lord Chancellor in the last 12 months.

The Attorney-General: Two.

Illegitimacy

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Attorney-General when the provisions of the Family Law Act 1987 which relate to illegitimacy will be implemented.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor intends to bring the Family Law Reform Act 1987, which reforms the law relating to the consequences of birth outside marriage, into force when the necessary resources are available. Bringing part II of the Act (Rights and Duties of Parents etc.) into force will require considerable expenditure in terms of staff and legal aid, for which resources will not be available until after 1988. Other plans and priorities will determine when resources can be made available thereafter, but the Lord Chancellor will keep the matter under close review.

The Lord Chancellor hopes to bring the rest of the Act, which does not involve the expenditure of significant resources, into force by early 1988.

Marconi

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General whether he will make a statement as to the progress of the inquiry into Marconi.

The Attorney-General: Inquiries by the Ministry of Defence into allegations of fraud in connection with Ministry of Defence contracts with Marconi have been in progress since March 1987. The investigating officers have recently sought and received advice from the Crown Prosecution Service fraud investigation group, and the inquiries are expected to continue for some months under the direction of the fraud investigation group.

Judicial Studies Board

Ms. Richardson asked the Attorney-General whether he will (a) list the members of the Judicial Studies Board, (b) state the criteria for selection of members, (c) list the relevant qualifications of present members, (d) indicate the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places, and (e) indicate how many Trades Union Congress-nominated places are held by women.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is as follows:

- (a) Present members of the Judicial Studies Board are shown in the list.
- (b) There are no formal criteria but, because of the nature of its work, membership of the board and its committees mainly comprises judges and judicial officers with relevant experience. Membership also includes academics, civil servants from the Home Office and Lord Chancellor's Department and, in the case of the magisterial committee, representatives from bodies involved in the provision of magistrates training.
- (c) Relevant qualifications are set out in the list.
- (d) None.
- (e) None.

ENVIRONMENT

Royal Herbert Hospital, Woolwich

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Royal Herbert hospital buildings at Woolwich were acquired by the South-East Thames regional health authority from the Property Services Agency; at what cost; and for what purpose.

Mr. Chope: The Royal Herbert hospital buildings at Woolwich were transferred, without payment, to the South-East Thames regional health authority in March 1981. The authority planned to use part of the site as a residential centre for the mentally handicapped and severely disturbed and to dispose of surplus land not required for this purpose. I understand that another location was subsequently chosen for the residential centre and that the site has remained unused. The authority plans to dispose of it and is investigating the planning position prior to a sale on the open market.

Water Meters

Ms. Primarolo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the charge for the installation of the compulsory water meter is to be passed on by the proposed privatised water authorities to the customer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Bill which has now received its Second Reading stipulates that the undertaker will bear all the costs arising out of the installation of a meter and any associated equipment if it is installed at the request of the water undertaker.

Peregrine Falcons

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he envisages any change in his policy of granting licences for the taking of wild peregrine falcons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Yes. The Government intend to follow the advice given by the Nature Conservancy Council that, save in exceptional circumstances, licences will not be given for taking wild peregrine falcons after 1988.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many licences for taking wild peregrine falcons have been issued in 1985, 1986 and 1987 to date.

Mr. Moynihan: The number of licences issued by the Department and the Scottish Office for taking wild peregrine falcons was:

	1985	1986	1987
England and Wales	2	2	1
Scotland	3	2	8

These 18 licences resulted in 12 birds being taken.

Falconry (Quarry Licences)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many quarry licences for falconry were issued in 1985, 1986 and 1987 to date; and what quarry species were involved.

Mr. Moynihan: The number of quarry licences issued for falconry was:

	1985	1986	1987
England and Wales	68	72	59

The quarry species involved have been blackbird, skylark, meadow pipit, lapwing, song thrush, black-headed gull, moorhen, fieldfare, redwing. I understand that the details in Scotland are:

	1985	1986	1987
Scotland	3	3	5

involving song thrush, blackbird, skylark, and meadow pipit.

County Hall, London

Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the value of county hall, London; and if he will make a statement as to its future use.

Mr. Chope: It is not possible to give a precise estimate to the value of the county hall complex in advance of the results of the marketing exercise which the LRB is conducting. The future use of the buildings will be for the new owners to determine, subject to the appropriate planning and listed building consents. My right hon. Friend, granted permission on 20 October for the change of use of the county hall complex to offices. He also indicated that hotel use of the main block could be appropriate in the event of a satisfactory resolution of listed building considerations. Copies of the decision letter and of the inspector's report on the planning appeals have been deposited in the Library.

Empty Properties

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what current estimates he has for the numbers of publicly-owned empty properties.

Mrs. Roe: The latest estimates derived from local authorities' annual housing investment programme returns for 1987 are as follows:

Vacant dwellings at 1 April 1987—England

	Thousands
Owned by:
Local housing authorities[1]	112
Other public sector bodies[2]	15
Total publicly-owned	127

[1] Includes overspill estates.

[2] Includes housing owned by new towns, county councils (for example, police houses), Government departments and nationalised industries and other public bodies. Many of these dwellings are vacant because of operational requirements, notably those owned by the Ministry of Defence, and others have been acquired for demolition, for example, by the Department of Transport. The Government are encouraging the sale of housing which is not required and many of those that are vacant are in the process of disposal.

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been empty for six months or more during the last five years.

Mrs. Roe: This information, which local authorities were asked to provide for the first time in their 1987 housing investment programme returns, is not yet available.

Telford Development Corporation

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of the members of the Telford development corporation, together with the period of office that each one has served and the date when their term of office expires.

Mrs. Roe: The names of the board members of the Telford development corporation, together with the periods of office that each one has served and the dates of expiry of their appointments, are as follows:

Appointment	Service at 1 October 1987	Present Term Expires
Chairman
Lord Northfield	12 years 5 months	31 October 1987
Deputy Chairman
F. J. Jones	10 months	30 November 1990
Members
P. Court	3 years 5 months	31 July 1988
Councillor M. J. Davies	10 years 11 months	16 January 1989
Dr. I. F. Gibson	12 years 9 months	Non-finite appointment
R. Hall	7 years 9 months	31 May 1988
Sir Fred Hardman	7 years 8 months	30 April 1988

Appointment	Service at 1 October 1987	Present Term Expires
Councillor L. Holbrook	12 years 9 months	16 January 1989
Mrs. E. J. Holt	12 years 5 months	Non-finite appointment
Councillor R. A. H. Lloyd	10 years 11 months	16 January 1989
R. A. H. Thomas	2 years 8 months	30 April 1989
P. M. Vine	12 years 5 months	16 January 1989

I announced on 22 October that Mr. Jones was to succeed Lord Northfield as chairman on 1 November, when Mrs. Holt would become the new deputy chairman. Mr. R. A. Gammie joins the board on that day.

Pollution

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to restrict the use of chlorofluorocarbons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: On 16 September the United Kingdom, together with the European Community, most member states and some 16 other countries, signed the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer. This provides for consumption of chlorofluorocarbons to be halved by the end of the century and for the halons to be held at the 1986 levels. This is a major environmental agreement in the negotiation of which the United Kingdom played a full part.

Public Inquiries (Costs)

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will introduce legislation for the payment to objectors at public inquiries of their reasonable costs on the issue of a certificate that the issues in question raise matters of sufficient public interest, such costs to be mandatory when an objector produces an acceptable alternative to the acquiring authority.

Mr. Waldegrave: Successful statutory objectors at inquiries into compulsory purchase and analogous orders are normally awarded their costs, as explained in DOE circular 2/87 issued on 17 February. Otherwise, the Government remain unconvinced of the case for public funding of objectors, for the reasons set out in paragraphs 63-65 of its response to the fifth report from the Environment Committee, Session 1985-86.

Endangered Species

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the extent of illegal trading in endangered wild animals in (a) Britain and (b) the European Community; and what proposals Her Majesty's Government have to curtail this activity.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department cannot estimate the extent of illegal trading in endangered wild animals. The European Commission has undertaken a review of the implementation of CITES throughout the Community. A report is expected in the new year; any further measures thought necessary to curtail illegal trading will be considered in the light of that report.

Yorkshire Water Authority

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions the Yorkshire water authority has applied for a change in consent limits in regard to the effluent from one of its works; and on how many occasions such consent has been refused.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department's records of sewage discharge consents do not readily distinguish between limits for new discharges and changes in the limits for existing discharges; the information is available in the register maintained by the water authority.

The Department has granted about 500 consents to the Yorkshire water authority since the present arrangements came into effect in January 1985. No applications have been refused outright, but not all applications are granted in their initial form.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of Yorkshire water authority sewage treatment works in South Yorkshire produces discharges which exceed the required consent limits in more than 5 per cent. of the samples taken; and what action is being taken to reduce pollution from sewage works.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested is not available in this form. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is conducting inquiries with all water authorities to determine the reasons for the non-compliance of sewage treatment works.

River Pollution

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the proportion of fish deaths caused by sewage pollution in South Yorkshire rivers; and on how many occasions prosecutions were undertaken.

Mr. Moynihan: In the past 12 months, five out of 18 fish kills in South Yorkshire rivers were attributable to sewage pollution. Several hundred coarse fish died in the five incidents. Of the five incidents, three led to formal inquiries by the water authority into the operating practices at the sewage works that caused the pollution. Remedial actions have been implemented in all five instances. No prosecutions have been undertaken.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Rivers Don, Rother and Dearne to be clean enough to support fish; and what plans the Yorkshire water authority has to restock these rivers.

Mr. Moynihan: The Yorkshire water authority is working towards improvements in the quality of three rivers so that by the year 2001 they should all be capable of supporting good coarse fisheries. Some stretches should be supporting fisheries well before then. The water authority has no current plans for restocking these rivers.

Structure Plans

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will (a) list the dates on which the current structure plans for each non-metropolitan county in England were approved by his Department, (b) tabulate the period of time for which each county structure plan is relevant, (c) indicate the number of new houses proposed to be built during the lifetime of the plan and (d) indicate the levels of housing for each county already reached at the latest available date.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information on housing provision in structure plans, as at 31 March 1987, will be contained in a paper to be published shortly by my Department. I shall arrange for a copy to be sent to my hon. Friend as soon as it is available.

District Valuer

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to encourage local authorities to privatise the offices of district valuer or city valuer.

Mr. Chope: I hope that in all their activities local authorities will consider the possibility of achieving better value for money by using private firms as an alternative to direct employment by staff. But we have no plans at present to make authorities expose their valuation services to competition.

Land Use

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he is giving to the establishment of a national land use survey with a view to setting up a land use register; what survey methods he is evaluating; and what priority he proposes to give to designation of land suitable for new housing in inner cities.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave him yesterday.

Planning Applications

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many article 10 notices his Department has issued in (a) 1986 and (b) 1987; and if he will list them.

Mr. Waldegrave: Article 10 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1977 empowers me to issue directions restricting the grant of planning permission by a local planning authority in any particular case. The power is most often used to give time to consider whether to direct under section 35 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 that a particular application be referred to me for decision. A total of 135 Article 10 directions were issued in 1986, and a further 59 up to the end of June 1987. Detailed information on the cases concerned is not held centrally.

Agricultural Derating

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the scope of agricultural derating; and whether it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government that derating should apply to buildings used to store EEC intervention stocks.

Mr. Chope: Agricultural derating is limited to land and buildings used solely in connection with agricultural operations. We have no plans to change that position. Buildings used to store intervention board produce, including farm buildings, do not qualify for relief and are liable to be assessed for rates under normal valuation procedures.

Town and Country Planning

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals for amending the Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisement) Regulations 1984, in the light of the response to his Department's consultation paper issued last July.

Mr. Waldegrave: Comments on the consultation paper were received from 33 representative organisations and a considerable number of individual firms with an interest in the Government's proposals. These comments have been thoroughly considered and I am arranging for a copy of the submissions to be placed in the Library of the House where the originators have given their consent.

Many of the Government's proposals concerned administrative provisions to improve and simplify the practical operation of the present advertisement control regime and were generally welcomed. I propose to introduce these provisions into the Control of Advertisements Regulations in due course.

Most interest centred on proposals for granting deemed consent for five additional categories of outdoor advertisements and for stricter limits on the deemed consent for the display of boards advertising the sale or letting of residential property.

I intend to lay before Parliament as soon as possible regulations, under section 63 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, to amend the Control of Advertisements Regulations on the following lines:

(1) to grant deemed consent for—
  (a) the illumination of temporary poster hoardings around construction sites, while building operations take place;
  (b) the display of four-sheet poster panels on purpose-designed highway structures;
  (c) the continued display of an advertisement already being displayed on a site on 1 April 1974—replacing the present provisions in regulation 11 of the Control of Advertisements Regulations;
  (d) the display of temporary directional signs, by housebuilding firms, to sites they are developing;
  (e) the display of outdoor signs for properly authorised "Neighbourhood Watch" schemes; and

(2) to limit the display with deemed consent of estate agents' boards for residential property sales or lettings—class III*(a)* in regulation 14 of the Control of Advertisements Regulations—so that—
  (a) the maximum permitted area of any board is restricted to 0·5 sq. m.—approximately 2 ft. 3 ins. by 2 ft. 3 ins., and 0·6 sq. m. for conjoined boards;
  (b) only one board may be displayed with deemed consent on each property for sale or letting; and
  (c) any board displayed with deemed consent is not allowed to remain on display after the date of legal commitment to the sale or letting to which the board relates.

I propose that the amending provisions for the display of estate agents' boards with deemed consent should come into effect one year from today, in order to give those concerned time to make arrangements for the change.

I am satisfied that, taken together, these amending provisions will result in a worthwhile simplification and reduction in the scope of outdoor advertisement control, while at the same time satisfactory safeguards to amenity and public safety will be maintained.

Additionally, the Department and the Welsh Office will be issuing shortly a consultation paper about the possible display of specified types of illuminated advertisement with deemed consent. Comments will be welcome.

Compulsory Purchase of Land Regulations 1982

Mr. Arbuthnot asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to amend the Compulsory Purchase of Land Regulations 1982.

Mrs. Roe: The Department wrote on 24 September to the local authority associations and others inviting comments on the drafts of regulations to replace those of 1982. The revisions are needed to implement section 43 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 — compulsory acquisition of land on behalf of parish or community councils—and to correct various errors and omissions. I have placed a copy of the consultation letter in the library.

No-Fines Dwellings (Walsall)

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department was first notified of the conditions of the Wimpey No-Fines dwellings in the Blakenall area of Walsall; and whether those conditions exist in such properties in other boroughs.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987, c. 830]: Walsall metropolitan borough council informed the Department in August 1984 of an income support scheme that it had initiated for tenants of Wimpey No-Fines houses with high heating costs. But it was not until 22 July 1987 that a deputation of residents from the Blakenall estate, led by the hon. Member for Walsall North, (Mr. Winnick) complained about the condition of their Wimpey No-Fines houses

These conditions are not unique to the Wimpey No-Fines houses in Walsall, although they do not appear to be particularly severe on the Blakenall estate. By today's standards, many Wimpey No-Fines houses are inadequatley insulated and inefficiently heated, and poor maintenance of the external render, windows and doors can allow water penetration into the walls, thus increasing the problems of internal damp and condensation. Many other houses of traditional construction suffer from similar defects, but whereas building professionals are generally familiar with both these problems and their remedies in traditional houses, this is not so for houses of non-traditional construction.

The Building Research Establishment — BRE — has under way a number of research programmes aimed at providing owners of non-traditional houses, and their professional advisers, with accurate information on their forms of construction, and authoritative advice on good practice in their inspection, assessment, repair, maintenance and improvement. Over the next year the BRE plans to extend its work to houses made of poured—"in situ" — concrete, including Wimpey No-Fines. Officials from my Department have already suggested including the Blakenall estate in this programme, if an empty house can be made available for survey by Walsall MBC.

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the source of the reference to Japanese inhabitants in the discussion of overseas local government taxes in the Green Paper "Paying For Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714).

Mr. Howard: The source, which is given in a footnote to figure K1 in the Green Paper, is "Local Public Finance in Japan", Jichi Sogo Centre, Tokyo, 1982.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how users of non-commercial night shelters will be assessed for poll tax purposes.

Mr. Howard: Community charges registration officers will be able to designate properties with a rapid turnover of residents for the collective community charge. The landlord of a designated property will be liable for the charge and will recover a contribution from each adult who stays in the property.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has made of the extra postage cost to local authorities of sending out monthly poll tax demands compared with domestic rate demands.

Mr. Howard: Community charge demands will, like rate bills, be sent out at the beginning of the year or when a person becomes liable to pay.

Mr. Patnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will be taking powers to carry the present system of rate capping through the proposed new system of local government finance, in order to discourage councils from levying excessive community charges.

Mr. Howard: The main incentive for local authorities to restrain their spending under the new system will be the greater accountability to the local electorate which the community charge will establish. My right hon. Friend believes that it would be proper, however, to retain some form of safeguard against the possibility of a few reckless authorities having no regard to the consequences and seeking to levy an excessive charge to pay for high spending. The legislation that the Government are bringing forward this Session will therefore contain provisions for an authority's charge to be reduced, subject to affirmative resolution of the House, if my right hon. Friend determines that it is excessively high or represents an excessive increase over the previous year. The scheme will operate within the same financial year, so that charges which first fall for payment in April will, if they are found to be excessive, be reduced during the summer. Charge payers will either receive a refund or will have their payments for the rest of the year appropriately scaled down to achieve the same effect.

TRANSPORT

Civil Engineers

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will reconsider his plans to alter the role of the civil engineer in carrying out construction contracts, in view of the opposition of the professional bodies concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. In his reply of 23 July 1987 to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack), my right hon. Friend made it clear that he had carefully considered the views of all concerned before reaching his decision to introduce the new arrangements on a trial basis. There will be further consultation on the details of these arrangements before they are introduced next year.

M66

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has now received the report of the inspector for the public inquiry into the route of the M66 of Denton to Middleton; and when he will announce his decision.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. The report raises complex issues which we will have to determine. I shall make a further announcement as soon as possible.

Seat Belts

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation as soon as possible to require private contractors to fit rear seat restraints when transporting children.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Seat belts or child restraints are required in the rear of all new cars and taxis first registered after 1 April 1987. I have no plans to extend these requirements to older vehicles. It is up to those negotiating contracts to consider whether restraints should be provided as a condition of the contract.

We strongly encourage the fitting and use of appropriate rear restraints in cars and for exposed seats in coaches.

Cabotage

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received recent representation from trades unions about the introduction of cabotage in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On two occasions in the last six months my right hon. Friend has received written representations on road haulage cabotage from members of the Transport and General Workers Union. I met a deputation from the union on 22 October.

My right hon. Friend reiterated the Government's policy on road haulage cabotage in his speech to the Freight Transport Association on 14 September. We are aiming for a European Community in which United Kingdom hauliers can trade as freely as they now trade within the United Kingdom. To achieve this we must ensure that the conditions of competition under which hauliers operate are brought much closer together. Internal restrictions on road freight and compulsory tariff regimes are incompatible with a truly liberalised system. This policy was endorsed in a debate in the Standing Committee on EC documents on 18 March.

M5

Mr. Simon Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost of the present widening scheme for the M5 south of Birmingham.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimated cost of the present widening works on the M5 between junction 5 (Rashwood) and junction 6 (Warndon) is £19·1 million. Works costing £700,000 are also in progress between junction 4 (Lydiate Ash) and junction 4A (Catshill) in preparation for widening that length starting next year.

M40

Mr. Simon Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the additional cost of providing three-lane capacity on that section of the M40 for which he is currently proposing two lanes; and what this represents as a percentage of the total cost of the proposal for this section.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimated cost of the published proposals for the dual two-lane Waterstock to Wendlebury section of the M40 is £57·5 million. This includes provision for earthworks and structures to accommodate a dual three-lane motorway when traffic justifies it. It would cost an additional £4 million—7 per cent. of the cost — to provide the third lanes at the outset.

A49

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to commence on the A49 trunk road improvement at the junction with A533, Barrington Cross roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Next year. We have asked our agents, Cheshire county council, to complete the design of a traffic signal control system. The options which we have been considering since I wrote to my hon. Friend in July proved to be less satisfactory than signals which can be installed at a significantly lower cost than was then thought.

Roads

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport which principal local roads in Leyton will require strengthening within the next 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Local roads in Leyton are the responsibility of the London borough of Waltham Forest.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much money was allocated to local authorities to tackle disrepair on local roads in each year for the last eight years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Public expenditure provision for local highway maintenance since 1979-80 has been as follows:

Year	£m
1979-80	591
1980-81	708
1981-82	710
1982-83	799
1983-84	844
1984-85	902
1985-86	972
1986-87	1,115
1987-88	1,264

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department provided additional funding for the A1(M) tunnel construction at Hatfield in excess of the cost for a normal road in cutting, and as a contribution to the annual running costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The tunnel scheme, selected following public consultation, was more expensive than the open cut option also put to the public and there are greater maintenance costs. Both options offered a good economic return but the tunnel scheme had environmental advantages and provided potential for redeveloping a wide area over and on both sides of the new road.

At the request of the local authorities, the original tunnelled section was lengthened and the design strengthened to accommodate the redevelopment. The authorities contributed towards the extra costs involved. The Department has also recovered some of the scheme costs through disposal of land, or legal interests in land, on and adjacent to the tunnel lid.

Sleeper Services

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the powers available to British Rail which enable it to withdraw sleeper services from the east coast route without ministerial authority.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. My right hon. Friend's consent is required where there are objections to any proposals from BR for the withdrawal of all passenger services from a particular line or station. But whether or not to provide sleeper services is properly a commercial matter for British Rail.

Parking

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review with the appropriate authorities whether to keep main routes into and out of London free of parked vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Parking control and enforcement is one of the options being considered in the second stage of the London assessment studies announced in July. The assessment studies cover four areas of London with particularly severe transport problems and are intended to identify practical options for tackling them within a reasonable time scale.

Buses

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review with the appropriate authorities the value of the bus lane system in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect London boroughs to accord priority to public transport vehicles when this is justified on overall economic grounds. Bus lanes in London have been the subject of recent studies. We are consulting the appropriate authorities on new advice on the design and assessment of bus lanes.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what action he proposes to take to ensure that London Buses Limited installs a taut wire strip system on the doors of its one-person operated buses to ensure passengers do not get their limbs trapped; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is looking into ways of improving the safety of bus doors. I shall write to the hon. Member when we have further information.

Transport Policies and Programmes

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place copies of the transport policies and programmes for 1986-87 and 1987-88 of every local authority in the Library.

Mr. Channon: Transport policies and programmes are prepared and issued by local highway authorities. Their distribution is a matter for the individual authorities.

Motorway Accidents (Lorries)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the involvement of heavy lorries in motorway accidents; what consideration he has given to the matter and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We receive many representations about motorway safety, particularly about the standard of driving on motorways. Serious accidents on the M4 and M6 in September resulted in a number of suggestions from road users, some of which we will consider alongside detailed police reports. Motorways remain our safest roads. The involvement rate of heavy goods vehicles in motorway accidents has decreased since 1981.

Air Traffic Controllers (Suspensions)

Ms. Quin asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many air traffic controllers have been suspended following mid-air incidents between jets in the London area air space.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The suspension of air traffic controllers following air misses in the London flight information region is a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority.

Aircraft Safety

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has held recent discussions with the Civil Aviation Authority and commercial airlines regarding the carriage of self-righting life rafts; and if he will make statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Civil aviation safety regulation is wholly the responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority, which has the necessary technical competence in these matters. I will draw the attention of the chairman of the authority to the hon. Member's inquiry.

Herald of Free Enterprise

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the occasions on which officials of his Department inspected the Herald of Free Enterprise ferry vessel and/or issued certificates covering its use as a passenger ferry during the last five years; and if any recommendations were made, or requirements imposed, concerning equipment or procedures associated with the bow doors.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Herald of Free Enterprise was surveyed and certificated by officials from my Department as follows:

Date	Place	Passenger and safety certificate
February 1982	Amsterdam	Renewed
February 1983	Bremerhaven	Renewed
January 1984	Dover	Extended
March 1984	Newcastle	Renewed
February 1985	Newcastle	Renewed
February 1986	Newcastle	Renewed
February 1987	Dover	Extended

Several visits to the ship were made in connection with each renewal of the passenger and safety certificate to survey the ship and her equipment. Each renewal survey included examination and testing of the bow doors and their operation. Normal maintenance work, such as renewal of the sealing, was required, after which the doors were again tested. As to procedures, the approved stability booklet contained a specific statement that the bow doors should be closed before the vessel proceded to sea.

EMPLOYMENT

Co-operatives

38. Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he next expects to meet trade union representatives to discuss action to encourage the development of co-operative enterprises.

Mr. Cope: We have had no requests from trade union representatives to meet to discuss co-operatives. Although I would be very ready to consider any requests for such meetings, I would recommend that discussions are first held with the national Co-operative Development Agency.

Industrial Training Boards

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list (a) the members of the industrial training boards, (b) the criteria for selection of members, (c) the relevant qualifications of present members, (d) the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places and (e) how many Trades Union Congress-nominated places are held by women.

Mr. Nicholls: The table gives details of members of the seven industrial training boards. Employer and employee representatives are appointed by the Secretary of State for Employment after consultation with appropriate employer and employee organisations. Educationalists are appointed by the Secretary of State for Employment after consultation with Ministers concerned with education in England, Scotland and Wales. No specific qualifications are required for appointment, so details of members' qualifications are not held centrally. Of the 51 places for employee members, only the seven on the hotel and catering board are filled after consultation with the Trade Union Congress; the other employee members are appointed after consultation with organisations representing employees in the relevant industry. Three employee members are women.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he proposes to take to combat discrimination against disabled people in employment in the light of the findings of the London north industrial tribunal in the case of Sarah Bloomfield, case no. 01307/87/LN/A; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government believe that a voluntary approach through encouragement and persuasion offers the best chance of success in this area. The Government will continue to promote good practice on the employment of people with disabilities through the disablement advisory service. Existing employment legislation offers resource in cases of unfair dismissal including those involving people with disabilities.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Employment by how much he estimates the monthly fall in the unemployment figures since June 1986 was affected each month by (a) the increase in YTS and other special employment measures, (b) restart or stricter application of the availability for work rules and (c) increased employment from rising industrial output.

Mr. Fowler: The effect of employment measures on the unemployment count has hardly grown since June 1986. It is not possible to provide reliable monthly estimates of the effect on the count of YTS, but the trend in the seasonably adjusted series, which excludes school leavers will have been only marginally reduced. The effects of restart or stricter application of the availability for work rules cannot be quantified. It is very difficult to separate their effects from those resulting from rising industrial production.

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated net change in the United Kingdom labour force for each year between 1988 and 2003.

Mr. Lee: My Department's latest projections of the size of the civilian labour force in Great Britain, including figures for each year 1988 to 1991, were published in the May 1987 issue of "Employment Gazette" (table 2 on pages 256-257), a copy of which is in the library. Projections for years beyond 1991 are not available.

Restart

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons have been interviewed each month under the restart programme since it started; of these, what percentage each month have entered employment; and what percentage have left the register but not obtained a job.

Mr. Fowler: The number of people interviewed under the restart programme is shown in the table. We have no means of knowing what percentage of those interviewed have entered employment or left the register but did not obtain a job. The aim of the restart interview is to help an unemployed person into employment by selecting the best way open to them from a wide range of employment, training and job search opportunities available. Around nine out of 10 of those interviewed are made offers which might lead ultimately to employment and 70 per cent. agree to pursue an offer made to them at their restart interview.

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the Western Isles who have had a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the scheme, and the percentage of these who have subsequently found full-time work.

Mr. Lee: I regret that the information is not available in the format requested. However, figures for the number of people who have received restart interviews in the employment service areas covering the Highlands and Islands, and Renfrew, Dumbarton and Argyll are shown.

It is not possible to say how many of those people interviewed under the restart scheme ultimately find full-time jobs since we do not follow up every participant.

Highlands and Islands area

Number of restart interviews — June 1986-March 1987 = 5,698

Number of restart interviews — 9 April 1987-25 September 1987 = 4,335

Renfrew, Dumbarton and Argyll area

Number of restart interviews — June 1986-March 1986 = 8,557

Number of restart interviews — 9 April 1987-25 September 1987 = 17,716

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many claimants in Dunfermline, East have been refused benefit following a restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the Clydesdale constituency who have been refused benefit following the restart interview in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Lee: Any refusal of benefit subsequent to a restart interview follows not from the interview itself but from the decision of an independent adjudication officer operating under long-standing legal rules adopted by successive Governments.

Industrial Tribunal Awards

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he proposes to introduce provisions for the payment of interest on industrial tribunal awards.

Mr. Nicholls: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Timesharing (Exhibition)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to timesharing to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Lee: I have accepted an invitation to open an exhibition on timesharing in the Upper Waiting Hall on 16 November.

Docklands

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff the Manpower Services Commission has dealing with the problems of London's docklands, including training.

Mr. Cope: Responsibility for the work of the Manpower Services Commission in the London docklands area is shared between a number of offices which cover a greater area than the docklands boroughs. A precise figure for the number of MSC staff involved with the docklands is therefore not available.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment how much money the London Docklands development corporation has spent to date on training for employment.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

The London Docklands development corporation has spent approximately £2,527,000 on training initiatives of benefit to docklands residents.

Closures

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all closures which have resulted in 25 or more redundancies in the Clydesdale constituency in each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested cannot be provided since details of redundancies confirmed by individual companies are provided to the Manpower Services Commission on in confidence basis.

Sex Discrimination

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Government are intending to amend section 51 of the Sex Discrimination Act.

Mr. Cope: The Government will be bringing forward legislation as soon as parliamentary time permits to amend section 51. It is intended to ensure that discriminatory acts which are required by legislation pre-dating the Sex Discrimination Act will not be lawful except where such actions are compatible with the European Community equal treatment directive.

The Government are also proposing at the same time to remove from other legislation discriminatory provisions in the employment field which are no longer thought to be justifiable under the directive. This will be achieved either by extension to the other sex or by repeal.

A consultation document on the detail of these changes will be issued shortly. It will, in addition, include proposals in relation to legislation which restricts the hours and other conditions of work of young people, some of which also treats male and female young people differently.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he intends to amend the age limits for statutory redundancy payments contained in section 82 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978.

Mr. Cope: As soon as legislative time is available it is proposed to increase the age limit up to which women can receive a statutory redundancy payment from 60 to 65 years to bring their position in line with the provision for men. In future statutory redundancy payments will be paid to both men and women up to the age of 65 or to the normal retirement age for the job where that is below 65 and non-discriminatory. The change will bring the provisions on statutory redundancy payments in line with those on unfair dismissal.

Cash Limits

Mr. Hawkins asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limits or running costs limits for 1987-88.

Mr. Fowler: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the following changes will be made. The cash limit on class VII, vote 1 employment programmes will be increased by £19,465,000 from £1,394,811,000 to £1,414,276,000 mainly due to increased expenditure of £20 million on the community programme, where take-up is running at a higher level than expected, partly offset by minor switches elsewhere.

This increase is more than offset by a reduction of £38,275,000 in the cash limit on class VII, vote 5 Manpower Services Commission from £1,988,128,000 to £1,949,853,000. £28 million of this reduction is due to lower than expected initial take-up of the new job training scheme; and superannuation costs will be around £8·5 million lower following the transfer of certain MSC staff to the Department of Employment. The remaining £2 million reduction is due to a lower than anticipated number of entrants to the youth training scheme.

The cash limit on class VII, vote 4 Health and Safety Commission is increased by £500,000 from £93,735,000 to £94,235,000. Increased expenditure of £1,013,000 to enable the nuclear installations inspectorate to recruit up to their agreed complement of inspectors and to meet other extra running costs not foreseen when Main Estimates were set, is partly offset by extra receipts of £513,000 on this vote. The remaining £500,000 increase in the cash limit is offset by a £450,000 reduction in the cash limit on DHSS administration and miscellaneous services Vote class XV, vote 5 and a £50,000 reduction in the cash limit on the Department of Energy's administration and miscellaneous services vote class VI, vote 3.

There is a token £1,000 increase in the DE administration cash limit class VII, vote 2. Therefore overall there is a net reduction in DE Group cash limits of £18,309,000. The Department of Employment's running costs limit will be increased by £74,277,000 from £400,098,000 to £474,375,000. This is the net effect of machinery of government changes, and reduced spending on unemployment benefit administration which the Department of Employment operates as agent for the Department of Health and Social Security arising from lower unemployment, part of which is used as an offset to an increase in the HSC's running costs limit.

The Health and Safety Commission's running costs limit is increased by £1,013,000 from £86,516,000 to £87,529,000. This increase is fully offset by the reduction within the changes to the Department of Employment's running costs limit referred to above and a reduction in the Department of Energy's running costs limit.

The Manpower Services Commission's running costs limit is reduced by £88,207,000 from £434,750,000 to £346,543,000. This is the result of the transfer to the Department of Employment class VII, vote 2 of certain MSC staff engaged on enterprise and employment functions.

Consequently the running costs total for the Department of Employment group as a whole is reduced by £12,917,000 from £937,076,000 to £924,159,000.

Rates

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the average domestic rates bill in Dunfermline, East for each year since 1978 in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms, showing, in each case, the percentage change between years.

Mr. Lang: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave on Monday 26 October.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Director General of Telecommunications

13. Mr. Maclennan asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the Director General of Telecommunications; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I expect to meet the Director General shortly and to discuss a number of subjects of current interest.

Inner Cities

16. Mr. Steen asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his programme for the coming year regarding the rejuvenation of the inner cities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am pleased to say the work of our 16 inner city task forces is going ahead well with more than 200 projects supported since the initiative began in February 1986. The private sector is playing a growing part in our efforts.

28. Ms. Walley asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the inner cities initiatives.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am pleased to say the work of our inner city task forces is going ahead well with more than 200 projects supported since the initiative began in February 1986. The private sector is playing a growing part in our efforts.

Industrial Output

19. Mr. Marlow asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the output of British industry as a whole; and how this compares with the level of April 1979.

Mr. Atkins: The output of British manufacturing industry is expanding rapidly and the prospects for further growth are excellent. Since the trough of the recession at the beginning of 1981, the output of the manufacturing industries has increased by over 20 per cent. to reach a level of 111·5 in August 1987, based on 1980 equal to 100. This was 0·5 per cent. higher than the level of output in April 1979.

Car Sales

21. Mr. Morley asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of cars sold on the British market was imported from overseas in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: In 1986 imports accounted for 56 per cent. of the United Kingdom car market. In the first nine months of 1987, the import share has fallen to some 52 per cent.

Insurance

22. Ms. Short asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he proposes to take action to prevent insurance companies refusing cover or charging exorbitant rates in inner city areas; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I recognise that the availability of insurance cover can pose difficulties in the inner city. That is why I reached an agreement with the Association of British Insurers and the British Insurance Brokers' Association to help overcome this problem by setting up insurance contact points in inner city areas. I am glad to say that several local authorities have now joined us in these arrangements. We shall be keeping a close eye on their results.

Consultative Committees

23. Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to propose changes in the controls exercised by consultative committees over United Kingdom trade with the Soviet Union and other countries.

Mr. Atkins: A new Export of Goods (Control) Order will be made shortly.

Manufacturing Industry

24. Mr. Cryer asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the level of manufacturing output at the most recent practicable date compared with 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Manufacturing output in the three months to August 1987 was 1 per cent. above the average level for 1979. Since the trough of the recession at the beginning of 1981, manufacturing output has increased by some 20 per cent. and in the three months to August is was nearly 6 per cent. higher than a year earlier. Manufacturing industry is now growing faster than the rest of the economy and the prospects for further growth are most encouraging.

25. Mr. Hoyle asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are his forecasts for investment in manufacturing industry in the current year and for 1988.

Mr. Atkins: The latest investment intentions survey carried out by my Department indicates that in 1987 investment in manufacturing industry, including leased assets, will be about 4 per cent. higher than in 1986 with a larger increase expected between 1987 and 1988. Investment in 1986 is estimated at £7·1 billion at 1986 prices.

31. Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the ratio of new investment to depreciation in British manufacturing industry for the last available year.

Mr. Atkins: In 1986 gross domestic fixed capital formation by United Kingdom manufacturing industry, including leased assets, at current prices was about 102 per cent. of its capital consumption of fixed assets on a national accounts basis and at current prices. There are difficulties in measuring capital consumption as it is a broad brush estimate of the economic lives of fixed assets rather than the lives assumed in business accounts.

33. Mr. Pike asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the change in output in percentage terms on a constant value basis in the manufacturing industries from 1979 to date.

Mr. Atkins: Manufacturing output in the three months to August 1987 was 1 per cent. above the average level for 1979.

Regional Aid

26. Mr. Hind asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total of regional development and selective assistance grants awarded to north-west firms in 1986-87.

Mr. Atkins: The value of applications for new regional development grant approved to north-west firms in 1986-87 was £37·9 million and the value of offers of regional selective assistance grants accepted by north-west firms in 1986-87 was £41·6 million. In addition, £82·9 million was paid in 1986-87 to north-west firms in respect of applications received under the old regional development grant scheme.

Franchise Selling

27. Mr. Fraser asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will refer the practice of franchise selling to the Consumer Protection Advisory Committee under the Fair Trading Act 1973.

Mr. Maude: No, Sir.

Outer Cities

29. Mr. Janner asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has for tackling the problems of the outer cities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Many of the lessons we are learning from the inner cities initiative are also relevant to urban areas in general. We are reviewing the methods by which various government programmes are targeted on our cities.

Research and Development

30. Mr. Wigley asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the regional distribution of his Department's budget for research and development.

Mr. Atkins: A table indicating the breakdown of the regional distribution of the DTI's budget for research and development is available in the Official Report.

Following is the information:

DTI support for research and development in regions:
1 April 1985 to 10 September 1987

Region	Offers	Per cent.	Assistance £ million	Per cent.
East Midlands	90	(7·5)	3·2	(3·0)
North-East	51	(4·3)	2·9	(3·0)
North-West	108	(9·0)	11·2	(11·0)
Scotland	55	(4·6)	2·5	(2·5)
South-East	489	(41·0)	49·7	(49·6)
South-West	107	(9·0)	9·5	(9·3)
Wales	52	(4·3)	2·5	(2·3)
West Midlands	154	(13·0)	13·2	(13·0)
Yorkshire and Humberside	85	(7·0)	5·4	(5·4)
Total	1,191		£100·1

35. Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what funds Her Majesty's Government are committing to the research programmes recommended by the IT86 committee as a successor to the Alvey programme of research in information technology.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am considering the recommendations contained in the IT86 report as part of our review of the priorities in the field of research and development for the Department of Trade and Industry.

Industrial Aid

32. Mr. Fallon asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much industrial support has been given by Her Majesty's Government to the northern region since 1983.

Mr. Atkins: The amount of industrial support made available to the northern region by way of regional grant and assistance from my Department since 1983 is £659 million. Industry in the region has also received support directly and indirectly from many other Government programmes.

Regional Initiatives

34. Mr. Cran asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he is prepared to have discussions with the representatives of other regions wishing to emulate the Northern Development Company initiative; and whether his Department will support similar initiatives in the same way.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I should welcome my Department being kept informed of progress in other regions towards the creation of fully representative bodies analagous to the NDC. We would have to consider any requests for support on their merits and in the light of the funds available at the time.

Privatisation

36. Mr. Nellist asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce a comprehensive system of departmental monitoring of privatised concerns.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No, Sir.

Inner City Task Forces

37. Ms. Armstrong asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what provision he is making to bring local democratic accountability to the inner city task forces.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am not clear what exactly the hon. Member means by "local democratic accountability". I regard myself as accountable to Parliament for the work of the task forces.

Domestic Furniture (Flammability)

Mr. Gregory asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last held discussions with trade and consumer representatives on flammability of domestic furniture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I met representatives of the industry yesterday. I am currently evaluating the very extensive responses, including the views of consumer interests, to our consultation on the proposal to make new Upholstered Furniture (Safety) Regulations on the basis of a classification and code of practice approach to match resistance, rather than on the basis of direct testing. I shall make a further statement when I have completed my review of this consultation and other matters needing to be taken into account in the new regulations.

Post Office

Mr. John Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has about the performance of the Post Office meeting its delivery targets for first class mail in each quarter since the current method of statistical evaluation was introduced in 1979; if he will introduce legislation to remove the Post Office monopoly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Since the Post Office introduced its current quality of service monitoring information system in 1980 it has sent the Department copies of the leaflets which it publishes quarterly and makes available at Crown post offices. The leaflets give details of the latest quarterly and annual quality of service performance. As to the Post Office's letter monopoly, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend, the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) on 24 July.

Pension Funds

Mr. John Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to regulate the ability of pension funds to invest in the shares of their parent company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have no present plans to do so.

Mr. John Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce legislation to require pension funds to disclose when they deal in the shares of their parent company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Under the Occupational Pension Schemes (Disclosure of Information) Regulations 1986, for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services is responsible, pension schemes are already required to disclose in their annual accounts particulars of any self-investment in excess of 5 per cent. of the total value of the net assets of the scheme. The regulations came into force on 1 November last year. In addition, pension schemes are subject to the normal Companies Act provisions which require the disclosure of an interest equal to or more than 5 per cent. of the relevant share capital of the company concerned.

Furs (Imports)

Mr. O'Brien asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to ban the import of furs from those countries where the use of steel-jawed leg hold traps is still permitted.

Mr. Atkins: The import of furs, skins and other products from endangered species of wild animals is already tightly controlled under conservation legislation. Nevertheless, the Government remain most concerned about the continued widespread use of the steel-jawed leg hold trap—which is prohibited in the United Kingdom—to take certain other animals in the wild. Much fur is farmed or caught in more humane ways and a ban on imports of all fur from those countries still permitting the use of the trap is likely to be seen as disproportionate and contrary to our Community and international obligations. However, my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade is considering what can be done, although there are serious practical difficulties, which I should not want to minimise.

Register of Shareholders

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on her Majesty's Government's proposals in respect of register of shareholders.

Mr. Maude: The consultative document "Delivery of Annual Accounts and Returns to the Registrar of Companies", issued in August 1986, raised a number of issues on registers of shareholders. I hope to make a statement in the next few weeks on company law deregulation more generally which will cover our intentions in this area.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Wray asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which countries in the world are the major importers of British manufactured goods; and how this compares with the situation in 1974 and 1981, respectively.

Mr. Maude: In 1986 our top 10 markets for manufactures took 62 per cent. of our exports worth £34 billion. Figures for these and our chief markets in 1974 and 1981 are in the following table:

United Kingdom exports of manufactured goods[1]

Mr. Wray asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are for each year since 1979, the United Kingdom's major imports of manufactured goods, and what are the 10 most important countries, from which such goods are imported in terms of volume, quantity and cost.

Mr. Maude: Information is available only in value terms and is given in the following tables:

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what grant-in-aid was given to the citizens advice bureau service for (a) recurrent costs and (b) development work in (i) Scotland and (ii) England and Wales in each of the past three financial years; and what are the proposed figures for the coming year.

Mr. Maude: The table shows the total amount of grant-in-aid given by the Department to the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and to the Scottish Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux respectively for each of the last three years, with the amounts actually spent on recurrent costs and on grants to individual bureau by each association. An estimate is also given for the current financial year. Corresponding figures for the coming year are not yet available.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in which parliamentary constituencies in the United Kingdom citizens advice bureau services are not available.

Mr. Maude: I understand that there are approximately 100 out of the 650 parliamentary constituencies in the United Kingdom where citizens advice bureau services are not available. The full list of these constituencies is not yet available, but I will write to the hon. Member with this information as soon as possible.

Lonrho (Accounts)

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assurances Lonrho plc has given him concerning its accounts for future years.

Mr. Maude: Lonrho has told the Department that the company's future accounts will set out the basis and dates of valuations of its fixed asset investments and the names and qualifications of the valuers.

British Home Stores (Bids)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the current bids for British Home Stores plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The proposed acquisition by Benlox Holdings plc for Storehouse plc is being considered by the Director General of Fair Trading. My right hon. and noble Friend will make his decision whether to refer the proposed acquisition to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in the light of the Director General's advice.

Professional Liability

Mr. Key asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received in the past year on the subject of professional liability; and if he will set up an independent inquiry with a view to legislating in this area.

Mr. Maude: Representations have been received from hon. Members and from bodies representing a number of professions including accountants, lawyers, surveyors, architects, patent agents, consulting engineers, town planners and consultants. The subject has also been debated in another place.

In the light of these representations, we have decided to commission a series of fact-finding studies into selected professions to establish the nature, scope, extent and implications of the liability problems they face. The studies will look at three groups of professions — auditors; architects — consulting engineers — construction surveyors; and other surveyors; and will be undertaken by independent study teams with standard terms of reference, copies of which have been placed in the Library. Membership of the study teams will be announced in due course.

Investor Protection

Mr. Warren asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will institute an inquiry into the implication for investor protection of the effect on the ending of on-floor trading on the recent pattern of dealings and price movements on the London stock exchange; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [pursuant to his reply, 27 October 1987]: The Department monitors the stock exchange, in particular its evolution and development as an efficient, competitive and suitably regulated central market which affords proper protection to investors. In addition the Financial Services Act which will come fully into force early next year, sets out arrangements for the statutory recognition of all investment exchanges which meet requirements set out in the Act. The stock exchange is expected to be one of the bodies applying for recognition.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Schizophrenia

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department spent on research into schizophrenia in each of the last five years; and what proportion each figure was of expenditure on the Health Service research programme.

Mr. Needham: In 1987-88 funds amounting to £8,973 have been allocated for research related to schizophrenia. This represents 2·82 per cent. of the clinical research budget. No awards for schizophrenia research were made in the previous four years.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Kimberley Carlile

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to order a public inquiry into the death of Kimberley Carlile, following the withdrawal of three social workers from the proceedings of the present private hearing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No. I understand that the inquiry has not been unduly hindered by the non-availability of some witnesses and that the chairman has indicated that his report will be delivered in the near future.

Ancillary Services

Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the financial effects of competitive tendering for the provision of ancillary services in the health services.

Mr. Newton: Health authorities reported £100 million in annual savings generated by the competitive tendering initiative as at 30 June 1987: £76 million from domestic (cleaning) services, £16 million from catering services and £8 million from laundry services. We expect this figure to increase as further parts of these services go to tender.

Hip Replacements

Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current average cost of a hip replacement operation in the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given in the Official Report on 3 June 1986 at column 533 which was based on an exercise conducted on the 1984-85 figures. The estimated cost in large acute hospitals was shown as £3,300 in 1986-87 figures. A study is in progress to update the information but it is not expected to show a substantial change.

Commercial Tendering

Mr. Allen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has offered any guidance to regional and district health authorities on the desirability of licensing or leasing in respect of commercial tendering for National Health Service work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Yes. A health authority inviting tenders for a laundry service must offer contractors the opportunity of providing the service from the existing National Health Service laundry, assuming there is one. A letter from the then management board chairman to regional health authority chairmen in January 1986 covers this, and advises that such a laundry should be leased to the successful tenderer. However, in response to a specific query we have also offered one regional health authority advice on licensing.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will (a) list the members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines; (b) state the criteria for selection of members; (c) list the relevant qualifications of present members; (d) indicate the number of Trades Union Congress nominated places; and (e) indicate how many Trades Union Congress nominated places are women.

Mr. Newton: The members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines are:

Professor A. W. Asscher, BSc, MD, FRCP, (Chairman), Professor of Renal Medicine, University of Wales, College of Medicine
Dr. G. Booth, B Pharm, PhD, FPS, MCPP, Senior Lecturer in Pharmacy Practice, University of Bradford and ex-President of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain

Professor M. P. Vessey, MB, MD, FFCM, Professor of Social and Community Medicine, University of Oxford

Members are appointed for their expertise in medicine and pharmacy. There are no Trades Union Congress-nominated places.

Family Planning

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the number of community clinic sessions, (family planning) in (a) Camberwell district health authority and (b) Lewisham and North Southwark district health authority in 1985 and 1986;

(2) what was the number of registered patients, (family planning) in (a) Camberwell district health authority and (b) Lewisham and North Southwark district health authority for 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Newton: The available information is given in the table.

Information has been provided on the number of patients seen which will not equal the number of registered patients as not every registered patient will be seen in a particular year. Information on the number of registered patients is not held centrally.

Family planning services

1985

	Camberwell DHA	Lewisham and North Southwark DHA
Number of family planning clinic sessions	2,689	4,326
Patients seen[1]	13,472	27,395

[1] Includes those patients seen by the family planning domiciliary service.

Contraceptive Services

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of claims submitted by general practitioners for contraceptive services in 1985 and 1986 covering Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham Family Practitioners Committee.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information is not collected centrally in this precise form. An estimate of the number of claims submitted in 1985 and 1986 is 40,650 and 42,910, respectively.

Abortions

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the abortion rate for women resident in (a) Camberwell district health authority and (b) Lewisham and North Southwark district health authority for 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Newton: The figures are shown in the table.

Abortions rates for residents of Camberwell DHA and Lewisham and North Southwark DHA 1985 and 1986

Area of usual residence	Abortion rate[1] 1985	1986
Camberwell DHA	32·1	36·6
Lewisham and North Southwark DHA	23·8	29·7

[1] Rate per 1,000 women aged 15-44

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of abortions performed on women resident in (a) Camberwell district health authority and (b) Lewisham and North Southwark district health authority in 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Newton: The figures are shown in the table.

Abortions to residents of Camberwell DHA and Lewisham and North Southwark DHA 1985 and 1986

Area of usual residence	Numbers of abortions 1985	1986
Camberwell DHA	1,693	1,855
Lewisham and North Southwark DHA	1,681	2,214

Patients (Screening)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to circulate a code of practice for doctors on the screening of patients who are at risk of hearing loss after certain infectious illnesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Department would not normally issue guidance on matters of this sort, as the management of individual patients is the responsibility of the clinicians concerned.

Disabled Babies

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the present provision of services to the families of new-born disabled babies; if he proposes any changes in the present arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Arrangements for the provision of services by district health authorities to the families of such babies considered to be at risk of disablement or handicap were set out in the reports of the Maternity Services Advisory Committee and we do not propose any changes to these arrangements.

Multi-Handicapped Visually-Impaired People

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the standard of service provided for multi-handicapped visually-impaired people in mental handicap hospitals; what steps he is taking to improve this service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Royal National Institute for the Blind has sent to the Department for consideration a copy of its report "Out of Isolation" which concerns the development of services for multi-handicapped visually-impaired adults, including those currently resident in mental handicap hospitals. It is for health and local authorities in co-operation to consider how best to the needs of all handicapped people in their areas but the Department has given wide circulation to "Helping Mentally Handicapped People with Special Problems", the report of a DHSS study team published in 1984. This reviewed current approaches to meeting the needs of mentally handicapped people with special problems, including those with visual handicaps, and made suggestions for improvements in services for them. The national development team for people with a mental handicap is available to advise authorities on such services. In addition, the Department has agreed to grant-aid the South Regional Association for the Blind towards the cost of employing a development officer to help plan community-based services for multi-handicapped visually-impaired people.

Public Expenditure White Paper

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish an updated version of table 3.15.12 of volume 2 of the public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 56-(ii)) for 1986-87, making use of the most recently available data.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is produced only once a year, and will be published in the social security chapter of the 1988 public expenditure White Paper.

Schools of Radiology and Radiography

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for 1987 a table showing for each school of radiology and radiography (a) how many students entered for the course to be examined that year, (b) how many dropped out, (c) how many took the examination and (d) how many passed.

Mr. Newton: This information, which is collected by the College of Radiographers, is not immediately available.

I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Sterilisation Operations

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many reversal of sterilisation operations were carried out by the National Health Service in 1986.

Mr. Newton: In 1985, the latest year for which information is available centrally, 2,400 people were treated in National Health Service hospitals for tuboplasty or vasoplasty after previous sterilisation.

Tattoos

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of patients waiting for plastic surgery are waiting to have tattoos removed.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend the information he seeks. Information available centrally on in-patient waiting lists is categorised according to the specialty of treatment only, and not according to the intended method of treatment/operation.

Child Care and Family Services

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to legislate on the basis of his White Paper on child care and family services.

Mr. Newton: We shall want quickly to review the proposals in the White Paper in the light of recommendations in Mrs. Justice Butler-Sloss's report of the Cleveland inquiry when this is received. Subject to that, we intend to introduce a Bill as soon as parliamentary time is available.

Agency Nurses

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide figures or estimates for the amount of Government expenditure on the hiring of private or agency nurses to provide cover for National Health Service shortfalls.

Mr. Newton: The annual accounts of health authorities in England record all their expenditure on the employment of non-National Health Service (agency etc.) nursing staff in total only. The summarised accounts for 1986-87, as yet unaudited, show this expenditure as £70,787,525.

East Berkshire Home Authority

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to overcome the financial difficulties experienced at East Berkshire health authority in meeting the cost of unbudgeted pay awards; if he will consider central funding of these awards; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: East Berkshire health authority has received a cash allocation this year of £69·5 million, 6·5 per cent. more than in 1986-87. The allocation includes a special addition to help health authorities maintain and develop services following this year's review body awards. The health authority must take the necessary steps to balance the cost of service developments against other cost pressures.

London Weighting

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in view of the effect on the recruitment of nurses, he will extend the London weighting allowance for existing staff to East Berkshire.

Mr. Newton: The boundaries within which London weighting are payable are a matter for negotiation between the management and staff sides of the London weighting consortium of the General Whitley Council.

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report those organisations that receive funding for AIDS-related work.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South-West (Mrs. Shephard) on 23 October and to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 26 October. With effect from 26 October we have also given £4·1 million to the Health Education Authority to carry on the AIDS public education campaign.

Agency Doctors

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the cost to the National Health Service per annum of employing agency doctors;

(2) if he has any plans to restrict charges made by agencies supplying doctors to the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: The estimated cost to health authorities in England of medical and dental staff engaged through agencies is £14·9 million. This represents 1·18 per cent. of the pay bill for medical and dental staff, compared with 0·84 per cent. in 1979-80. We have no plans at present to restrict the charges made by agencies, but a number of health authorities are currently taking or considering steps to contain costs and reduce reliance on agencies, and we shall be monitoring their progress.

Birth Statistics

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, following the implementation of the Family Law Reform Act, it is still possible to give an accurate breakdown of birth statistics comparing legitimate with illegitimate births.

Mr. Newton: Yes. The information collected by registrars of births still allows accurate statistics of births to be compiled according to legitimacy.

London

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total number of bed losses in NHS hospitals in London for each of the past five years; and, of these, how many were acute beds.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 20 July 1987, c. 71]: The information requested is given in the table. Reductions in bed numbers do not necessarily mean loss in services. Better use of beds, changing clinical practices and the ability to treat more cases as day cases without patients having to stay in hospital overnight mean that many more cases are being treated in the facilities available. Over the four-year period the number of in-patient cases treated per available bed rose from 17·9 in 1982 to 21 in 1986 and in-patient cases treated per available bed in the acute sector rose from 30·5 to 36. The numbers of cases treated in all specialties—in-patient and day cases—increased by 8·7 per cent. to 1,290,244 cases, and in all acute specialties increased by 4·3 per cent. to 1,037,936 cases.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total amount spent in each district authority area in Wales on housing benefit in each year since the inception of the scheme at outturn and 1987 prices.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his reply, 21 July 1987, c. 170]: The information requested is shown in the tables.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk

Mr. John Marshall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current price of liquid milk in Britain; how this compares with the price in other EEC countries; and what is his assessment of the effect on the price differential of the Milk Marketing Boards' monopoly.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The retail price of ordinary pasteurised milk varies from 20p per pint to 27p per pint depending on the packaging used and the type of retail outlet through which it is sold. The price range is even wider if other types of drinking milk are included. Comparison with the price in other member states is therefore very difficult and is further complicated by currency fluctuations and by differences in fat contents. There is, however, no evidence that our milk marketing arrangements result in a price to the consumer which is out of line with that in other member states.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The policy in my Department towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act, is as follows:

(a) members of staff will not be charged for reasonable access;

(b) other data subjects will be charged a standard fee of £10 for access to each registration.

My Department has made 40 registrations under the Act.

In organising the registrations, officials have sought, wherever possible, to restrict individual registrations to geographical areas or specific areas of work. Ten registrations have only members of staff as the data subjects. Of the other 30 registrations, five registrations cover administrative functions in the Department's five regions and a further six registrations cover the work of ADAS in the regions and Wales. Although possible, it is thought to be unlikely that an individual would wish to access all of these 11 regional registrations. The remaining 19 registrations cover the work of the various divisions concerning the agricultural, fishing and food industries.

The number of registrations to be accessed by data subjects to obtain all personal data held about them in my Department will, therefore, vary considerably from case to case according to the business interests of the individual, at a cost which could range from £10 to £300.

However, whilst data subjects may refer to the data protection register to determine which registrations are likely to hold their personal data, it is intended that an explanatory leaflet will be sent by my officials to each data subject who requests access, as a guide to the coverage and contents of each registration, with a view to minimising the costs to the data subjects.

Dairy Farmers (Incomes)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food was the estimated income of dairy farmers in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland in 1978-79, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 expressed at 1978 prices.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested, expressed in 1978-79 real price terms, is given in the table. I regret that figures for 1986-87 are not yet available.

£ thousands

	England	Wales	Scotland	Northern Ireland
1978-79	8·8	7·3	6·4	7·7
1982-83	8·2	6·5	7·4	6·7

	England	Wales	Scotland	Northern Ireland
1983-84	4·6	5·2	4·9	5·6
1984-85	4·9	3·7	4·8	5·4
1985-86	6·1	5·6	3·3	3·3

Notes:

(a) Net farm income is defined as the return to the farmer and spouse for their manual and managerial labour and on tenant type capital in livestock, crops, machinery etc., but not on land and buildings. It is calculated before the deduction of interest payments on any farming loans.

(b) The incomes for 1982-83 and subsequent years have been expressed in 1978-79 prices by deflating by the all items retail prices index with 1978-79 = 100.

Source: Farm Business Survey.

CAP (Surpluses)

Mr. Grocott asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost, in the latest year for which figures are available, of disposing of Common Agricultural Policy surplus foodstuffs.

Mr. MacGregor: Community expenditure on export refunds and internal disposal subsidies, (including loss on sale out of intervention) for commodities in structural surplus (cereals, sugar, olive oil, wine, beef, milk and milk products) in 1986 was 12,726 million ecu (£8,245 million).

Radiation

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farms in England have been affected by the restrictions on sale or movement of livestock due to excessive radiation levels since the nuclear plant explosion at Chernobyl.

Mr. Donald Thompson: 1,676 holdings in England were affected when restrictions were first introduced on 20 June 1986. Currently 150 of these holdings are still subject to restrictions.

Schemes to permit the movement and marketing of sheep from restricted holdings were introduced in August 1986 and are continuing.

Storm Damage

Miss Widdicombe asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what compensation he will make available to farmers in Kent who suffered losses during the storm of 15 and 16 October; if he will make special compensation available to fruit farmers; if he has any plan to visit affected farms in Kent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I informed the House on 22 October, in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith) that, whilst I am very sympathetic to the losses to farmers as a result of storm damage, I see no reason to depart from the longstanding position, which is that farmers normally bear the cost of bad weather. The majority normally insure against such risks and it is not the practice of the Government to pay compensation in situations of this kind.

Nevertheless, some farmers have lost a very large number of hedges and trees and the environmental impact has been considerable. I am therefore having urgent consultations with the European Commission to see if increased rates of grant can be given under the agriculture improvement scheme for shelter belts, hedges and traditional walls.

So far as fruit farmers are concerned, I am still assessing the losses in consultation with the NFU and others, and will consider the position after I have done so.

I am very much aware of the situation in the affected area in Kent.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to support efforts to strengthen the international code of conduct on the use and distribution of pesticides, with particular reference to article 9 on information exchange at the forthcoming Food and Agriculture Organisation council and conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply.

There is not yet sufficient practical experience of operating the existing information exchange procedure based on the FAO code of conduct and the UNEP London guidelines to decide whether the code of conduct needs to be modified.

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list, with regard to the interim notification scheme and the London guidelines for the exchange of information on chemicals in international trade, part II, notification and information regarding banned and severely restricted chemicals, how many notifications of control action and what relevant information has been sent to other countries when an export of such a chemical is occurring; and if he can list the chemicals notified, the companies involved and the countries to which they have been sent and on what dates;

(2) if he is satisfied that, under the provisions of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, adequate information has been provided voluntarily by pesticide exporting companies to permit the Government to fulfil their international obligations for information exchange on banned and severely restricted pesticides; what information has been provided concerning the products countries and date of export; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply to these questions.

The United Kingdom was among the first countries to implement the UNEP provisional export notification scheme and the UNEP London guidelines.

The United Kingdom has issued control actions for 41 chemicals which are listed at table 1, 22 of which can be used as pesticides. In accordance with the requirements of the UNEP scheme, the notification of control action contains information concerning the reason for the control action, the title of the legislation under which the substance is controlled and the name and address of a contact point from whom further relevant information may be obtained, and any exceptions or derogations. Copies of all the legislation referred to in the control actions are available from the international register of potentially toxic chemicals and the United Kingdom banned or severely restricted chemicals are listed in the second issue of the United Nations consolidated list of products whose consumption and/or sale have been banned, withdrawn, severely restricted or not approved by Governments.

A list of 22 export notifications, four of which can be used as pesticides, is at table 2. The date, destination and name of the compounds exported is given. Details of the companies involved are confidential. All this information has been provided voluntarily, but under part III of FEPA 1985 Ministers may require the provision of any information necessary to fulfil their international obligations to supply information.

SCOTLAND

Radiation Monitoring

Mr. MacDonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to establishing a series of permanent radiation monitoring stations in the Highlands and Islands.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet) on 30 June, at columns 65-67 in which she announced the framework of a new national plan for responding to radioactivity incidents which may occur outwith the United Kingdom. The monitoring network which will be set up under the plan will consist of more than 80 fixed stations for the initial detection and measurement of radioactivity, of which about 15 are likely to be in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland.

Rates

Mr. MacDonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average domestic rates bill in the Western Isles for each year since 1978 in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms, showing, in each case, the percentage change between years.

[1] Estimate.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the percentage change in rate fund contribution over the previous year for Scotland for each year from 1978 to 1987;

(2) if he will give the percentage change in rate fund contribution over the previous year for Edinburgh district council for each year from 1978 to 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table:

SSHA (Tenants)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of tenants living in Scottish Special Housing Association rented accommodation in the constituency of Monklands, West in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally by constituency area.

Tourism

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the tourist industry in Scotland about the level of funding made available to the Scottish tourist board; and if he will state what increases he proposes in 1988's block grant to the Scottish tourist board.

Mr. Lang: A number of representations have been received from the tourist industry about the level of funding for the Scottish tourist board and my noble friend the Minister of State recently met a delegation from the Scottish Confederation of Tourism. Decisions on the level of funding for 1988-89 will be taken soon.

Tourism

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is satisfied that the allocation of the funds from central Government made by the Scottish tourist board adequately takes account of the needs of the local area tourist boards; and if he will make a statement outlining the increases he proposes in 1988's allocation to assist the development work being undertaken by the area tourist boards.

Mr. Lang: It is for the three partners in area tourist boards—the trade, local authorities, and the Scottish tourist board or the Highlands and Islands development board in its area—to consider the balance of funding. The trade is expected to make a substantial contribution to the operation of area tourist boards whose main function is servicing visitors to their areas. Government assistance can only be supplementary. It is for the relevant board to determine how much it allocates to area tourist boards in relation to its priorities and the resources available.

Housing

Mr. Doran asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of tenants living in Scottish Special Housing Association rented accommodation in the Aberdeen, South constituency in each year since 1979.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing numbers of tenants in Scottish Special Housing Assocition accommodation in Cunninghame, North constituency since 1978.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally by constituency area.

Pupils (Statistics)

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total numbers of pupils on school rolls and the pupil-to-teacher ratio in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in the Strathkelvin and Bearsden constituency for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Strathkelvin and Bearsden can be obtained from Strathclyde regional council.

Arts

Mr. Menzies Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he has any plans to establish an independent council with responsibility for the arts in Scotland with similar powers and responsibilities to those of the Scottish Sports Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Free School Meals

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each education authority in Scotland, the number of children who take school meals who are entitled to free school meals by reason of (i) their family being entitled to family income supplement or supplementary benefit, and (ii) the discretionary power of the local authority to extend free meal provision.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

AIDS

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the rate of increase in new sufferers of AIDS both in Scotland as a whole and in the Strathclyde region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Up to the end of September 1987, 31 persons in Scotland had been registered with the Communicable Diseases (Scotland) Unit as suffering from AIDS; this represents an increase of 17 over the cumulative total of AIDS cases in Scotland reported up to the end of September 1986. Since the figure for a particular region may be very low, and its publication may in consequence endanger medical confidentiality, a geographical breakdown of AIDS cases in Scotland is not at present published.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures of National health Service patients treated for AIDS.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Up to the end of September 1987, 31 cases of patients in Scotland suffering from AIDS had been reported to the Communicable Diseases (Scotland) Unit. Of this total, 15 had died.

School Meals

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what instructions he will give to the proper authorities so that they closely check that, after the abolition of meal facilities for school children at school, the nutritional needs of such children do not suffer;

(2) what steps he will take to ensure that, after the abolition of meal facilities for school children at their schools, such children will be able to choose the kind of food which contains the nutritional values they require for their good health and development;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that the compensation given after the meal facilities for school children are abolished will cover the needs for adequate nutrition of the children.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not the Government's intention to abolish school meal facilities. From 1 April 1988 the children's rates of family credit will take account of the cost of school meals and it is estimated that more pupils will be assisted with the cost of school meals than qualify under family income supplement and discretionary schemes now. These changes will not constrain the freedom of education authorities to decide the form and nutritional content of school meals.

Rating Reform

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in Dunfermline, East in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (a) 100 per cent. collection, (b) 95 per cent. collection, (c) 90 per cent. collection, (d) 85 per cent. collection, (e) 80 per cent. collection, (f) 75 per cent. collection, and (g) 70 per cent. collection;

(2) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer in Fife will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in Fife.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration of all adults in the Clydesdale constituency;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the Clydesdale constituency in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (1) 100 per cent. collection, (2) 95 per cent. collection, (3) 90 per cent. collection, (4) 85 per cent. collection, (5) 80 per cent. collection, (6) 75 per cent. collection and (7) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Pupil-Teacher Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total numbers of pupils on school rolls and the pupil-to-teacher ratio in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Dunfermline, East for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Dunfermline, East can be obtained from Fife regional council.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total numbers of pupils on school rolls, and the pupil to teacher ratio in (1) primary and (2) secondary schools in the Clydesdale constituency for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Clydesdale can be obtained from Strathclyde regional council.

Scottish Special Housing Association

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of tenants living in Scottish Special Housing Association rented accommodation in Dunfermline, East in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally by constituency area.

Closures

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the closures that have resulted in 25 or more redundancies in Dunfermline, East in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information requested cannot be provided since details of closures and redundancies confirmed by individual companies are provided to the Manpower Services Commission in confidence.

Higher and Further Education

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils from Dunfermline, East have obtained places in higher or further education in each year since 1979; and if he will express that number as a percentage of the age group for each year.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils from the Clydesdale constituency have obtained places in higher or further education in each year since 1979; and if he will express that number as a percentage in each group for each year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not readily available.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what cumulative volume of (a) high level, (b) intermediate level and (c) low level nuclear waste has been created by the operation of nuclear installations in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested because much of the waste from the operation of Scottish nuclear installations arises at Sellafield when fuel is reprocessed and is not separately identifiable. However such waste is included in the national radioactivity waste inventory published in the annual reports of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee—RWMAC—which also contain information about the wastes being stored at Scottish nuclear installations.

In general, low level wastes are disposed of as they arise and the most recent information for Scottish sites is in the Scottish Development Department Statistical Bulletin No. 1/1986 — "Radioactive Waste Disposals from Nuclear Sites in Scotland: 1980 to 1984". The bulletin and the RWMAC reports are available in the Library.

Immunisation

Dr. Moonie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a table giving details of all childhood immunisations in Scotland, for each health board, for the years 1976 to 1986 inclusively.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is in the table:

SHARPEN Report

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's response to the SHARPEN report, "Scottish Health Authorities Resource Priorities for the Eighties and Nineties".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 26 October 1987. A statement by the Government will be possible only after advice about the report Scottish Health Authorities Review of Priorities for the Eighties and Nineties — SHARPEN — and its recommendations has been received from the Scottish Health Service Planning Council which will consider the report in detail at its meeting in March 1988.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the circulation of the report on the Scottish Health Service "Scottish Health Authorities Resource Priorities for the Eighties and Nineties".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 26 October 1987.

Carstairs State Hospital

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail planned capital expenditure for Carstairs state hospital to improve facilities for patients.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend is presently considering proposals by the state hospital management committee for upgrading the ward accommodation at the hospital.

Dredging Operations

Mr. Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any intention to police and control dredging operations arising from widespread seabed trawling for shellfish off the Scottish coastline.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Almost all seabed trawling for shellfish in waters off the Scottish coast takes place in muddy grounds where nephrops—prawns—are found. Light gear is used and disturbance of the seabed is minimal. Fishing operations are subject to European Community conservation and control measures which are vigorously enforced by the fishery protection service. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to introduce further control measures.

Adult Education

Mr. Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report statistics for the most recent available period, and for the five previous years, relating to Government expenditure on adult education in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Education Department does not maintain separate records of educational expenditure for those who have reached the age of majority.

National Health Service

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1979 (a) the number of National Health Service beds in Clydesdale constituency and (b) the number of National Health Service staff in terms of full-time equivalents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally on a constituency basis.

Haemophilia Centres (Funding)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will provide funding for the haemophilia centres in Edinburgh and Glasgow to enable them to carry out AIDS-related work.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The funding of the haemophilia centres in Edinburgh and Glasgow is a matter for Lothian and Greater Glasgow health boards to consider in the context of the various demands which AIDS and HIV infection are placing and will place on them.

Air Misses

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the reports of near misses involving aircraft in Scotland in the last five years; and if he will publish the reports which have been made following investigations of these incidents.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible through National Air Traffic Services—NATS—for airspace management. The authority has told me that the total reported air misses over Scotland and adjacent inshore waters were as follows:

	Number
1982	20
1983	19
1984	22
1985	12
1986	19
1987	[1]17

[1] To 1 October.

Reports of the investigations carried out by NATS into reported air misses are confidential and are not made public.

Benefits

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in the Western Isles are currently in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit, (b) invalidity benefit, (c) housing benefit (d) sickness benefit, (e) mobility allowance and (f) maternity benefit; and how many people have received single payments in the current financial year.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

Social security benefits for the Western Isles are paid by the Department's office at Stornaway. Housing benefit is dealt with by the Western Isles regional council. The information requested is as follows, the dates are the latest dates for which information is available.

1. Supplementary benefit claimants as at 28 July 1987 were 4,574.
2. Sickness and invalidity benefits claimants at 20 October 1987 were 717; separate records are not kept of recipients of sickness and invalidity benefit.
3. Mobility allowance is administered centrally and details are not available of the numbers of beneficiaries in the Western Isles.
4. Maternity benefit claimants at 20 October 1987 were five.
5. Single payments: During the current financial year until 20 October 1987 there have been 519 decisions which resulted in either a full or part payment.
6. Housing benefit: Information is not available in the precise form requested. In the current financial year the provisional figure for rate rebate recipients is 4,215. This figure is the normal pointer used for housing benefit recipients.

Rents

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the average rents for council houses in Edinburgh in each year from 1977 to 1987;

(2) if he will give the average rents for council houses in Edinburgh in each year from 1977 to 1986, repriced for inflation;

(3) if he will give the average rents for council houses in Edinburgh in each year from 1977 to 1987, repriced for inflation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table:

Average Weekly Council House Rent in Edinburgh

Year	Cash prices £	[1]At 1987-88 prices £
1977-78	5·17	11·64
1978-79	5·71	10·50

NATIONAL FINANCE

Child Benefit

Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had regarding the imposition of taxes on child benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: This subject was discussed during the social security review that preceded the Social Security Act 1986.

Job Creation

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of jobs created for the expenditure of £1 billion in (i) defence spending, (ii) public transport, (iii) construction, (iv) health and (v) education.

Mr. Major: Irrespective of composition, higher overall public expenditure is unlikely to have any lasting beneficial effect on the level of employment for the economy as a whole. Estimates of the short-run effects are unreliable because they depend critically on the economic model and the underlying assumptions that are used.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the current status of the Government data network project, including a description of the discussions he has had with the Data Protection Registrar concerning the project.

Mr. Major: Following the shortlisting in March this year, further discussions and demonstrations have taken place with consortia. It is expected that memoranda of agreement will be signed shortly and tenders invited before the end of the year. A final decision on whether or not to proceed will be taken after tenders have been evaluated.

The Paymaster General met the Data Protection Registrar on 8 September and discussed the nature of GDN as a shared physical network facility for data but which will consist of a collection of virtual networks for each of the participating Departments. Further work is continuing on guidance to be offered to Departments about good practice to be adopted before linking to GDN. The Paymaster General and the Data Protection Registrar also discussed how the DPR might carry forward his planned contact with the four participating Departments, which are themselves responsible for the care and ownership of data transferred across the network.

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Brooke: The Treasury's policy towards fees for subject access under the Data Protection Act will be to make no charge to employees and ex-employees. For anyone else the charge will be £10.

The Treasury has two registrations under the Act: one for the Chessington computer centre as a bureau, the other for the remainder of the Treasury as a user and a bureau.

The total cost to a data subject for each access request will be £10.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the Inland Revenue to publish its accounts (1) for the year ended 31 March 1986 and (2) for the year ended 31 March 1987.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue's appropriation account for the year ended 31 March 1986, together with a summary statement of the revenue receipts for that year, was published with the report of the Comptroller and Auditor General in November 1986. Similar accounts for the year ended 31 March 1987 have been submitted to the Comptroller and Auditor General and will be published with his report in due course.

A more detailed account of revenue receipts for the two years in question will be contained in the Board of Inland Revenue's next report. Following the recommendation of the Public Accounts Committee and the Select Committee on the Treasury and Civil Service the report will in future be based on a financial year, rather than a calendar year as now. In consequence the next report will cover the 15 months ending 31 March 1987: it is due for publication in December 1987.

Income Tax

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will recalculate the figures given in the answer to the hon. Member for Kensington on 23 March 1987, Official Report, column 35, about personal allowances on the basis of the existing income tax rate of 27 per cent., and assuming weekly basic incomes of (a) £10, (b) £11 and (c) £12.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987, c. 790]: The yield to the Exchequer of replacing all existing personal allowances with basic incomes of £10, £11 and £12 per week would be £5 billion, £3 billion and nil respectively in a full year at 1987-88 income levels. The offsetting costs from allowing tax discounts on earned and unearned incomes for each individual are estimated to be as follows:

Weekly tax discount on earned income (£)	Cost in a full year at 1987-88 income levels (£ billion)
3·00	4
6·00	8
7·50	10

Weekly tax discount on investment income[1] (£)	Cost in a full year at 1987-88 income levels (£ billion)
3·00	3
6·00	5
7·50	6
21·00	10
30·00	11

BP Share Offer

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the underwriters and sub-underwriters, both United Kingdom-based and foreign, committed to the current BP share offer, and the maximum proportion of financial commitment in each case.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The obligations of the United Kingdom and overseas underwriters for the BP offer are set out in paragraph 7 of section 10 of the United Kingdom prospectus, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

The names of the 17 United Kingdom underwriters are given on page 1 of the United Kingdom prospectus. However, in the United Kingdom this underwriting risk has been passed on to a large number (measured in hundreds) of sub-underwriters, generally investors such as United Kingdom pension funds and insurance companies. The United Kingdom underwriters are liable to take up shares to the extent they are not taken up by sub-underwriters.

The four United States underwriters are Goldman, Sachs & co., Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated, Salomon Brothers Incorporated and Shearson Lehman Brothers Incorporated.

The three Canadian underwriters are Wood Gundy Inc., McLeod Young Weir Limited and Dominion Securities Inc.

The five Japanese underwriters are Daiwa Securities Co. Ltd., the Nomura Securities Co. Ltd., the Nikko Securities Co. Ltd., S. G. Warburg Securities (Japan) Inc. and Yamaichi Securities Company, Limited.

The 87 European underwriters are as follows.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will institute inquiries into discussions which have taken place between certain underwriters of the current BP share issue about the organisation of concerted buying operation to lift the price of existing BP shares on the market and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: If the hon. Member has evidence of any activity of this nature in connection with the BP share sale, he should notify me immediately.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what decisions have been made on the imposition of value added tax on bus travel in the United Kingdom following the European Economic Community's considerations on the harmonisation of value added tax rates in its various member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We have already made it clear that we would not accept proposals which restricted our ability to use zero rating.

Alcohol

Dr. Godman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised from taxes on alcohol in the financial year 1986-87; and what were the comparable figures for 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information is as follows (figures are in £ million)

	Excise	[1]VAT	Total tax
1986-87	4,195·6	2,150	6,345·6
1985-86	4,197·3	2,050	6,247·3
1984-85	3,760·6	1,890	5,650·6

DEFENCE

Nimrod Early Warning Programme

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of his review of the failures of management in his Department during the Nimrod airborne early warning programme, and on the findings of that review.

Mr. Sainsbury: The review to which my hon. Friend refers was to examine our arrangements for the scientific and technical specification and monitoring of major projects against the background of our experience with Nimrod AEW. It has now been completed and the report is being examined. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as this work is completed.

Anglo-American Community Relations Committee

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will (a) list the members of the Anglo-American Community Relations Committee; (b) state the criteria for selection of members; (c) list the relevant qualifications of present members; (d) indicate the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places; and (e) indicate how many Trades Union Congress-nominated places are held by women.

Mr. Freeman: An Anglo-American community relations committee exists at each of the main bases made available to United States forces. There is no central committee.

The chairmanship of each local committee carries no financial reward and the person appointed by me is selected from a list of volunteers. The secretary of each committee is, without exception, the community relations adviser to the base and is a MOD-employed civil servant. The viewpoint of the base authorities is represented by the RAF commander and the United States base commander. The remaining members of each committee representing the local community are volunteers appointed by the chairman, without reference to MOD.

Given the voluntary nature of these committees, no organisations other than the base authorities are represented. Therefore the question of Trades Union Congress nominated places does not arise.

Arms and Ammunition (Security)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence what instances of theft of ammunition or firearms have occurred in the last 12 months at training establishments of air training corps or other similar bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Over the past 12 months there have been 53 break-ins at a total of 3,327 service cadet corps establishments resulting in the theft of the following firearms and ammunition:

	Firearms	Ammunition
Air Training Corps	5 × ·22" rifles (1 rifle recovered)	4,877 rounds of ·22" ammunition (838 rounds recovered)
Army Cadet Force and Combined Cadet Force	18 × ·177" air rifles (6 air rifles recovered)	Nil
Sea Cadet Corps	Nil	Nil

In addition 39 inert non-firing drill purpose rifles have been stolen, of which 16 have been recovered, and 107 inert drill purpose rounds of which 35 have been recovered.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence what security arrangements are made for ammunition and fire arms in the possession of air training corps and other similar bodies.

Mr. Freeman: Firearms held by service cadet forces are stored in secure or structurally approved armouries, except that where it is not possible or economical to provide an armoury small bore ·22" rifles and ·303" non-firing drill purpose rifles may be stored in approved steel arms chests. Ammunition is stored in regular service armouries or properly constructed ammunition stores except that where it is not possible or economical to provide an ammunition store small quantities of small arms ·22" ammunition may be stored in approved steel containers; ammunition is kept separate from firearms.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act and (f) what action has been taken to facilitate job share, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Sainsbury: The departmental equal opportunities officer, who is generally responsible for industrial relations policy in the Department, allocates some 5 per cent. of personal working time to specific equal opportunities work. The promotion of equal opportunities is an integral part of personnel management, and it is not possible to attribute specific costs. The departmental equal opportunities officer or his representative regularly meets colleagues from other Government Departments at committees chaired by the office of the Minister for the Civil Service, and at other meetings to discuss specific issues. Action is being taken to ensure that women have access to relevant training, including women-only courses, and equal opportunities awareness is being promoted on all appropriate courses and through an instruction to all staff. In conjunction with the MOD Council of Civil Service Unions, a survey has been conducted to determine the demand for job-sharing and part-time working. As a result a circular is being issued throughout the Department drawing attention to the possibility of creating job shares or part-time posts. Arrangements exist to accommodate requests for special leave to cope with domestic responsibilities.

Northern Norway

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what requests have been received for British forces to fill the gap left by the Canadian decision to withdraw the CAST brigade from the reinforcement of northern Norway.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No request has been made for British forces to assume this role. The Canadian proposal to withdraw the CAST brigade from its role in the reinforcement of northern Norway is presently the subject of assessment by NATO military authorities, in accordance with normal procedures. The United Kingdom already makes a significant contribution to the defence of northern Norway and will, along with allies, give careful consideration to the NMA's assessment.

Fort Chaffee, Arkansas

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of troops expected to take part in operations next year at the Joint Readiness Training Centre at Fort Chaffee in Arkansas; and what is the purpose of the training.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to my answer of 22 October to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) at column 874.

Irish Sea (Submarines)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the Royal Navy, through the Flag Officers Scotland and Northern Ireland, will arrange a meeting with the Northern Ireland fishing industry to discuss submarines in the Irish Sea, as was suggested in the letter of 15 April from his Department to the Northern Ireland Fish Producers Association Ltd.

Mr. Ian Stewart: An invitation has now been sent to the Northern Ireland fish producers organisation to attend a meeting on this subject with representatives of the Royal Navy.

Rosyth Dockyard

Dr. Moonie asked the Secretary of State for Defence if in the light of the recent court decision in favour of Mr. Alex Falconer, MEP, he will now seek to identify all those who have been exposed to excessive levels of asbestos at Rosyth dockyard; he will provide proper screening for lung damage for those concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Employees at Rosyth dockyard who may have been exposed to asbestos fall into two categories; those whose work requires them to operate in an environment where they may be exposed to high levels of asbestos dust and those who may have been accidentally exposed to low levels of dust. The former, classified as registered asbestos workers, are provided with personal protective equipment and are subject to special health surveillance procedures laid down by the Health and Safety Executive. Every effort is made to ensure that safe working practices eliminate the possibility of accidental exposure but individuals who believe that they may have been exposed in this way are able to request that their personal records be annotated to that effect. These methods of identification continue to be available following the transfer of the dockyard to commercial management in April 1987.

With regard to health screening, existing health checks for registered asbestos workers include regular chest X-rays. In addition, my Department made available in November 1986, and again in early 1987, facilities at Rosyth for full plate X-rays for any MOD employee who was about to transfer to Babcock Thorn and who, not being a registered asbestos worker, had not had access to this level of scrutiny for some time.

Courts Martial

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on procedure for Army courts martial, including the procedure for selection of Army officers to adjudicate;

(2) what training is given to Army officers who adjudicate over courts martial; and approximately how frequently in a year any one officer undertakes the duty.

Mr. Freeman: Serious cases are usually investigated by the Special Investigation Branch, Royal Military Police, who submit a report to the commanding officer. It is the CO's responsibility then to decide what, if any, action is to be taken. If he is of the opinion that the case should be tried by court-martial, after complying with certain formalities, he will send the relevant papers to an officer empowered to convene courts-martial, usually of the rank of brigadier or above. If this officer agrees that trial by court-martial is appropriate, he will convene a court. Legal advice is, of course, available to the officers concerned at all stages.

All Army officers are required to undergo instruction in military law as part of their general training, and have to pass an examination in this subject. They are also expected to attend trials as an officer under instruction on a number of occasions before they actually sit as a member of a court. Additionally, many officers will have practical experience of the disciplinary process by virtue of an appointment as adjutant or assistant adjutant of their unit. So far as the selection of officers to compose a particular court is concerned, the usual practice is to nominate the president by name, and to delegate to the commanding officers of various units the duty of nominating a suitably qualified officer to sit on the court. Courts-martial trying the more serious cases will have a judge advocate sitting with them to advise on the law and to sum up the facts for them.

It is not possible to say how frequently in a year any one officer sits with a court, as this will vary from individual to individual.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions over the past five years a court martial has ruled that charges be dropped because of lack of evidence.

Mr. Freeman: Cases where a court martial has accepted a submission of no case to answer or has used its power to stop a case are not separately recorded and could be identified only at disproportionate cost.

Bullying and Brutality

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence at what level in the armed forces complaints about bullying are held; how many units at this level there are; and what would be the cost of relaying the information to his Department for central collation.

Mr. Freeman: Investigations are held variously at unit or command level, and with reference to MoD centrally where the circumstances dictate. I will write to the right hon. Member on the further detail.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence during the current year, what action has been taken by the Adjutant General, Sir David Mostyn, that has been specifically aimed at preventing bullying and brutality.

Mr. Freeman: Bullying is not tolerated in the British Army. The Adjutant General regards such matters very seriously and takes every opportunity including his annual conference and his numerous visits to units at home and overseas to remind commanders of the importance of careful supervision at all levels. More specifically, in January he directed that a letter be sent to senior commanders drawing their attention to recent alleged incidences of bullying. The subject was discussed at his conference in May and in July he wrote further to all commanders, to remind them of the need for continued vigilance, and for firm disciplinary action to be taken against offenders in cases where allegations of ill-treatment or bullying are substantiated. He has asked commanders to report back to him by December after thorough investigation in their own areas of command, and to make proposals fo future means of combating bullying.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for defence if he will make provision for soldiers to be able to make complaints about bullying to Army personnel who are not in the same battalion.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the right hon. Member to the answers I gave him on 2 April, Official Report, at column 565. Provision already exists for a soldier to complain not only up his own chain of command but also to senior visiting officers. It is also open to him to approach other officers in a unit, not in direct line of command, or various welfare agencies. He may also submit a redress of grievance.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions over the past five years it has been found that initiation rites of an undesirable nature are taking place in the Army; what was the source of information; and what action was taken.

Mr. Freeman: I shall write to the right hon. Member.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army courts martial there have been in each of the last five years; how many of them have been concerned with Army brutality; in how many of these the accused was found guilty; and what sentences were imposed.

Mr. Freeman: I shall write to the right hon. Member.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions over the past five years witnesses for a pending court martial involving bullying have been temporarily removed from their regiment for their own protection.

Mr. Freeman: I shall write to the right hon. Member.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how frequently it is found impossible to pursue allegations of bullying because no witness is willing to give evidence.

Mr. Freeman: Where the complainant himself is prepared to give witness, inquiries are invariably initiated.

Anonymous allegations of bullying are most difficult to pursue, because there is no full statement of the complaint, nor sufficient detail of alleged offences, to enable proper investigation.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any indications or suggestions that fear of the consequences restrains recruits from complaining about Army bullying.

Mr. Freeman: The Army is well aware that there could be a reluctance on the part of some recruits to complain about bullying, and that this can be a risk when dealing anywhere with matters of this kind. All possible steps are taken to try to overcome this difficulty. Each soldier knows of his right to go over the head of his immediate commander, to a higher level, if this should prove necessary, or to approach any senior visiting officer. Other forms of advice and help are also available, for example, the unit medical officer, the padre, the families' officer, and the staff of welfare agencies such as the WRVS and SSAFA.

Absent Without Leave

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any form of counselling or contact with welfare officers is automatically provided after personnel are absent without leave.

Mr. Freeman: Counselling is not provided as a matter of course. However, if during the investigation of his case or in discussion with the soldier concerned the commanding officer felt that counselling would be of any value, this would be arranged.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the punishments that are given when Army personnel return or are found after being absent without leave, showing how many people received each punishment, in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: Punishments vary widely according to the circumstances and seriousness of each case. Trivial absence of a few hours or half a day would probably mean only a fine or lesser punishment, but a more serious case could entail detention or dismissal. In cases where the commanding officer judges that the soldier is not blameworthy, or where there proves to be a good reason for absence, there would not necessarily be any punishment.

On the further detail requested, I will write to the right hon. Member.

Sentencing Policy

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what procedure the Army has, similar to judges' sentencing conferences, to enable a general discussion by relevant people about the level of sentences.

Mr. Freeman: The Army holds a biannual discipline seminar which is attended by the permanent presidents of district courts-martial, and by representatives of Army Legal Services and of the disciplinary branches of formations responsible for convening courts martial. The Judge Advocate General or his representative also attend. Additionally, the Judge Advocate General, from his experience of sentencing in Crown courts, advises convening officers in the great majority of cases.

Young Recruits (Experience)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions are placed on the freedom of young recruits who voluntarily leave the Army within six months to talk publicly about their experiences in the Army.

Mr. Freeman: There are no restrictions placed on recruits who leave the Army, other than the normal obligations not to disclose information learnt in the course of their official duties.

WALES

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act and (f) what action has been taken to facilitate job share, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Ten per cent., but see (c) below.

(b) The equal opportunities officer is also responsible for pay and allowances policy, superannuation, training including the senior management development programme, pay superannuation and conditions of service of staff of non-departmental public bodies, terms of appointment of consultants and line management of operational staff.

(c) This is not separately identifiable. The equal opportunities officer is responsible for co-ordinating the Civil Service policy on non-discrimination in my Department; other staff within personnel management division and line managers are to varying degrees responsible for developing, implementing and monitoring equal opportunities policy.

(d) There is a number of occasions throughout the year when equal opportunities officers from all Departments meet.

(e) The general guidelines on training were included in the "Programme of Action for Women in the Civil Service" issued by the OMCS(MPO) in 1984 and these were brought to the attention of the equal opportunities officer and departmental training officer.

(f) Applications for job sharing, part-time working and parental leave are sympathetically considered against the needs of efficient management. My Department will shortly be issuing to all staff a leaflet on coping with domestic changes which will provide comprehensive information and advice on the facilities available for part-time working and job sharing, special leave, maternity leave and reinstatement.

Mental Health

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how much was spent by his Department in each of the last five years on the care and treatment of patients suffering from schizophrenia: and what percentage each figure was of total expenditure on (a) mental and (b) all health services;

(2) what is the current annual cost overall per patient to his Department's health and social security budget of the care and treatment of patients with a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not collected in Wales.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many current occupants of National Health Service hospital and unit beds in Wales have a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis; and what those figures are as a percentage of (a) mental and (b) all hospital beds in Wales; and how those figures compare with each of the past five years;

(2) how many people discharged from hospital following a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis and subsequently taken by the police under section to hospital have been refused admission by hospitals in Wales in each of the last five years;

(3) if he will list for each of the last five years in Wales how many people discharged from mental illness hospitals, after a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis, having been proved vulnerable boarders, subsequently became voluntary boarders.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people with a main diagnosis of schizophrenic pychosis were discharged from mental illness hospital in Wales in each of the last five years; and how many of them were taken into local authority residential care in the same year.

Mr. Grist: Information on the number of people discharged from mental illness hospitals with a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis is not collected centrally. The following table provides a breakdown of the total number of discharges, giving the numbers of discharges directly to local authority residential care (including those discharges to local authority homes for the mentally disordered), the number of deaths, and the numbers of those discharged elsewhere. These figures relate only to the number of discharges and will therefore include a number of patients who were subsequently readmitted and re-discharged within the same year.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Wales what funds have been specifically earmarked for the care of the mentally ill following the closure of mental hospitals in Wales in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: There have been no closures of mental illness hospitals in Wales in the last year. However, over £1·7 million of central funding has been allocated during 1987-88 under the joint finance and mental health development schemes to new projects designed to cater for mentally ill people in the community.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many community psychiatric nurses there have been in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Grist: The required information, measured on the basis of whole-time equivalents as at 30 September, is as follows:

Mental Illness Community Psychiatric Nurses

	Whole-time equivalents

1984	143·5

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the admissions by diagnosis and order of admissions, including percentage change in numbers and rates per 100,000 population, of patients suffering from schizophrenic psychosis in Wales for the years 1984-86 inclusive.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is given in the following table:

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what representations he has received on the provision of community care for patients suffering from schizophrenic psychosis discharged from mental illness hospitals; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what guidance his Department gives to mental illness hospitals on the retention of patients whose condition is unlikely to improve; and what is the current policy of each hospital in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Representations are received from time to time from patients, their families, carers, voluntary organisations and others. Our policy is for the development by district health authorities, in collaboration with other authorities, of a locally based pattern of services for those suffering from mental illness, including schizophrenia. To this end authorities are developing services to prevent avoidable hospital admissions and long-term institutional care.

District Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current level of over or underspending by each Welsh district health authority.

Mr. Grist: A number of health authorities in Wales are currently reported to be experiencing overspending relative to the budgets which they determined in their operational plans at the start of the year. There are particular difficulties in Gwynedd, but while minor overspendings on programmes have also been reported in Clwyd, East Dyfed, Gwent, Mid Glamorgan, Pembrokeshire, West Glamorgan and the Welsh Health Common Services Authority, it is not expected that these authorities will exceed their cash allocations this year.

In all cases, authorities have a statutory duty to keep their cash spending each year within allocated resources; they must therefore take action to ensure that cash limits are not breached. As in the case of Gwynedd, the Department is prepared to assist by providing temporary cash loans to prevent any breach of cash limits until spending is brought back under control.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each Welsh local education authority the pupil to teacher ratio for 1978-79, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88, respectively.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The overall pupil-teacher ratios in maintained nursey, primary and secondary schools are given in the following table. Information in respect of 1987-88 is not yet available.

At January each year

Welsh counties	1978-79	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Walker: My Department has registered 42 uses of personal data under the terms of the Data Protection Act. Details are contained in the register of data users, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

No charge will be made for the provision of information which is presently made available free of charge. In other cases, my Department will recover the costs, which will vary from one data holding to another, of complying with requests for access to data holdings, within the limit of the maximum fee which may be charged.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total amounts paid to projects in the Alyn and Deeside constituency by the Welsh Development Agency in each year since 1979 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms based on 1986-87 prices showing the percentages in payments between years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

Welsh Development Agency spending in Alyn and Deeside constituency

Industrial Support and Development

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the expenditure upon industrial support and development in Clwyd for each of the years since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Expenditure on regional selective assistance and regional development grants in Clwyd for the financial years 1980-81 to 1986-87 is as follows:

	£ million
1980-81	10·0
1981-82	17·3
1982-83	21·3
1983-84	15·4
1984-85	26·6
1985-86	27·9
1986-87	34·2
Total	152·7

Pre-School Playgroup Association

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the annual funding of the Pre-School Playgroup Movement in Wales for each of the years from and including 1980 up to the most convenient date.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The annual grants paid to the Pre-School Playgroup Association in Wales in respect of its headquarters expenses for the years ending 31 March 1981-87 were as follows:

	£
to 31 March 1981	57,000
31 March 1982	70,000
31 March 1983	84,928
31 March 1984	95,699
31 March 1985	97,450
31 March 1986	101,800
31 March 1987	118,500

Maternity Statistics (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many maternity beds there are in Clwyd; what percentage of births of residents in (a) Alyn and Deeside and (b) Clwyd take place in (i) Clwyd hospitals and (ii) hospitals in Cheshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The figures for 1986 are as follows:

(a) average number of maternity beds available each day—134·22

(b) percentage of births of residents in Alyn and Deeside taking place in Clwyd hospitals—38·7 per cent.

(c) percentage of births of residents in Clwyd taking place in Clwyd hospitals—82·3 per cent.

The figures at (b) and (c) above include both live and still births. Figures for births in Cheshire hospitals either in respect of Alyn and Deeside residents or of those in Clwyd are not available centrally.

Waiting Lists (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to reduce waiting lists in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Clwyd health authority was given additional funds of £56,000 in 1986-87 and has been offered some £80,000 in 1987-88 to help tackle the worst problems on hospital waiting lists. In addition, the authority is being encouraged to carry out management action aimed at shortening the time which patients have to wait.

Schoolchildren (Deafness)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes to help those who are deaf or hard of hearing in the schools of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Education Act 1981 imposes duties on local education authorities to make appropriate provision for children with special education needs, including those who are deaf or who have impaired hearing.

Rating Reform

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy not to introduce legislation imposing the community charge on Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have already announced my intention that a complete changeover in Wales from domestic rates to the community charge should take place in 1990.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act and (f) what action has been taken to facilitate job share, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Stanley: Equality of opportunity for Northern Ireland civil servants in the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is the responsibility of an equal opportunities unit within the Department of Finance and Personnel. For the much smaller group of Home civil servants in the Northern Ireland Office, responsibility lies with the establishment division in London.

Taking each of the elements (a) to (f) in the hon. Member's question in turn:

(a) The equal opportunities unit of the Northern Ireland Civil Service has a staff of seven full-time officers and one part-time officer headed by a grade 7 officer (principal). The Home Civil Service has one equal opportunities officer who is a senior executive officer and spends a small but varying amount of his/her time on equal opportunities duties.

(b) The other duties carried out by NICS staff of the equal opportunities unit are negligible. The duties of the HCS equal opportunities officer include a range of personnel management policy issues.

(c) As far as the NICS is concerned, this information is not readily available in the form requested. In addition to the eight staff of the equal opportunities unit many other officers throughout the NICS have a responsibility for equal opportunities as part of other duties and the unit is also supported in its analytical work by other specialist staff within the Department of Finance and Personnel. Since the HCS equal opportunities officer undertakes that role in conjunction with a number of other duties, it is similarly difficult to quantify the budgetary implications.

(d) Equal opportunities are frequently the subject of consideration at inter-departmental meetings of Personnel Officers of the NICS. The HCS equal opportunities officer normally meets his/her counterparts at least once a year.

(e) The training branch within the Department of Finance and Personnel, in association with the equal opportunities unit, is reviewing its policy on single sex training for women. This has involved the use of a questionnaire together with a number of pilot courses. The departmental training officer and equal opportunities officer in the HCS are ready to promote the use of section 47 where appropriate.

(f) Formal guidance in respect of part-time working and job sharing arrangements recently agreed with trade unions has been circulated widely throughout the NICS. Each application for parental leave is considered on its merits under the special leave provisions which are widely known throughout the NICS. The Civil Service policy statements on equal opportunities have been circulated to HCS staff. Officers are free to apply for job sharing, part-time working and parental leave and any such applications are considered sympathetically. The HCS equal opportunities officer is also in the process of producing a guide on equal opportunities' policies and practices. This will be issued to all staff.

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he proposes to take to follow up the publication of the consultative paper, "Equality of Opportunity in Employment in Northern Ireland."

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 15 July 1987, c. 490-1]: The chairman of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights submitted the commission's "Report on Fair Employment" to me on 30 September. It forms part of a major review by the commission of the laws and institutions dealing with religious and political discrimination and equality of opportunity in Northern Ireland. The report is being published today as a Command Paper (Cm. 237). A study on "Equality and Inequality in Northern Ireland", undertaken by the Policy Studies Institute as part of the commission's review, is also being published today and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

I am grateful to the commission for the work which has gone into its detailed report, which will be of great value to the Government. We shall be taking the report's recommendations into account in framing our detailed proposals for new legislation on fair employment. We are firmly committed to ensuring equality of opportunity in employment for everyone in Northern Ireland whatever their religious background.

TRANSPORT

M4 Motorway

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of constructing the M4 between London and Maidenhead Thicket; what was the cost of widening this section of the M4 from two lanes to three; and what estimate was made at the time of construction of the cost of constructing with three lanes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information in the precise form sought is not readily available. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Highway Inquiries

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider appointing two independent assessors to sit with an inspector in relation to public inquiries into highway routes, the assessors having relevant experience in the field of conservation and agriculture.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Inspectors nominated by the Lord Chancellor and appointed by the Secretary of State to conduct public inquiries into road scheme proposals are experienced in the general nature of problems faced, including conservation and agriculture. In certain cases, where particular specialist knowledge is required, assessors have been appointed to assist inspectors, and this practice will continue.

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will propose changes in the existing regulations so that in his decision in relation to inquiries affecting highway routes and related matters, the statement giving the inspector's decision should be accompanied by the reasons of the inspector.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The regulations governing highways inquiries procedures are the Highways (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1976 (S.I. 1976 No. 721).

Under these rules the Secretary of State is required to notify objectors and others of his decision and the reasons for it. The rules also require the inspector to report to the Secretary of State his conclusions and recommendations, if any, or his reasons for not making any recommendations. In practice, the inspector's conclusions amount to the reasons for his recommendations.

There are no plans to amend these rules.

If my hon. Friend has a particular case in mind, perhaps he will write to me.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department proposes to charge two fees for subject access by members of the public: £3·50 for inquiries of the driving licence record and £10 for other inquiries. There is no current intention to charge the Department's own staff seeking access to personal data held about them as employees.

There are eight register entries. Each covers a number of separate systems. In the unlikely event of a data subject wishing to have access to all entries, the total cost would be £73·50.

Buses

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the number of bus routes (a) registered and (b) deregistered between 26 October 1986 and 30 September 1987.

Mr. David Mitchell: The number of services registered between 1 November 1986 and 30 September 1987 was 4,257 and the number deregistered 3,200.

Taxis

Mr. Morley asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many taxi registration plates have been issued since the Transport Act 1986 and deregulation.

Mr. David Mitchell: On the latest figures available it is estimated that between mid-1985 and mid-1986, 1,900 new taxi licences were issued by licensing authorities in England and Wales (excluding London).

Airports

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the procedures adopted by the Civil Aviation Authority relating to the licensing of new passenger airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The licensing of airports is the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority, which has the necessary technical competence in such matters.

London City Airport

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the arrangements made by the Civil Aviation Authority concerning emergency procedures at London City airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The approval of emergency procedures is wholly a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority in conjunction with aerodrome managers. The authority satisfied itself on these procedures before issuing the aerodrome licence.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the emergency orders relating to emergency procedures at London City airport, stating which of the non-airport local emergency services have assented to its provisions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Copies of emergency procedure instructions have been sent by the airport management to the local emergency services concerned, who were consulted in drawing them up. Provision of a copy for the Library is a matter for the discretion of the airport managers. I have drawn their attention to the hon. Member's request.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he anticipates announcing an increase in the salaries due to the board members of London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 22 October, at columns 849-50. The salaries of the board members of London Regional Transport are still under review.

Hydraulic Fluid

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether there are any plans to introduce quality checks on hydraulic fluid being sold to motorists and car manufacturers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Hydraulic fluid is produced in accordance with specific international standards and is sold to car manufacturers and motorists in sealed containers. We have no reason to suspect the quality of brake fluid sold in Britain. There are no plans to introduce quality checks.

Knaresborough and Harrogate (Bypass)

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out his reasons for ordering a further public inquiry into the proposals for the southern bypass of Knaresborough and Harrogate; and if he will give details of such evidence as he received.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The orders for the bypass require confirmation by the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State cannot decide whether or not to confirm orders unless he is fully informed as a result of a public inquiry. In this case he received 79 representations after the inquiry closed, including one from the Nature Conservancy Council. These representations raised points material to the decision which the Secretary of State was to make.

He has decided that the inquiry should be reopened. If he were to make a decision without being fully informed on the points in question, he would not be properly discharging his statutory functions.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committees (Staff)

Mr. Frank Field asked the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will detail the number of staff, and their grades, who are employed to staff the House's Select Committees; and if he will detail the work they have been involved in, Committee by Committee, since the middle of May, and the salary costs of their staffs since that date.

Mr. Beith: The following staff in the Department of the Clerk of the House are currently wholly or mainly employed in connection with the work of select committees:

	Number
Clerk of Committees (Grade 2)	1
Principal Clerks (Grade 3)	3
Deputy Principal Clerks (Grade 5)	11
Senior Clerks (Grade 7)	12
Assistant Clerks (AT/HEO (D))	7
Senior Executive Officers	4
Higher Executive Officers	10
Specialist Assistants	3
Chief Office Clerks	1
Senior Office Clerks	6
Senior General Assistant/General Assistants	6
Personal Secretaries (Grade 4)	20

The particular duties carried out by the staff of the House are the responsibility of the heads of the House Departments concerned. There are currently 13 Select Committees in existence; however, staff will not be fully deployed until the departmentally-related Committees have been set up.

Total salaries, at the mean of the salary scale for the grades of those listed above, from 1 June to 31 October (excluding night allowances) would amount to £544,727. Inner London weighting has been included, but allowances and proficiency payments have not. The salary cost does not include provision for superannuation or employer national insurance, which together add 30 per cent. to the above figure. It is not practicable to break down this figure Committee by Committee.

PRIME MINISTER

Northern Region

Q35. Mr. Fallon asked the Prime Minister when she next expects to visit the northern region.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Warrington

Q76. Mr. Butler asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Warrington.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Fraud

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister if she will estimate the current level of fraud at the expense of the European Economic Community (i) in Britain and (ii) in all the countries in the EEC; and what proposals she has to reduce the level of fraud.

The Prime Minister: Reliable estimates of fraud in the Community are not available.

The United Kingdom has taken the lead in pressing for more effective Community action against all financial irregularities. Under our presidency we secured agreement on a revised food aid regulation to tighten control in this sector. When the results of a Commission review into all aspects of Community financial control is completed we shall press for such further measures as may be necessary.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Favell asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the trend on employment in the north-west.

The Prime Minister: The latest estimate for the civilian employed labour force (that is employees in employment plus the self-employed) in the north-west is 2,545,000 in June this year. This compares with 2,530,000 in June 1986.

To help in the process of job creation, the north-west attracts very high levels of Government assistance. Many parts have assisted area status and benefit under the urban programme. Two city action teams, two urban development corporations and three inner city task forces operate there and there are three enterprise zones.

The Department of Employment and the Manpower Services Commission operate over 30 employment, enterprise and training measures described in the "Action for Jobs" booklet, all of which are available in the north-west. For example, around 63,000 in the north-west are training under YTS and around 35,000 are currently benefiting from the community programme.

Parliamentary Answers (Cost)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister what is the sum above which an answer to a parliamentary question is considered to represent disproportionate cost.

The Prime Minister: It is for Ministers to decide whether to decline to answer a question on grounds of disproportionate cost. Any question likely to cost more than £200 is referred to the responsible Minister before significant resources are committed.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister how many questions she has refused to answer since 1979 on the grounds of disproportionate cost.

The Prime Minister: This information can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

USA (Official Duties)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply of 22 October, Official Report, column 847, if she will give details of the official duties she undertook in the United States of America.

The Prime Minister: My visit to the United States was a private one, during which I continued in the normal way to fulfil my duties as Prime Minister.

Paintings (10 Downing Street)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply of 22 October, Official Report, columns 845-46, if she will give such details of the paintings, engravings and photographs (a) removed and (b) hung in 10 Downing street as are available.

The Prime Minister: Excluding personal possessions, the paintings, reproductions (engravings or otherwise) and photographs currently at 10 Downing street are as follows:

Hospitality (10 Downing Street)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply of 22 October, Official Report, column 845, if she will provide such details of the number of Conservative right hon. and hon. Members who have received hospitality in 10 Downing street as are readily available for any convenient recent period.

The Prime Minister: Since 1 January 1987, 71 Conservative right hon. and hon. Members have attended lunches (including working lunches), dinners (including working dinners) and receptions in 10 Downing street.

South Africa

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Prime Minister if she will arrange for publication in the Official Report in a suitable format of all the information which she used to support her remarks at the recent Commonwealth Conference about the growth of trading links between each other Commonwealth country and the Republic of South Africa.

The Prime Minister: The figures on which I drew at Vancouver are available from published sources, including those relating to trade between Canada and South Africa.

Privatised Companies (Ex-Ministers)

Mr. Wilson asked the Prime Minister if she will make it a condition of acceptance of ministerial office that an individual who subsequently leaves office will not undertake work as a consultant to or a director of a company privatised from public ownership during the time the Minister was in office.

The Prime Minister: No.

Engagements

Mr. John M. Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 29 October.

Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 29 October.

Mr. Stern asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 29 October.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 29 October.

Mr. Fearn asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 29 October.

Mr. Alton asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 29 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. I attended the memorial service for Lord Soames at Westminster Abbey. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Inner London Weighting

Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which education authorities in London pay their teachers inner London weighting; and what criteria are used in determining such authorities.

Mrs. Rumbold: London allowances at the inner area rate are paid to primary and secondary school teachers who serve in the area of the Inner London education authority, and of the London boroughs of Barking and Dagenham, Brent, Ealing, Haringey, Merton, and Newham. The arrangements were agreed by the Burnham committee and remain unchanged. My right hon. Friend has invited the interim advisory committee to examine and report to him on whether there should be any change in London area allowances.

British Geological Survey

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on his decision regarding the future of the British Geological Survey, following the report of Sir Clifford Butler, a copy of which he has received.

Sir Trevor Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he proposes to make a statement on Sir Clifford Butler's report on geological surveying.

Mr. Jackson: The recommendations of the report of the study group into geological surveying, chaired by Sir Clifford Butler, that fall to be considered by Government are being discussed with the Departments concerned. My right hon. Friend will make a statement when these consultations have been completed.

School Meals

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give, for each education authority in England and Wales the number of children who take school meals who are entitled to free school meals by reason of (a) their family entitled to family income supplement or supplementary benefit and (b) the discretionary power of the local authority to extend free meal provision.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is included in the October 1986 school meals census, copies of which are available in the Library.

CERN

Mr. Blunkett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement regarding his policy towards continued British membership of CERN.

Sir Trevor Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes to make a statement on United Kingdom's participation in CERN.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 28 October.

Mr. Blunkett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from Sheffield university about the implications for the university of continued United Kingdom membership of CERN; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have received a letter from the hon. Member for Sheffield Heeley (Mr. Michie) relaying the views of staff in the department of physics at the University of Sheffield.

Education Reform

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what he estimates as being the additional cost likely to be incurred by local education authorities by the proposed legislation on the core curriculum, grant-maintained schools, increased financial responsibility to head teachers and open enrolment.

Mrs. Rumbold: All these proposals are designed to give local authorities and schools the opportunity to achieve better value for the resources provided for education. Implementation of the proposals will involve some redirection of funds; any particular requirements which emerge as LEAs and governing bodies progressively put them into practice will fall to be considered in the annual public expenditure discussions.

School Places

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many surplus secondary school places there are in England and Wales; and if he will give a breakdown by individual local education authorities.

Mr. Dunn: It is estimated that in January 1987 there were approximately 720,000 surplus secondary school places in England. The Department does not collect information about the position in Wales or in individual local education authorities.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the estimated total cost of providing surplus secondary school places.

Mr. Dunn: The premises-related costs of retaining a surplus secondary place are estimated at £200 a year. There is also an additional but unquantified teaching cost.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many surplus primary school places there are in England and Wales; and if he will give a breakdown by individual local education authorities.

Mr. Dunn: It is estimated that in January 1987 there were approximately 710,000 surplus primary school places in England. The Department does not collect information about the position in Wales or in individual local education authorities.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the estimated total cost of providing surplus primary school places.

Mr. Dunn: The premises-related costs of retaining a surplus primary place are estimated at £120 a year. There is also an additional but unquantified teaching cost.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he measures the pupil capacity of secondary schools.

Mr. Dunn: I shall write to my hon. Friend to explain how the stock of school places was assessed for the purpose of setting national targets for the removal of surplus places.

DEFECTIVE PRINTING

Teachers (Salaries and Conditions)

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish a consultation document on the future machinery for the negotiation of teachers' salaries and conditions.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend laid before Parliament on 27 October a Green Paper entitled "Teachers' Pay and Conditions: A Consultative Document".

Education Authority Staff

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) teachers and (b) non-teaching staff, whole-time equivalent, are employed by each local educational authority in England at the latest convenient date.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The table shows 1987 numbers in full-time equivalent terms and full-time and part-time non-teaching staff. Non-teaching staff numbers are not available for individual non-metropolitan counties, nor in full-time equivalent terms for any individual local education authority.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Attorney-General what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to the Lord Chancellor's departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion and amount of the departmental budget allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, and (e) the guidelines issued to departmental training officers and departmental equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act; and what action has been taken to facilitate job share, part-time working and parental leave.

The Attorney-General: (a) The Lord Chancellor's departmental equal opportunities officer spends about 50 per cent. of his time on these duties. Two and a half other members of staff are also fully engaged on them;

(b) He also deals with employment and industrial relations matters;

(c) No specific budget is allocated for equal opportunities work; The cost is subsumed in other departmental budgets and could be quantified only at disproportionate cost;

(d) The equal opportunities officer meets other equal opportunities officers, formally and informally, several times a year;

(e) Central guidance on equal opportunities matters has been issued to departmental training officers and departmental equal opportunities officers. The Department has run courses for women middle managers and nominates women for similar courses. A domestic absence scheme has recently been established; similar agreements in relation to job sharing and part-time working are currently being discussed with the departmental trade union side.

Marconi

Mr. Soames asked the Attorney-General whether he will make a statement as to the nature of inquiries into Marconi by the Ministry of Defence police.

The Attorney-General: The inquiries by the Ministry of Defence police relate to allegations of fraud in connection with Ministry of Defence contracts with Marconi.

DEFECTIVE PRINTING

Personation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Attorney-General when was the last occasion the Director of Public Prosecutions ordered the prosecution of an individual for falsely claiming to be a police officer.

The Attorney-General: No separate records are kept by the Crown Prosecution Service of prosecutions brought under section 52 of the Police Act 1964. It would not therefore be possible to give an accurate answer to the hon. Member's question for the period since the inception of the Crown Prosecution Service in October 1986. Prior to that date the Prosecution of Offences Regulations 1978 did not require chief officers of police to report cases of personating a police officer to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Small Claims

Mr. Pawsey asked the Attorney-General whether he is satisfied with the operation of the small claims procedure in the county court in England and Wales; and what plans the Government have for amendment of the procedure.

The Attorney-General: A factual study of the small claims procedure, carried out as part of the Lord Chancellor's civil justice review, indicates that the procedure is generally working well and that there is a high level of satisfaction among those who have used it. Any recommendations for reform will be contained in a report of the review as a whole which is due to be put before the Lord Chancellor in early 1988.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Attorney-General how many cases, for the most recent five years for which figures are available, were dealt with under the small claims procedure in the county courts of England and Wales.

The Attorney-General: The numbers of arbitration cases heard under the small claims procedure in county courts in the years 1982 to 1986 are shown in the table.

Number of arbitration cases heard under the small claims procedure in county courts in England and Wales, 1982-86

Year	Number
1982	31,609
1983	39,266
1984	43,576
1985	44,652
1986	44,670

Mr. Pawsey asked the Attorney-General if he will estimate the additional cost to public funds in operating the small claims procedure in the county court in England and Wales if disputes currently referred to outside arbitration in accordance with compulsory arbitration clauses in contracts with consumers were instead, at the option of the consumer, made subject to disposal through the county court.

The Attorney-General: No accurate information is available as to the number of disputes currently referred to outside arbitration of the number which falls within the limits of the small claims procedure. It is therefore not possible to estimate the possible additional cost to public funds of handling these cases in the county courts.

ENERGY

Coal

Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about the price of coal on the world market; and how this compares with the price charged by British Coal to the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Ranges of spot prices for steam coal at Amsterdam, Rotterdam and Antwerp are published regularly in "Coal Week International". The prices paid by the CEGB for its coal are a commercial matter for the board.

Bradwell

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the Central Electricity Generating Board to respond to the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate's report requiring the integrity of the pressure circuits and the direct examination of components in inaccessible and highly radioactive areas of the reactor at Bradwell power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised by the CEGB that the agreed programme of further work is under way and is on schedule to meet the time scales set by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive.

Power Stations (Low-grade Heat)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated annual value of the low-grade heat which remains in water emerging from steam condensers in coal and nuclear power stations and which is unable to be put to economic use.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Low grade heat emerging in water is equivalent to some 50 per cent. of the calorific value of fuel burnt in power stations. Any economic uses for such heat are a matter for the CEGB.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department will not charge employees or ex-employees for subject access under the Act; other persons will be charged £8 per inquiry.

My Department has seven entries in the Data Protection Register covering 21 standard purposes.

In the unlikely event of other persons seeking access to personal data held under all register entries, the total cost would be £56.

Electricity

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether, in the event of privatisation of the national electricity system, he will consider the establishment of a public authority with sufficient powers and resources to monitor and ultimately decide about the standards, quality of supply and cost of electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We shall ensure that the electricity supply industry is properly regulated after privatisation, for the benefit of consumers. The precise nature of the regulatory regime will depend on the decisions to be taken about the future structure of the industry.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps would be necessary for the protection of the environment and of the health and safety of the people in the event that nuclear electricity plants were transferred to private or foreign ownership.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Very high safety standards currently exist for the operation of nuclear power stations to protect the environment and the health and safety of both the work force and the general population. The Government have not yet decided on the structure of the privatised electricity supply industry but there will be no question of compromising safety standards or the regulatory framework which ensures that current standards are maintained.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what special provisions he will make for the protection of electricity supplies to pensioners in the event of privatisation of electricity supply;

(2) what consultation he is having so as to ensure that privatisation of the electricity system does not worsen the situation as regards electricity supplies to pensioners, single parent families, the unemployed and students living on their own.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Our aim is to create a more efficient, economic and competitive industry for the benefit of all consumers. We are developing plans and consulting widely on the issues involved.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy that the national electricity service gives priority to the satisfaction of the energy requirements of the population.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I are developing proposals for privatisation. Consumer service is a top priority.

Gas

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list, for every year since 1974, the number of gas supplies cut due to unpaid bills.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This is a matter for British Gas plc. I have asked the chairman of British Gas to write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Nuclear Energy

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he is having with medical experts and others on the health risks affecting people living in areas where nuclear electricity plants operate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In fulfilment of a recommendation of the independent advisory group. which undertook an investigation of the possible increased incidence of cancer in West Cumbria (the Black report, a copy of which is in the Library), the Government established the independent Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) in 1985. Its terms of reference are to assess and advise the Government on the health effects of natural and man-made radiation in the environment and assess the adequacy of the available data and the need for further research. My Department maintains a close interest in the work of COMARE.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Energy what safeguards he proposes to introduce as regards the further use of nuclear materials by the electricity generation industry, in the event of privatisation of electricity gereration.

Mr. Michael Spicer: All nuclear material in civil use is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the United Kingdom — Euratom — IAEA agreement regardless of whether it is in the private or public sector.

Coal Industry (Subsidence)

Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he now expects the White Paper in reply to the Waddilove report on "The Repair and Compensation System for Coal Mining Subsidence" to be published.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government's response to the report of the subsidence compensation review committee, chaired by Mr. Lewis Waddilove CBE JP, has been published and laid before Parliament today by the Secretaries of State for Energy, for the Environment, for Scotland and for Wales.

The Government endorse the view of the Waddilove committee that a balance must be achieved between the justified claims of individuals who have experienced subsidence damage and the need to avoid an undue burden of cost to the British Coal Corporation and, indirectly, to the taxpayer.

The Government also endorse Waddilove's view that it is British Coal's primary duty to repair damage. British Coal has already made a significant number of improvements to the management of its compensation scheme in line with this and other of the committee's recommendations.

BCC has accepted the Government's view that there should be further improvements in line with the committee's recommendations. These include extending the scope of non-statutory compensation to householders and to tenants and owners of agricultural land; and allowing claimants, subject to the agreement of British Coal, to choose their own contractors to carry out repairs.

Information about and monitoring of the compensation system will continue to be improved. British Coal will make an annual report on the operation of the scheme to the Secretary of State for Energy which he will lay before Parliament.

The Government are considering introducing legislation to put on a statutory basis a number of the committee's recommendations, which would provide a single basis for coal mining subsidence compensation. A consultation document will issue early next year.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mental Health

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many current occupants of Her Majesty's prisons in England and Wales have ever been admitted to National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units with a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis;

(2) how many people were admitted to Her Majesty's prisons in England and Wales who had previously been discharged from mental illness hospitals and units after a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psyschosis in each of the last five years; and how many were recidivists;

(3) how many people were admitted to Her Majesty's prisons in Wales who had previously been discharged from mental illness hospitals and units after a main diagnosis of schizophrenia psychosis in each of the last five years; and how many were recidivists.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Places

Mr. Steinberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison places have been made available by the opening of ex-Army camps; and how many vacancies there are at existing prison establishments.

Mr. John Patten: One Army camp, at Rollestone on Salisbury Plain, has been brought into use as a temporary prison this year. Since it opened on 3 August it has accommodated 430 prisoners who would otherwise have been held in other prison establishments. It is staffed by prison service personnel.

The population in all prison establishments on Friday 23 October was 47,494 against a total certified normal accommodation of 42,957, a shortfall of 4,537 places. The total number of vacancies at individual establishment, including Full Sutton (which has just opened and has begun to receive prisoners), and at establishments which have been temporarily closed to allow staff to be deployed elsewhere, was 2,826.

Fiji

Mr. Boswell asked the Secretary of state for the Home Department what are the consequencies of Fiji's current withdrawal from the Commonwealth for these areas within the responsibilities of his Department, including specifically entitlement to register as British citizens and to vote in British elections.

Mr. Renton: Our understanding is that unless and until the law is changed citizens of Fiji who meet the requirements for registration as British citizens under section 7 of the British Nationality Act 1981 are eligible to be registered and retain the right to vote.

Automatic Weapons

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the numbers of people that have been killed by automatic weapons from 1979 to date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information on homicides is published in table 4.3 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1986", (Cm. 233) a copy of which is in the Library. The information colllected centrally does not distinguish automatic weapons from other types of firearms.

Opium Poppies

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied that existing statutory controls are adequate to deal with the cultivation in the United Kingdom of opium poppies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The production of opiates from poppies is already controlled under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs, having assessed the level of risk from commercial opium poppy cultivation in this country, has advised us that there is no case at present for extending those powers.

We have studied the advisory council's report very carefully, in consultation with my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. We have concluded that poppy cultivation on the present scale seems unlikely to be an additional source of illicit drugs and that the 1971 Act provides an adequate level of control. However, it is important that we continue to watch the situation and I have arranged for the Home Office drugs inspectorate to monitor all such crops in future for any evidence of improper diversion.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the procedures which operate in respect of inquiries to the police national computer to ensure that information is divulged only to those entitled to it; that the reasons for inquiries are subject to check to ensure that they are justified; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the procedure for ensuring that information from the police national computer is divulged only to those entitled to it, is as described in my reply to the hon. Member of 18 November 1986, at column 89.

A sample of the requests for information from the police national computer is checked each day to ensure that these related to a bona fide police purpose and that the appropriate records were correctly completed.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police authorities have not fully implemented the guidelines proposed in paragraph 38 of the report by the Police Complaints Authority on the police national computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The attention of all chief officers has been drawn to the guidelines proposed in paragraph 38 of the Police Complaints Authority report on the police national computer. Records are not held centrally on the way in which each chief officer acted on these guildelines.

In addition, the Association of Chief Police Officers is preparing a code of practice for police computer systems, including the police national computer, as encouraged under section 36(4) of the Data Protection Act, 1984. This will take full account of the recommendations of the Police Complaints Authority. The intention is to make this available to the public and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Prisons (Mothers and Babies)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mother and baby places there are in prisons; how many current prisoners gave birth in the past two years; how many in the second category are not allowed their babies with them despite requesting it.

Mr. John Patten: There are 37 mother and baby places in prisons. Information on how many current inmates gave birth in the past two years, and how many of these are not allowed to have their babies with them despite requesting it, is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of prison inmates reported as having been indentified as HIV antibody positive, at the latest available date.

Mr. John Patten: On 23 October 1987 the prison population of England and Wales included 33 inmates reported as having been identified as HIV antibody positive. 128 such cases had been reported since central monitoring began in March 1985.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Renton: Following an internal assessment of the actual cost likely to be incurred in responding to subject access requests, data subjects will be charged a subject access fee of either £5, £7·50 or £10, depending on the particular Home Office registration to which they are seeking access, for each application.

On 26 October 1987 the Home Office had 88 confirmed entries in the register, with a further seven applications at various stages of consideration by the registrar. Twenty of these registrations contain data used solely for preparing statistics or carrying out research and, as such, will not contain any data which the Home Office is required to reveal to data subjects, and two relate solely to the provision of bureau services. Of the remaining 73 registrations, four will attract a subject access fee of £5, and four a fee of £7·50. The remainder will attract a fee of £10. This means that fees totalling £700 would be payable if a data subject were to apply for subject access to all Home Office registrations: this is an unlikely eventuality given the wide spread of Home Office registrations as listed in the departmental pamphlet, "Summary of Home Office Registrations", a copy of which I am placing in the Library.

Police (Efficiency)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what performance indicators are at present being used to measure the efficiency and cost effectiveness of police forces in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The setting of objectives, and the monitoring and evaluation of performance, is part of the responsibility of police managers at all levels. Central guidance on this and other good management practices is set out in the Home Office circular 114/1983, a copy of which is in the Library. Objectives are set in relation to local circumstances, and their evaluation is a matter for each chief officer of police, in consultation where appropriate with the local police authority.

The Home Office has traditionally judged a force's efficiency and effectiveness by Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary's professional assessment of its overall performance, taking into account such matters as the extent and nature of policing problems in the area and the level of resources available to it. Statistical and other information is collected centrally from forces.

Suspects (Questioning)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if all interviews and questioning that takes place in police stations will be subject to the Police and Criminal Evidence Act codes of practice.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The provisions of the code of practice for the detention, treatment, and questioning of persons by police officers relate primarily to the questioning of persons suspected of an offence and who are detained in police custody. All such interviews must be conducted in accordance with the code's provisions.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will be taking any action in regard to the Spastics Society's report on disabled people and the 1987 general election, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby, (Mr. Wareing) on 21 October, at column 779.

Anti-Apartheid Movement

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding telephone and mail interceptions affecting the staff and property of the Anti-Apartheid Movement.

Mr. Hurd: None.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received concerning attacks against the staff and property of the Anti-Apartheid Movement.

Mr. Hurd: Representations have been received direct from the Anti-Apartheid Movement about the safety of members of the African National Congress following the arrest of persons later charged with conspiracy to kidnap members of the ANC. A reply was sent on 21 August. I have not received any representations related specifically to attacks against the staff and property of the Anti-Apartheid Movement.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will take measures to protect the property of the Anti-Apartheid Movement in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will take measures to protect the safety of the staff working at the offices of the Anti-Apartheid Movement in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd: Advice on security measures is freely available from the police.

Airports (Security)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what standing arrangements exist between the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and the Civil Aviation Authority concerning procedures for dealing with emergencies at airports within the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that it is a condition of licences issued to the operators of civil airports by the Civil Aviation Authority that the operators draw up and review contingency plans for emergencies, in consultation with the police and other emergency services. The Commissioner has informed me that he has been consulted about such contingency plans by the operators of the Heathrow, London City, Biggin Hill and Elstree airports and the Westland heliport, Battersea.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much is owed by his Department to the London Residuary Body in respect of unsettled Greater London council accounts.

Mr. Hurd: Pending receipt of audited grant claims, we estimate that £1·1 million still remains due to the London Residuary Body.

Anti-Apartheid Demonstration

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were deployed in connection with the anti-apartheid demonstration on 24 October; what was the estimated cost; what was the police estimate of the number of demonstrations; and how many arrests were made.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that 809 police officers were deployed in policing this demonstration at an additional cost of about £25,000. Some 25,000 people took part and there were seven arrests.

Impersonation of Police Officers

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in each of the past five years have been prosecuted for impersonating a police officer.

Mr. John Patten: The information recorded centrally is given in the following table:

Defendants proceeded against under section 52 of the 1964 Police Act for impersonating a police officer: England and Wales

Year	Total proceeded against
1982	120
1983	108
1984	79
1985	74
1986	72

Illegal Passport (Waterfield)

Mr. Gorst asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to withdraw the illegal passport in the name of Waterfield, being used by Preta, the German-born common law wife of a Scottish narcotics criminal, Forbes Mitchell, to enable her to travel between Ibiza and Sweden with the knowledge of the Swedish authorities, for the purpose of visiting Mitchell while he is in prison; if he will institute inquiries with a view to taking appropriate action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The passport department cannot trace any passport application in the name of Preta Waterfield. If my hon. Friend can provide any further information about the alleged passport irregularity and will write to me, the matter will be further investigated.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will allocate specific additional funds to police authorities to pay for the erection on lighting columns of approved neighbourhood watch scheme signs at the discretion and under the control of local police forces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to provide funds additional to those provided directly through the police grant, which is paid on 51 per cent. of all police expenditure. It is for police authorities to decide on the allocation of the resources at their disposal. I understand that some have funded the erection of neighbourhood watch street signs. However, many schemes have obtained private sponsorship to cover the cost of signs and this is to be encouraged. Effective local crime prevention initiatives such as neighbourhood watch need and deserve the support of all sectors of the community.

Metropolitan Police (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 22 October, Official Report, column 841, why he is not able to state how many Metropolitan police officers have been temporarily attached for duties in Northern Ireland in each of the past three years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that Metropolitan police officers are temporarily attached for duties in Northern Ireland in response to operational requirements as they arise. No central record is kept of these attachments, which are few and usually of short duration.

Immigration

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to introduce a quota for the admission of husbands and wives of British citizens to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: Whilst a quota would be among the options if changes were to be made, no proposals are now before me.

Fresh Start

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the progress being made in the implementation of new working practices in the prison service known as fresh start; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Seventy-three establishments and part of Her Majesty's remand centre, Pucklechurch are now on fresh start. Firm plans are made for the rest of Pucklechurch remand centre and another 23 establishments to move to full or transitional fresh start working during November, mostly on 1 November. Local discussions continue about moving the remaining 21 establishments on to fresh start. I know that prison service managers are doing their best to iron out problems so that these establishments can move to fresh start at the earliest possible date.

We are continuing to aim to have every establishment on full fresh start working by the end of February 1988. To this end we plan to recruit a total of about 1,800 new officers in 1987-88. This will use our two training schools to full capacity throughout the year. In addition, we are hiring two police training centres in which to train 160 staff. After allowing for wastage and the staff needed for new accommodation this should produce about 750 additional staff for fresh start. The balance will come from a mix of redeployment and the recruitment of civilians, prison auxiliaries and night patrols.

The next stage of the implementatiotn process is to establish as objectively as possibie what has been the outcome of every aspect of the change to fresh start, including staffing levels. Information will be collected on every establishment and visits will be paid to a representative group of 10 establishments. It will be open to the trade union side to make its views known to the evaluation team. This work will be done in November, evaluated quickly and the results reviewed by senior management in the first part of December.

I recognise that the change to fresh start is a formidable task for the prison service. There is accumulating evidence that we are set on the right course. I am satisfied with progress so far and look forward to full implementation relatively soon.

EMPLOYMENT

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Cope: The Department of Employment group, comprising the Department of Employment, the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service, the Health and Safety Executive, and the Manpower Services Commission has a total of 94 entries on the data protection register. A fee of £10 will be charged for access to information held on most of its register entries, except that free access will be allowed to information held for the following purposes: the national unemployment benefit central computer system; job finding, training and related activities; the Department of Employment small firms service; the administration of the redundancy payments scheme; the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service; industrial tribunals administration; and internal departmental personnel administration.

Employees (Reductions)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that those employees who heeded police warnings to stay at home on 16 October do not have deductions made by their employers from their pay.

Mr. Nicholls: I have no power to intervene in matters of this kind.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Employment how much is owed by his Department to the London residuary body in respect of unsettled Greater London council accounts.

Mr. Lee: No central record is kept of my Department's non-statutory financial liabilities under contract to individual local authorities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

International Space Year

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements Her Majesty's Government are making to participate in International Space Year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Arrangements for the United Kingdom's participation in International Space Year 1992 are being co-ordinated by the Royal Society through its British National Committee on Space Research (BNCSR)

The Government are represented on the BNCSR and play a full part in the work of the committee.

Financial Services Act

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why the Director General of the Office of Fair Trading did not obtain from Arthur Young Management Consultants specific data concerning the effects of the proposed regulations pursuant to the Financial Services Act upon the incomes and viability of single-person firms of practitioners in the financial services industry before communicating his final recommendations to the Secretary of State prior to the coming into force of the new regulations; and whether he will ensure that this action is taken forthwith.

Mr. Maude: The Financial Services Act provides that, in deciding whether to give leave for the recognition of a self-regulation organisation, my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State must have regard to the report made by the Director General of Fair Trading under section 122(2) of the Act. No such report has yet been submitted in respect of any of the organisations whose applications for recognition are currently under consideration. I understand that, in order to assist him in preparing these reports, the director general commissioned a report from Arthur Young Management Consultants (AYMC) on the effect of certain rules on small financial intermediaries. I am informed that the sample surveyed by AYMC included a number of sole practitioners.

Space Research

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current total public expenditure on United Kingdom space research; and if he has any plans to increase it.

Mr. Butcher: The current total public expenditure on civil space research and development is £112 million a year. There are no plans to increase this figure.

European Space Agency

Mr. Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will state how much is the current United Kingdom contribution to the European Space Agency comparing it in percentage terms with those of other member states.

Mr. Butcher: United Kingdom expenditure on European Space Agency activities in the financial year 1986-87 was £79 million. Member states' contributions in percentage terms to European Space Agency expenditure in 1986 were:

	Per cent.
Belgium	3·4
Denmark	1·1
France	30·6
Germany	25·8
Ireland	0·2
Italy	15·0
Netherlands	3·7
Spain	2·5
Sweden	2·5
Switzerland	2·0
United Kingdom	13·1
	100·0

Austria and Norway were not members in 1986

Mr. Warren asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the breakdown of annual expenditure proposed to Her Majesty's Government by the European Space Agency, listing it in the following four categories: Ariane 5, Hermes spacecraft, Columbus spacecraft, and other ventures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The latest comprehensive proposal from the European Space Agency, dated June 1987, gives total expenditure figures (in million European currency units (ecu) at today's prices) for the Columbus, Ariane 5 and Hermes development programmes as listed in the table.

We are still awaiting the ESA director generals's final proposals for the Ministerial Council on 9-10 November, but one change of which we have been informed is that the cost of Columbus development has increased to 3.9 billion ecu.

The proposed development programmes are optional, and, if they are agreed, it will be for each member state to decide on its level of participation.

Space Industry

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps his Department is taking to encourage public awareness of the potential and importance of the British space industry; and to encourage private sector investment.

Mr. Butcher: Through the British National Space Centre (BNSC), the Government aim to encourage public awareness of the potential and importance of the British space industry to scientific research and to industrial applications. This it does through press notices; publications; newsletters and posters; the encouragement of articles and a programme of speeches. The BNSC also participates in major aerospace exhibitions and has published a directory of United Kingdom space capabilities.

The BNSC also works closely with the Department of Education and Science to encourage an awareness of the uses of space activity in school curricula and has published a guide to courses, research opportunities and sponsorship for students.

Following the Prime Minister's invitation to the Private sector to come forward with further resources, major aerospace companies agreed to continue work at company expense on certain key national space programmes until the European Space Agency Ministerial Council meeting in November. Meanwhile, my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is having discussions with industry on possible long-term co-operation in the United Kingdom's space activities.

Space Policy

Mr. Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recommendations for future United Kingdom space policy arose from the recent meeting of the Advisory Council on Science and Technology.

Mr. Butcher: The advice received from the Advisory Council on Science and Technology on the subject of space research and development was given in confidence.

HOTOL

Mr. Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the future of HOTOL.

Mr. Butcher: For the present until end-1987 British Aerospace and Rolls-Royce have agreed to continue on their own responsibility the proof of concept studies on HOTOL commenced in 1986. We are currently reviewing the future progress of HOTOL with the companies.

Ariane 5 Launch Vehicle

Mr. Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much British investment is required for United Kingdom companies to qualify for contracts for the Ariane 5 launch vehicle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The preparatory work for the Ariane 5 programme has indicated a potential United Kingdom industrial involvement amounting to 2·8 per cent. At this rate of contribution the United Kingdom would have to contribute about £84 million to ESA between now and 1997. This programme will be one of the programmes to be considered at the ESA ministerial meeting on 9-10 July.

Shipbuilding Industry

Dr. Godman asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will estimate the projected number of jobs in the shipbuilding industry from 1987 to 1991.

Mr. Atkins: There are presently some 32,000 employed in shipbuilding in Great Britain, 8,000 in BS and other merchant yards and 24,000 in yards privatised by BS. There is no reliable basis on which to forecast the position in future years.

Advisory Committee on Science and Technology

Mr. Warren asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on how many occasions the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology has met since its formation; what subjects have been discussed at its meetings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: One full meeting of the Advisory Council on Science and Technology (ACOST) has taken place since its inception.

Among the items discussed were draft reports on optoelectronics and on the industrial impact of the decision to go ahead with the construction of a pressurised water reactor at Sizewell B; and the second stage of a study on barriers to growth for small companies.

The meeting also gave preliminary consideration to national priorities for science and technology, both in basic science and in strategic areas, such as space research, and Sir Francis Tombs reported progress in setting up the centre for exploitation of science and technology.

ACOST derives considerable benefit from the ability to conduct its business in confidence. It is not customary for the outcome of its discussions to be made public unless the chairman specifically requests the Prime Minister's permission to publish the council's advice. However, in the past, ACOST's predecessor, the Advisory Council for Applied Research and Development (ACARD) has published many valuable reports on a range of important subjects and I anticipate that ACOST will produce similar reports within its enlarged terms of reference in due course.

EC Trade Marks Office

Mr. Warren asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on recent developments in the bid by the United Kingdom to house the European Community Trade Marks office in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: There has been little progress in Brussels recently towards reaching a decision on where to house the Community trade marks office. The European Commission drew up a short-list, including the United Kingdom bid, in February, but has not yet decided what its recommendation to the Council of Ministers should be. The Government are continuing to pursue their bid with vigour in Community circles.

Pensions

Mr. Butterfill asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from the National Consumer council on proposed revisions to the Lautro rule book permitting pension quotations to be made in both monetary and real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: No such representations have been received.

Invisibles and Surpluses

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what extent he estimates official statistics to be understating (a) the United Kingdom's surplus on trade in invisibles and (b) the United Kingdom's share of world trade in services.

Mr. Maude: Although the official statistics on invisibles, especially for recent periods, are recognised to be subject to a significant range of possible error, there is no clear evidence to indicate that either the United Kingdom surplus on invisibles or the United Kingdom share of world trade in services is being significantly understated.

Whale Products

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will impose a ban on the import of all whale products as separate items or as part of fully or semi-manufactured goods; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what efforts are made by his Department to establish the extent of the use of whale products in manufactured or semi-manufactured goods imported into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: EC regulation 3626/82 (in force since 1 January 1984) bans the import of all whale products for commercial purposes. The Department of the Environment, through the agency of Customs and Excise, is responsible for ensuring compliance with it.

Arbitration

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the Government's policy on approval by the Director General of Fair Trading under section 124 of the Fair Trading Act 1973 of a code of practice promoted by a trade association under which arbitration is compulsory, so excluding a consumer's right to recourse to the courts for settlement of disputes.

Mr. Maude: The exercise of the powers under section 124 of the Fair Trading Act is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. I will ask him to write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which trade associations have codes of practice approved by the Director General of Fair Trading under section 124 of the Fair Trading Act 1973 which make provision for arbitration to settle disputes under the code which is compulsory, and exclude the right of the consumer to take the matter to court.

Mr. Maude: This is a matter for the director general. I will ask him to write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the codes of practice approved by the Director General of Fair Trading under section 124 of the Fair Trading Act 1973 which make provision for arbitration to settle disputes, while at the same time preserving the right of the consumer to have recourse to the courts.

Mr. Maude: The codes of practice drawn up in consultation with the Director General of Fair Trading which make such provision are as follows:

Association of British Travel Agents: Tour Operators Code of Conduct and Guidelines for Booking Conditions.
Association of Manufacturers of Domestic Electrical Appliances Principles for Domestic Electrical Appliance Servicing.
British Holiday and Home Parks Association and National Caravan Council.
  Code of Practice for Selling and Siting Holiday Caravans;
  Code of Practice for Letting Holiday Caravans
  Code of Practice for the Photographic Industry.
  Domestic Electrical Appliance Servicing by Electricity Boards in England and Wales.
  Domestic Electrical Appliance Servicing by Scottish Electricity Boards.
  Finance Houses Association Code of Practice.
  Glass and Glazing Federation: Code of Ethical Practice.
  Mail Order Traders Association: Code of Practice.
  National Association of Funeral Directors: Code of Practice.
  Voluntary Code of Practice for Furniture.
  Code of Practice for Postal Services.
  Code of Practice for Vehicle Body Repairs
  Code of Practice for the Motor Industry.
  Code of Practice for the Motorcycle Industry.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the trade organisation in respect of which the Director General of Fair Trading has refused approval of the organisation's proposed code of practice under the Fair Trading Act 1973 on the grounds that arbitration under the proposed code was to be compulsory, without the option for the consumer to have recourse to the courts for the disposal of disputes.

Mr. Maude: This is a matter for the director general. I will ask him to write to my hon. Friend.

Inner Cities

Mr. Adley asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about progress on his Department's inner cities initiatives.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am pleased to say that the work of our 16 inner city task forces is going ahead well with more than 200 projects supported since the initiative began in February 1986. The private sector is playing a growing part in our efforts.

Clydesdale Tube Plant

Dr. Reid asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if Her Majesty's Government plan to announce any further investment in plant and machinery at the Clydesdale tube plant at Mossend.

Mr. Atkins: Investment by BSC at individual plants is a matter for the Corporation, subject to requirements for Government approval laid down under the Iron and Steel Act. BSC are continuing to invest in their Clydesdale plant as part of their overall programme of capital investment agreed with Government.

Regional Development

Ms. Quin asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the decline in regional development grant payments to the north-east of England results from changes in development and special development areas since 1980, what proportion results from a fall in investments by manufacturing industry in the region and what proportion results from changes in the scheme itself.

Mr. Atkins: It is not possible to quantify separately the effects of these various factors on the level of regional development grant payments in the north-east. Between 1980 and 1984, however, the proportion of the region's working population covered by development and special development areas—the latter status being abolished in November 1984 — fell from nearly 100 per cent. to around 80 per cent.

The north-east region's share of RDG payments in Great Britain in 1986-87 was higher than in the preceding four years and has risen further in the first six months of 1987-88.

Iraq (Credit)

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent lines of credit have been made available to Iraq; of what value and with what conditions as to the use of the funds made available; and what loans have been made available in each of the past five years.

Mr. Butcher: One. The Governments of the United Kingdom and Iraq signed a financial protocol on 24 September 1987 under which ECGD will provide support for a £100 million line of credit for the supply of United Kingdom capital goods, equipment and services on credit terms of up to five years and a £75 million line of credit for the supply of prepared pharmaceutical products, medical equipment, veterinary medicines, the bulk supply of semi-processed pharmaceuticals, insecticides, powdered milk and baby milk powder on credit terms of up to 18 months. These loan facilities will be signed in 1988.

2. Two earlier protocols for £250 million each were signed in 1983 and 1984 and the uptake of these loans is as follows. All of the pharmaceutical lines of credit were additional to the protocol amounts.

1983-84

£250 million general purpose line of credit (including two project buyer credits).

£25 million pharmaceutical line of credit.
1985
£100 million general purpose line of credit.
£50 million pharmaceutical line of credit.
1986
£50 million pharmaceutical line of credit.
1987
£50 million pharmaceutical line of credit.
£20 million veterinary medicine line of credit.
£50 million general purpose line of credit.
£28 million buyer credits for 3 water resource projects
£52 million general purpose line of credit.

Greenock and Port Glasgow (Enterprize Zone)

Dr. Godman asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received regarding the possibility of creating an enterprize zone in Greenock or Port Glasgow.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

We have received no recent representations regarding the possibility of creating an enterprise zone in Greenock or Port Glasgow.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufacturing Industry

Mrs. Peacock asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth of manufacturing output in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth of manufacturing output in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth of manufacturing output in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: In the three months to August 1987 manufacturing output was 6 per cent. higher than a year earlier.

60. Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to how United Kingdom performance in terms of the growth of manufacturing productivity compares with that of other major industrialised countries.

77. Mr. Brazier asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to how United Kingdom performance in terms of the growth of manufacturing productivity compares with that of other major industrial countries.

81. Mr. Stevens asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to how United Kingdom performance in terms of the growth of manufacturing productivity compares with that of other major industrialised countries.

Mr. Lilley: Over the year to the second quarter of 1987, manufacturing productivity in the United Kingdom grew 6½ per cent. which is substantially faster than in any other major industrial country.

74. Mr. Hargreaves asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the growth of manufacturing productivity in the north-west.

Mr. Major: On the accepted definition of productivity, no figures are available on a regional basis. In the United Kingdom as a whole manufacturing productivity in the three months to August was 6·8 per cent. higher than a year earlier.

Value Added Tax

17. Mr. Gregory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to alter the 15 per cent. value added tax rate for United Kingdom to bring confectionery into zero rate like other foods.

Mr. Lilley: No.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the time limit within which traders must account for value added tax compared with the average time it takes them to collect the value added tax owed to them on their own invoices.

Mr. Lilley: As my hon. Friend will be aware, subsequent to him putting down this question my hon. Friend the Paymaster General made an announcement about cash accounting on 17 August. There have been persistent representations from small businesses that they frequently have to pay VAT before their own bills are paid. To meet this, my hon. Friend the Paymaster General introduced, from the start of this month, an optional system of cash accounting for VAT, under which small traders no longer have to pay VAT until they have received their payment from their customers.

World Debt

18. Mr. David Nicholson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will report recent progress following his debt initiative for the benefit of the poorer countries in sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Lawson: There has been wide recognition of the need for special help for the poorest, most heavily indebted countries, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa. Good progress has been made on two of the proposals in my initiative: the United Kingdom has converted aid loans into grants for 13 African countries, and other creditor countries are following suit, and five countries have had their official debts rescheduled over longer than usual periods in the Paris club. I am continuing to press for international action to reduce interest rates on rescheduled official debt.

19. Mr. Skinner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent meetings he has had with other Finance Ministers regarding world debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Last month my right hon. Friend attended the Commonwealth Finance Ministers' meeting and the meetings of the IMF and World Bank where the Debt problems of some of the developing countries, especially those of the poorest in sub-Saharan Africa, were discussed.

27. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will report recent progress following his debt initiative for the benefit of the poorer countries in sub-Saharan Africa.

51. Mr. Wells asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will report recent progress following his debt initiative for the benefit of the poorer countries in sub-Saharan Africa.

83. Mr. Key asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will report recent progress following his debt initiative for the benefit of the poorer countries in sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Lilley: Considerable progress has been made towards implementing two of the specific proposals that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor made at the April meeting of the Development Committee: The United Kingdom has converted aid loans into grants for 13 African countries; other creditor countries are following suit. Five countries have had their official debts rescheduled over longer than usual periods in the Paris club. We are continuing to press for international action to reduce interest rates on rescheduled official debt.

Service Sector

20. Mrs. Gorman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth of the service sector in the United Kingdom.

57. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth of the service sector in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Couchman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth of the service sector in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: The service sector grew by 5 per cent. over the year to the second quarter of 1987.

Economic Growth

21. Mr. Watts asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to how the growth of the United Kingdom economy compares with that of the other major industrialised countries.

45. Mr. Boswell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to how the growth of the United Kingdom economy compares with that of the other major industrialised countries.

48. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to how the growth of the United Kingdom economy compares with that of other major industrialised countries.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Over the year to the second quarter of 1987, the United Kingdom economy grew almost 4 per cent., which is substantially faster than any other major industrial economy.

23. Dr. Twinn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been the change in output in the first six months of 1987 compared with the equivalent period of 1986.

62. Mr. Hayward asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the rise in output in the first six months of 1987 compared with the equivalent period in 1986.

80. Mr. Haselhurst asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been the rise in output in the first six months of 1987 compared with the equivalent period in 1986.

Mr. Major: 4·3 per cent.

IMF

22. Mr. Carrington asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent International Monetary Fund meeting in Washington.

33. Mr. Arnold asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent International Monetary Fund meeting in Washington.

Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his recent discussions at the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friends and the hon. Gentleman to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor to my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash).

Public Expenditure

24. Mr. McAllion asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the public spending planning total for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

37. Mr. Livingstone asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the public spending planning totals for 1986-87 and 1987-88.

65. Mr. McLeish asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the public spending planning total for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

75. Mr. Graham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the public spending planning totals for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Barnsley, East (Mr. Patchett).

87. Mr. Nelson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the public sector borrowing requirement in the current financial year.

Mr. Major: The Budget forecast for the public sector borrowing requirement in 1987-88 was £3·9 billion. A new foreast will be published in the autumn statement.

Privatisation

25. Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate for the proceeds from privatisation sales in 1987-88.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. McAvoy).

Unemployment Costs

26. Mr. Haynes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual cost to the Exchequer of unemployment in the east midlands.

34. Mrs. Walley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will prepare a region-by-region estimate of the total annual cost to the Exchequer of unemployment.

47. Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual cost to the Exchequer of unemployment in Wales.

59. Mr. Buckley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual cost to the Exchequer of unemployment in the Yorkshire and Humberside region.

66. Mrs. Fyfe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual cost to the Exchequer of unemployment in Scotland.

68. Mr. Clelland asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual cost to the Exchequer of unemployment in the northern region.

73. Mr. Illsley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will prepare a region-by-region estimate of the annual cost to the Exchequer of unemployment.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle).

National Economic Development Council

Dr. Moonie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet the National Economic Development Council.

Ms. Primarolo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet the National Economic Development Council.

Mr. Macdonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet the National Economic Development Council.

Mr. Hardy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet the National Economic Development Council.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend plans to attend the next meeting of the National Economic Development Council, which will be on 13 January 1988.

Exchange Rates

Sir John Farr asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of the pound sterling—US dollar exchange rate.

Mr. Lilley: At the London close on 28 October the sterling—dollar exchange rate was 1·71.

Oil Revenues

Mr. Mullin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total (a) gross and (b) net revenue received since 1979 by the Exchequer from North sea oil.

Mr. Lilley: Available information was provided to the hon. Member on 14 July, at column 568, by my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury.

54. Mr. Corbyn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of North sea oil revenues in 1987-88.

85. Mr. McFall asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of North sea oil revenues in 1987-88.

Mr. Lilley: An updated forecast for Government revenues from United Kingdom oil and gas production in 1987-88 will be provided in the 1987 autumn statement.

Income Tax

32. Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised by the higher rates of income tax in 1978-79 and 1986-87, respectively.

Mr. Marlow asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised by the higher rates of income tax in 1978-79 and 1986-87, respectively.

41. Mr. Ian Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised by the higher rates of income tax in 1978-79 and 1986-87, respectively.

72. Mr. David Shaw asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised by the higher rates of income tax in 1978-79 and 1986-87, respectively.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The total tax liability resulting from the difference between the higher rates of income tax and the basic rate rose from £810 million in 1978-79 to about £2,500 million in 1986-87. This represent an increase in real terms of about 60 per cent. calculated by reference to the movement in the retail prices index.

55. Mr. Baldry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the total yield of income tax is paid by the top 5 per cent. of taxpayers; and how this figure compares with five years ago.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Income tax liabilities of the top 5 per cent. of taxpaying single people and married couples are estimated to be 28·5 per cent. of the total in 1987-88 compared with 25·4 per cent. in 1982-83. The estimate for 1987-88 is based on a projection of the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes and is therefore provisional.

Disposable Incomes

35. Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth in real personal disposable incomes over the past year.

76. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of personal disposable incomes over the past year.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth).

£2 Coin

36. Mr. Janner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any proposals for the introduction of a £2 coin.

Mr. Brooke: The Government have no plans to introduce a £2 coin for general circulation.

Inflation

38. Mr. William Powell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of inflation.

50. Mr. Soames asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of inflation.

53. Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of inflation.

58. Mr. Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of inflation.

79. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the level of inflation.

Mr. Lilley: The increase in retail prices over the 12 months ending September 1987 was 4·2 per cent.

European Monetary System

39. Mr. MacLennan asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement as to his policy on British membership of the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

56. Mr. Hunter asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given recently to the United Kingdom seeking full participation in the European monetary system.

Mr. Peter Lilley: The matter is kept under review.

Company Investment (Rate of Return)

42. Mr. Grylls asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the net real rate of return in the company sector.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the question asked by my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack).

Unit Labour Costs

43. Mr. Hind asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for unit labour costs in the United Kingdom.

44. Mr. Charles Wardle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for unit labour costs in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: The latest figures show that in the first quarter of 1987 unit labour costs for the whole economy rose by 3·7 per cent. Manufacturing unit wage costs rose by 1·5 per cent. over the previous year in the three months ending in August.

Invisible Earnings

46. Mr. Quentin Davies asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of invisible earnings in the United Kingdom; and how it compares with the levels five and 10 years ago.

69. Mr. Evennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of invisible earnings in the United Kingdom; and how it compares with the levels five and 10 years ago.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood).

Private Shareholding

49. Mr. Wood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest figures on the extent of private shareholding in the United Kingdom.

86. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest figures on the extent of private shareholding in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor to my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon).

Taxation

52. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to reduce capital taxation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion.

Mortgage Interest Relief

61. Mr. Colvin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will introduce measures to extend the mortgage interest relief allowance for married couples.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The level of mortgage interest relief has to be fixed each year and will be considered in framing the Budget proposals.

Price Stability

63. Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on progress towards achieving Her Majesty's Government's ultimate objective of price stability.

Mr. Major: Price stability remains the Government's ultimate objective. Recent movements in the retail prices index have been consistent with the Budget forecast of 4 per cent. inflation in the fourth quarter of 1987. A new forecast will be published in the autumn statement.

Tax Reform

67. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement outlining his long-term plans for tax reform.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Chancellor has made clear that he will continue to pursue policies of tax reform and tax reduction aimed at sharpening incentives, stimulating enterprise and thus promoting sustained economic growth. The hon. Member will not expect me to comment on any specific measures in advance of the Chancellor's Budget statement.

Small Businesses

70. Mr. Butler asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further fiscal measures he intends to implement to benefit small businesses.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government will continue to pursue policies designed to promote a vigorous, enterprising economy in which small businesses can flourish.

I cannot anticipate decisions on specific measures which may be announced in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's next Budget statement. A list of some of the measures helpful to the small businesses which have been introduced was given in the Chief Secretary's written reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 20 July 1987, at column 72.

Interest Rates

78. Mr. Darling asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

82. Dr. Reid asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Pike asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Members to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall).

Milk Quotas

Mr. Warren asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the absence of tax relief on the sale of milk quotas and the effect this has on farmers moving between farms or leaving the industry.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Legislation will be introduced in next year's Finance Bill extending capital gains tax rollover relief to both milk and potato quotas. The relief will be available where there is a disposal or acquisition of milk or potato quota after midnight tonight.

Parliamentary Papers (Printing)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current difficulties in printing parliamentary papers and particularly questions and motions at Her Majesty's Stationery Office's Parliamentary Press.

Mr. Lilley: With St. Stephen's Parliamentary Press now closed the new Parliamentary Press began to produce the Votes and Proceedings bundle from 20 October using new technology. Everything possible has been done in the summer recess to simulate live production and to ensure the necessary computer formats have been tested but there is no substitute for live production.

I regret that the very heavy submission of questions in the first few days following the recess led to difficulties which were compounded by a computer system fault which caused delays to the provision of printed papers in the usual form.

The Parliamentary Press is very conscious of the inconvenience caused to right hon. and hon. Members and is sparing no efforts to restore normal service. In the meantime copies of the papers will be produced in an alternative form and held in reserve for use if necessary until it is clear that system faults have been overcome.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cyprus

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the proposed EEC/Cyprus customs union agreement will in practice include the Turkish Republic of northern Cyprus; whether it will only apply in practice to that part of the island of Cyprus governed by the Greek Cypriots; and if he will make a statement to explain how this new agreement can help both Greek Cypriots in the south and Turkish Cypriots in the north of Cyprus.

Mrs. Chalker: The protocol to the EC — Cyprus association agreement, implementing the commitment in the agreement to develop a customs union, which was signed on 19 October, is governed by article 5 of the association agreement. This rules out discrimination between nationals or the companies of Cyprus. The Community has made it clear that the provisions of the protocol apply to the whole population of Cyprus. The interests of the Turkish Cypriot community were taken fully into account during the negotiations. We shall continue to trade with them. I am confident that they will benefit in practice.

Arms Exports

Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for Her Majesty's Government's ability to act as an honest broker in the middle east of its policy on arms exports to different middle east countries.

Mr. Mellor: All exports of defence-related equipment are considered on a strict case-by-case basis. Each transaction is subject to stringent export licensing procedures, including an assessment of foreign policy and regional security implications and consideration of the human rights record of the country concerned.

These strict procedures are applied uniformly to all defence equipment exports worldwide, including the Middle East. In addition, special ministerial guidelines or restrictions are applied to exports to certain Middle Eastern countries, reflecting Her Majesty's Government's wish not to exacerbate or prolong conflicts in the region, and our determination to take a firm line on state-sponsored terrorism. Consequently, our policy on the export of defence related equipment in no way compromises our ability to work for a negotiated settlement to problems in the Middle East.

Gibraltar

Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the status of Gibraltar; what was the outcome of the most recent expression of opinion on their future by the people of Gibraltar; and what discussions are currently taking place with the Spanish Government on this matter.

Mrs. Chalker: We will continue to stand by the undertaking in the 1969 Gibraltar constitution to respect the wishes of the people of Gibraltar on the future status of Gibraltar. Repeated opinion polls have confirmed the findings of the 1967 referendum in which the people of Gibraltar voted overwhelmingly in favour of retaining their links with Britain. My right hon. and learned Friend meets the Spanish Foreign Minister at regular intervals for discussions under the 1984 Brussels agreement. He will be doing so again at the end of November.

Mr. and Mrs. Vladimir Tufeld

Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Soviet Government about the case of Mr. and Mrs. Vladimir Tufeld of Moscow and the refusal of the Soviet authorities to allow them to join their son and daughter-in-law in Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We deplore the refusal of the Soviet authorities to allow Mr. and Mrs. Vladimir Tufeld to join their family in Israel. Their name was included on the list of refusenik cases which my right hon. and learned Friend handed to Mr. Shevardnadze in March. We shall continue to press the Soviet Government to adopt a more humane approach in cases of this kind.

Fiji

Mr. Boswell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the consequences of Fiji's current withdrawal from the Commonwealth for those areas within the responsibilities of his Department, including specifically the accreditation of the respective high commissioners and under Commonwealth auspices and the subscription to the Commonwealth Secretariat and other bodies.

Mrs. Chalker: If Fiji remains outside the Commonwealth, the application of a number of Acts of Parliament will have to be reviewed. Fiji's lapsed Commonwealth membership does not invalidate the accreditation of diplomatic representatives. The question of a reallocation of Fiji's share of the budgets of various Commonwealth organisations — 0·75 per cent. of the total in respect of the Commonwealth Secretariat—is a matter for the organisations themselves.

Namibia

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new measures Her Majesty's Government will apply in order to bring help to the international community trying to end the occupation of Namibia by South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 26 October 1987.

Benguela Railays

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the offer made in Vancouver at the Commonwealth conference of British aid to the front-line states includes funds, technical co-operation and military protection of the Benguela railways.

Mrs. Chalker: A programme of co-ordinated Commonwealth assistance to the front-line states was agreed at Vancouver, giving priority attention to the Limpopo railway and port of Maputo initially, to which we had already committed £16 million. No separate British offer was made.

Southern Africa (Attacks)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the last information received by Her Majesty's Government of the cost of the damages inflicted by the attacks by South African troops or their mercenaries on the economies of Mozambique, Angola, and other front-line states.

Mrs. Chalker: We have no reliable information.

Mr. Oscar Arias (Congratulations)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the date of the congratulatory messages sent by Her Majesty's Government to the President of Costa Rica, Mr. Oscar Arias, for his Nobel peace prize.

Mr. Eggar: 14 October.

Chile (University Students)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest information he has received from Her Majesty's embassy in Santiago with regard to the new wave of repression against university students and academics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's embassy in Santiago has reported fully on the current strike and regrettable disturbances at the University of Chile.

Human Rights (Commonwealth)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement outlining information available to Her Majesty's Government on the human rights record of each member country of the Commonwealth, stating specifically in each case the extent to which that country practises racial, religious, political or colour discrimination.

Mrs. Chalker: No country currently a member of the Commonwealth has a constitution which discriminates on the grounds of race, religion or colour. Where Commonwealth countries' practice on human rights gives cause for concern, we make representations as necessary. As my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State told the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 23 January 1986, such representations are sometimes more productive if undertaken without publicity, and it would therefore not be helpful to disclose full details.

Mr. Scallan (Detention)

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Italian Government about the detention of Mr. Scallan, the captain of a ship held by the Italian authorities in Savona; what consular access has been granted to Mr. Scallan; and what information he has received from the Italian Government about the circumstances of his arrest.

Mr. Eggar: We have made no representations to the Italian Government about the detention of Mr. Scallan. He is a citizen of the Republic of Ireland and we understand that the Irish embassy in Rome are providing consular assistance to him.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the efforts of the United States and the Soviet Union to eliminate the whole range of nuclear weapons which are located on European soil.

Mr. Mellor: We warmly welcome the prospect of an intermediate nuclear force agreement which, if attainable, will eliminate a whole class of nuclear weapons, many of which are deployed in Europe. It is not United States or NATO policy to seek the complete elimination of all nuclear weapons from Europe. Even after an INF agreement, NATO faces a formidable threat from Soviet and Warsaw Pact nuclear, conventional and chemical forces. It is our policy to continue to rely for our security on deterrence based on a mix of conventional and nuclear weapons for the foreseeable future.

East Timor (Civil Rights)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is his intention to raise with the Indonesian authorities the question of the provision of arms and the protection of civil rights in East Timor.

Mr. Eggar: We have no plans to do so. Defence equipment is supplied to Indonesia in accordance with our normal criteria. The Indonesian Government are well aware of our views on human rights in East Timor.

THE ARTS

Business Sponsorship Incentive Scheme

Mr. Simon Coombs asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the business sponsorship incentive scheme.

Mr. Luce: The Government's business sponsorship incentive scheme has been an outstanding success, bringing in £15 million of new money into the arts and attracting 600 new sponsors. During the summer sponsorship continued to grow and there was a marked increase in awards at the maximum amount. This led to the cash-limited annual funds being used up earlier than anticipated. However, I was able to allocate further modest sums to enable the scheme to continue at a reduced maximum amount per head. The scheme will be strengthened next year.

DEFENCE

Weather Forecasts

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will initiate inquiries into the nature of weather forecasts provided for the south of England in respect of 15-16 October, and in particular the reasons for the discrepancies between the forecasts issued by his Department and the meteorological services of other countries on that night.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Director-General of the Meteorological Office is already conducting an internal investigation into the nature and sequence of meteorological events surrounding the storm which struck the south and east of England on 15 and 16 October. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked Sir Peter Swinnerton-Dyer FRS, chairman of the University Grants Committee, and Professor Robert Pearce, head of the department of meteorology at Reading university, to examine the findings of that inquiry and to present their conclusions to him. He proposes to make these public. In the meantime, I do not wish to anticipate the outcome of the inquiries.

Directorate General of Quality Assurance

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to be able to announce a decision about the future location of the headquarters of the Directorate General of Quality Assurance.

Mr. Sainsbury: The appraisal of future locations for the work done by the Directorate General of Defence Quality Assurance continues to make steady progress.

Low-flying Exercises

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the different parts of the territory of the United Kingdom which are affected by low-flight exercises.

Mr. Freeman: Since the introduction of the revised United Kingdom low-flying system in 1979, all parts of Great Britain have, in principle, been open to low-flying aircraft, the aim being to spread the activity as widely and evenly as possible. To reduce disturbance on the ground, however, aircraft avoid overflying major population centres, and, for safety reasons, civil air traffic zones. Major low-flying exercises also take place throughout Great Britain, although many tend to be centred on military ranges or training areas.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flight exercises the Royal Air Force carried out over United Kingdom territory for each year since 1975.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of military low-level training sorties flown in the United Kingdom since 1975 are as follows:

	Number
1975	78,000
1976	77,700
1977	76,000
1978	76,000
1979	108,860
1980	122,850
1981	131,840
1982	130,310
1983	128,000
1984	133,500
1985	141,760
1986	151,160
1987	[1]113,405

[1] Up to 30 September.

Approximately 82 per cent. of these involved United Kingdom military aircraft; 70 per cent. involved RAF aircraft.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average cost of each low-flight exercise since 1975.

Mr. Freeman: The cost of a low-level flight varies according to the duration of the flight, the aircraft type and the sort of training involved. Major exercises are only part of our low-flying training programme and are not costed separately. The figures requested could not be produced without disproportionate effort.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average duration of low-flight exercises over populated parts of United Kingdom territory.

Mr. Freeman: The average duration of a low-level flying training sortie is approximately 45 minutes during which time a distance of around 400 miles may be covered. Aircrew are instructed to avoid overflying the centres of main built-up areas but cannot always avoide overflying the outskirts of such areas, or other smaller settlements. These instructions apply both to day-to-day training and major low-flying exercises.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilians affected by human or property loss due to accidents of low-flight operations have pending claims for damages from his Department; and if he will detail how long such claims have awaited a decision.

Mr. Freeman: No civilian has a claim pending in respect of human loss but 20 have claims outstanding for property damage. Two arise from a crash in December 1984, five from two crashes in December 1986 and the remainder from crashes earlier this year.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will instruct the commanding officers in charge of low-flight operations to consult local authorities and local communities about the scale, frequency and timing of such exercises.

Mr. Freeman: There is no need to issue new instructions: all use of the United Kingdom low-flying system is already regulated carefully in order to minimise any disturbance to those on the ground. Where major low-flying exercises are concerned, it is our policy to give advance warning to hon. Members whose constituencies will see additional low-flying activity, as well as to the local press and local organisations such as the National Farmers' Unions.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many people have been killed, injured or had their property damaged or destroyed as a consequence of low-flight exercise accidents; and how many of these were civilians;

(2) how many low-flying exercise accidents occurred for each year since 1975; where they took place; and what was the population for each of the areas affected by such accidents.

Mr. Freeman: Information prior to 1979 is not readily available. Since 1 January 1979, 11 Royal Air force personnel have died and a further seven Royal Air force personnel have suffered major injuries as a result of the following accidents on land in the United Kingdom involving low-flying operations by fast jet aircraft.

Date	Location
6 July 1979	Tintagel, Cornwall	One major injury
23 November 1979	Central Scotland	One fatality
10 December 1979	Lumsden, Aberdeenshire	One fatality and one major injury
12 February 1980	Isle of Skye	One fatality
18 November 1981	Lock Luichart, Ross	One fatality
13 May 1982	Near Aberystwyth, Wales	One major injury
24 June 1983	Near Ramsey, Isle of Man	Two fatalities
12 July 1984	Near Sheringham, Norfolk	One major injury
7 October 1985	Alston, Cumbria	One fatality
7 January 1986	Aysgarth, North Yorkshire	Two major injuries
17 June 1987	Near Keswick, Cumbria	One fatality
24 June 1987	Builth Wells, Wales	One fatality
27 July 1987	Fadmoor, North Yorkshire	One major injury
26 August 1987	Near Aberystwyth, Wales	Two fatalities

Two civilians sustained minor injuries as a result of the accident on 6 July 1979. There have been no civilian fatalities. All of these accidents occurred in sparsely populated areas. Resulting claims for compensation to the value of £80,804 have been settled so far, but some claims originating from recent accidents are still under consideration.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if, after consultations with the local authorities of areas affected by low-flight exercises, he will instruct the commanding officers in charge of such operations to reduce to a minimum such flights and to conduct them at the hours of the day or night at which they are likely to cause the minimum of inconvenience to the people affected by them;

(2) what specific instructions exist about the time of the day or night in which low-flight operations are conducted in case they affect populated areas of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: Every effort is already made to minimise the disturbance caused by this essential activity as far as possible, commensurate with our training needs and safety considerations. Most low-flying training takes place on weekdays between 7 am and 11 pm. Only a small amount of activity takes place outside these hours and this is strictly limited.

Environment Protection

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the instructions given to the armed forces with regard to the respect and protection of the environment when building accommodation for their personnel, preparing exercises or conducting any kind of operations.

Mr. Freeman: The Crown is exempt from the provisions of the Town and Country Planning Acts but Government Departments are required to consult local planning authorities before proceeding with development, and the Ministry of Defence adheres strictly to this procedure. Plans to build accommodation for the armed forces are therefore submitted to the local planning authorities, which will take environmental aspects into consideration at that stage.

The Ministry of Defence takes seriously its responsibility to conserve the land used for military purposes and puts much effort into protecting the environment on its estate. When preparing exercises the armed forces consult the landowners and environmental agencies as appropriate and seek to minimise disturbance to the environment from their activities.

Personation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in the past five years individuals have been apprehended in possession of a false Ministry of Defence police warrant card.

Mr. Sainsbury: Only one instance, the recent Larsen case, has come to the notice of the Ministry of Defence police. We know of no instance where the use of a false MOD police warrant card has been used in the commission of a crime, or to attempt to gain unauthorised access to MOD property.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many incidents have been recorded in the last five years of individuals entering defence establishments wearing military uniforms to which they were not entitled.

Mr. Sainsbury: No central records are held of individuals entering or attempting to enter defence establishments in these circumstances and it would require a disproportionate effort to collect them.

Marconi

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the chief constable of the Ministry of Defence police liaised with or operated in conjunction with the chief constable of Hampshire in executing the recent Ministry of Defence police raid on the Marconi company's premises in Portsmouth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence police, in accordance with guidelines, informed the Hampshire constabulary on 22 October of their intention to execute a warrant to search the premises of Marconi Defence Systems at Portsmouth on the following day.

Inter-force Working Arrangements

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the chief constable of the Ministry of Defence police and the Association of Chief Police Officers reached an agreement on inter-force working arrangements, when a copy of that agreement will be placed in the Library as announced to Standing Committee B on the Ministry of Defence Police Bill [Lords] on 12 February, Official Report, column 58; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: During the passage of the legislation my predecessor referred to the fact that discussions were taking place with the Association of Chief Police Officers about the relationship between MOD police and Home Department forces. I am glad to say that the Association and the Ministry of Defence police committee have now agreed the terms of guidelines on this matter. These guidelines have been disseminated to chief constables of Home Department forces under cover of circulars issued by the Home Office and the Scottish Home and Health Department. I am arranging for copies of both circulars to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Contracts (Overcharging)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 22 October, Official Report, column 874, if he will give a breakdown of the £14·5 million refunded by contractors in 1984 following a post-costing review of contract prices.

Mr. Sainsbury: No; such information is subject to commercial confidentiality.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dry Sow and Tether Stalls

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce regulations to phase out the use of dry sow and tether stalls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Farm Animal Welfare Council is currently carrying out a review of pig production systems including the dry sow and tether stall. I expect to receive the council's conclusions around the end of this year. I have no plans at present to phase out dry sow and tether stalls.

Pate de Foie Gras

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will support action (i) to end the production of pate de foie gras in the European Community or (ii) to ban its import into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I cannot support either action. My Department has no plans to impose a ban on the import of pate de foie gras, as I am advised that such a step would contravene the Treaty of Rome. In any case it is for individuals to decide whether or not to buy or consume foie gras.

Intervention Stores

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 22 October, Official Report, column 889, if he will give details of (a) the intervention cost, (b) the storage cost, and (c) the sale price of the 278,612 tonnes of skimmed milk powder sold for manufacture into animal feed between 1982 and 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is not available in the form requested. However, details of buying-in prices and average incidental costs for all purchases of SMP, together with average sale prices of SMP destined for animal feed over the period in question are as follows:

£ per tonne

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Buying-in prices	819·41 (until 19 May)	904·66 (until 22 May)	925·76 (until 2 April)	1,026·23 (until 26 May)	1,076·71 (until 11 May)
	904·66 (after 19 May)	925·76 (after 22 May)	1,026·23 (after 2 April)	1,076·71 (after 26 May)	1,106·24 (after 21 May)

Food (Radioactive Contamination)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to establish from the EEC Commission whether the radioactive skimmed milk powder which was sent from West Germany to Ghana under the EEC food relief programme was imported to West Germany from East Europe under the inner German trade agreement; if, in the light of the restrictions on the movement of radioactive food from Czechoslovakia announced on 8 May 1986, he will further inquire if the skimmed milk powder which was also sent from Czechoslovakia was transported through the EEC and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no plans to do so, although if the hon. Gentleman has evidence that Community rules may have been infringed I will arrange for it to be passed to the Commission.

Storm Damage

Mr. Warren asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the financial problems facing farmers whose farm buildings were uninsured and damaged in the recent hurricane; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I made it clear when replying to my Hon. Friend the Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith) on 22 October that I saw no reason to depart from the principle that farmers normally bear the cost of bad weather and that the Government should not compensate them for such losses—against which the majority would normally be insured. It would not be equitable for the Government to take action to make good insurable losses.

Religious Slaughter

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will announce the Government's response to the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on religious slaughter.

Mr. MacGregor: With my ministerial colleagues responsible for agriculture in Great Britain I have considered carefully the report by the Farm Animal Welfare Council on religious slaughter of animals. We have also studied the many comments on the report which have been made by interested organisations and individuals.

Fifteen of the Council's recommendations were directed to improving the methods and procedures for religious slaughter. We are determined that religious slaughter must be performed humanely and we share the council's view that it must be subject to proper legislative control. We believe that the council's recommendations will provide substantial safeguards for animal welfare, and we shall therefore implement all 15 of these recommendations.

In particular we shall ban the use of the casting pen for cattle. This will be an important new welfare advance. Inversion in a casting pen imposes discomfort and stress on cattle and the prohibition of this procedure will be widely welcomed. The ban will take effect two years after the necessary legislation has been made. In addition, in line with the council's 15 recommendations, there will be new statutory rules for the handling of animals prior to and after slaughter and for the equipment used. We shall extend the existing requirements for the licensing of premises and slaughtermen to ensure that the new standards can be properly enforced.

A paper containing our detailed proposals for implementation of the FAWC recommendations is being issued to interested organisations today; a copy will be placed in the Library of the House. The interested organisations will be consulted on the draft statutory instrument required to give effect to these decisions; it will be laid before Parliament as soon as possible thereafter.

The abolition of casting cattle is a substantial change in established Jewish practice and was not easy for the Jewish authorities to accept under their religious law. My right hon. Friends and I appreciate their readiness to overcome the difficulties they found and so to accept the change.

In addition, we have considered carefully the exemption which the legislation provides for the Jewish and Muslim communities from the requirement to stun animals before slaughter. The arguments for and against this exemption are those of religious belief and of animal welfare, both issues of great importance to those who have expressed views to us.

From their studies the Council concluded that the Jewish and Muslim communities should be required to develop alternative arrangements for slaughter, in order that the exemption from stunning could be repealed. In response to this recommendation, we have explored in detail with leaders of the Jewish and Muslim communities their slaughter requirements and arranged for them to consider very carefully the scope for removal of the exemption from stunning. They have co-operated fully in these discussions.

The religious communities have made clear that elements of their slaughter requirements are fundamental obligations, forming part of their religious law which it is not open to them to alter. They have also rejected the council's assessment of the welfare implications of religious slaughter.

I can well understand why the council should recommend that the interest of the animals would best be safeguarded by ensuring efficient stunning prior to slaughter, including slaughter by decapitation. However the Government has to recognise the serious implications for the religious communities if they were no longer allowed to prepare meat as their faiths require. We do not believe that we would be justified in imposing such a burden on these communities. We do not therefore propose to ask Parliament to reverse the attitude which it has taken to this issue in the past.

We have also considered carefully the recommendation that cuts of meat from religiously slaughtered animals should be labelled down to the point of retail sale. We have concluded that a statutory requirement for labelling is not a practical proposition. There would be serious difficulties in administration and enforcement. Moreover, our freedom unilaterally to introduce additional mandatory labelling requirements is severely constrained by EC food labelling law. I am however writing to the religious communities to ask them to take note of the concern expressed by many on this subject, and am asking them to take all steps open to them to minimise the amount of meat produced by religious methods which is diverted from the religious market.

I wish to record the appreciation of my colleagues and myself of the work undertaken by the Farm Animal Welfare Council on this complex subject. Our decisions were particularly difficult. The fact that over the years we have accepted so many of the recommendations in the wide range of reports which the council has made indicates the value we place on its advice.

Health and Safety

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farm visits have been made by Health and Safety Executive inspectors in total this year to date, and in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

The total number of farm visits made by the Health and Safety Executive Her Majesty's agricultural inspectorate for the past five yeas is as follows:

Year	Number
1982	29,591
1983–84	27,255
1984–85	29,468
1985–86	30,562
1986–87	30,605

Figures for this year so far are not yet available.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of public funding devoted to monitoring and enforcing safety legislation in agriculture by the Health and Safety Executive; what proportion is devoted separately to monitoring and enforcing legislation regarding pesticides use; and if he will give the relevant information for each of the last five years and the projection for 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

The salary budget for the Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectorate for each of the last five years is as follows:

Financial Year	Salary Budget £
1983–84	2,835,000
1984–85	2,972,000
1985–86	3,092,000
1986–87	3,322,000
1987–88	3,472,000

The budget for 1988–89 is not yet available.

The monitoring and enforcement of pesticides legislation is undertaken as part of the agricultural inspecorate's overall work programme and no separate budget allocation is made.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Health and Safety Executive inspectors are presently engaged in monitoring and enforcing existing legislation with regard to the use of pesticides; how many farm visits have been made this year to date; and how does this information compare with 1986.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

On 1 October 1987 the Health and Safety Executive employed 142 agricultural inspectors and 528 factory inspectors in the field. Their duties include responsibility for pesticide safety. Figures for the number of farm visits made since 1 April 1987 to date are not yet available. On 1 October 1986, 156 agricultural inspectors and 543 factory inspectors were employed in the field. Agricultural inspectors made 30,605 visits to farms during 1986-87. A recruitment competition for factory and agricultural inspectors has just started.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Christmas Bonus

88. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will increase the annual Christmas bonus paid to pensioners from £10 to £20 in the current year.

Mr. Scott: An order setting the 1987 Christmas bonus at £10 was approved by affirmative resolution of both Houses in July.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many community psychiatric nurses there have been in each health region in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Currie: The figures relating to all NHS staff in community mental illness nursing are shown in the table:

Mental Health

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what funds have been specifically earmarked for the care of the mentally ill following the closure of mental hospitals in each health region in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend the information he seeks as it is not centrally collected. My hon. Friend may like to seek information from any individual regional health authority in whose area there has been such a closure.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the provisions of community care for patients suffering from schizophrenic psychosis discharged from National Health Service mental illness hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We receive representations from time to time about the quality of community care for those people discharged from hospital following treatment for schizophrenia.

The effectiveness of modern treatment means that patients are usually well enough, and prefer, to leave after a short stay in hospital, and to receive further treatment on an out-patient or day-patient basis. We are very conscious that the patient when at home needs good quality support. Studies have shown that in many places the quality of support is patchy and we will not be satisfied until we see evidence of a high level of support everywhere. We emphasise the importance of the professional team agreeing an individual care plan with the patient and carers at the time of discharge.

Community care services to mentally ill people are still in the process of development, as my hon. Friend will see from the rapid expansion of the community psychiatric nursing service. Health authorities have been asked to make the needs of this group a priority. More needs to be done both in terms of the range, quality and distribution of facilities and in the co-ordination between the statutory, voluntary and private sectors which collectively provide the services. Sir Roy Griffiths is conducting a review on community care and will report around the end of the year on how it can be made more effective.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people discharged from hospital following a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis and subsequently taken by the police under section to hospital have been refused admission in each health region in each of the last five years;

(2) how many people discharged from mental illness hospitals, after a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis, having been proved vulnerable boarders, subsequently became voluntary boarders in each of the last five years in each health region.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend the information he seeks, as it is not collected centrally.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance his Department gives to mental illness hospitals on the retention of patients whose condition is unlikely to improve; and what is the current policy in each health region.

Mrs. Currie: In our policy paper on mental illness services (Cmnd. 9674) we advised health authorities that every district will require long-stay accommodation for those patients whose psychiatrists find that discharge would not be in the patient's interest. The paper says:

> "Patients who would be better off outside hospital should have a planned discharge to suitable care even if no closure is foreseen; patients who are better off in in-patient care should continue to receive such care, by a transfer if necessary, even if a closure is planned."

I believe all regional health authorities' policies are in line with this guidance.

Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of abortions on non-resident women in the latest year for which figures are available were performed under ground 2 of the Abortion Act.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the table.

Percentage of abortions performed on non-resident women under Ground 2 of the 1967 Abortion Act, England and Wales 1986

Total notification of abortions to non-resident women (a)	Mentions of Ground 2 (b)	Percentage (b) of (a)
24,667	24,633	99·9

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the numbers of abortions carried out at 18 weeks and over on non-resident and resident women together with the numbers and percentages of such women aged under 18 years, 18 to 40 years and over 40 years, for the last year for which figures are available;

(2) if he will list the numbers of abortions carried out below 18 weeks on non-resident and resident women, together with the numbers and percentages of such women aged under 18 years, 18 to 40 years and over 40 years, for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the table:

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has plans to seek to amend abortion legislation in the light of the report of the fourth conference of the International Right To Life Federation in Zagreb, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Emergency Alarm Systems

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much of the current expenditure by his Department on housing benefit is accounted for by charges for emergency alarm systems, and what was this figure in 1986, 1985 and 1984;

(2) how many people are estimated to use emergency alarm systems; and how many emergency alarm systems are fitted in dwellings that are not classified as sheltered.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested on charges is not available, nor do we have a reliable basis for an estimate of the number of people who use emergency alarm systems.

Elderly, Sick and Disabled Persons (Accommodation)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the accommodation referred to in deposited paper 3042, page 111, as specifically intended for and occupied by elderly, sick or disabled persons includes (i) property that is owned by elderly, sick or disabled persons, (ii) accommodation that is not officially recognised as sheltered accommodation and (iii) accommodation that has not been physically altered specifically for elderly, sick or disabled persons.

Mr. Portillo: The intention of the draft housing benefits regulations published in May 1987, to which the hon. Member refers, is that the costs of an emergency alarm system which a tenant has no choice but to meet should be eligible for housing benefit where the system is provided either in accommodation, such as sheltered housing, which has been specially designed or adapted for elderly, sick or disabled people, or in accommodation that is particularly suitable for such people. The local authority associations are currently being consulted on amendments to the draft regulations for the reformed housing benefit scheme which, among other things, will make this intention clear. Help for owner-occupiers with the costs of emergency alarm systems will be available under the income support scheme, using the same criteria.

Nursing Homes (NHS Staff)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what regulations have been issued regarding serving National Health Service staff becoming involved in private nursing homes to which patients, originally under their care, are transferred.

Mrs. Currie: None. This is a matter for health authorities to determine locally in the light of individual circumstances. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind he may like to consult the health authority concerned.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the health risks and other possible damage to people and food production which further deterioration in the ozone layer would bring about.

Mrs. Currie: Any reduction in the ozone layer would allow a greater amount of ultra-violet light to penetrate to ground level. However, other factors, such as latitude and degree of cloud cover, are normally the major determinants of ultra-violet light levels in a given area. The implcation for health of increased exposure to ultra-violet light is of an increase in the risk of skin cancer on exposed parts of the body. The extent of deliberate exposure of untanned and unprotected skin directly to sunlight is believed to be the most important factor determining the risk of skin cancer to an individual in any given area.

Food production is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Speech Therapy

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the numbers of speech therapists employed in England and Scotland for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The figures for England are shown in the table. Figures for Scotland are matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

NHS Speech therapists as at 30 September: England

Year	Whole-time equivalent
1982	1,900
1983	1,970
1984	2,150
1985	2,340
1986	2,510

Note: All figures are independently rounded to the nearest 10 whole-time equivalent.
Source: DHSS Annual census of NHS Non-Medical Manpower.

These figures reflect a 32 per cent. increase in whole-time equivalent staff employed in the years in question.

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to improve the provision of speech therapy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: It is for individual health authorities to determine the appropriate level of provision of their speech therapy services, having regard to local circumstances, competing priorities and available resources. The numbers of speech therapists employed has risen by nearly 50 per cent. since 1979 and the expenditure on speech therapy services has also increased at a much faster rate than the general increase in National Health Service expenditure.

Family Income Supplement

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding the proposed changes in the family income supplement rules from 1 April 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Family income supplement will be replaced by the new family credit scheme in April 1988. The change has been widely welcomed as a major improvement in the help available to low income working families with children, and has been extensively debated both in Parliament and more widely.

Benefits

Mr. Blunkett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement regarding the level of support, following their disentitlement to supplementary benefit, for the dependants of unemployed heads of households who take up full-time training.

Mr. Portillo: Unemployment or supplementary benefit for both a claimant and his dependents is payable only if an unemployed person can demonstrate that he or she is available for employment. It follows that the Government's general policy towards unemployed persons who embark on a course of training or study is that their financial support should be the responsibility of the employer, local education authority or other organisation concerned. This policy continues that applied during previous administrations.

There is one exception to the availability rule for unemployed people in that a supplementary benefit claimant who is receiving a Government training allowance — usually from the Manpower Services Commission — is exempt from the requirement to be available for work. This enables the training allowance to be topped up by supplementary benefit if the allowance is insufficient for the trainee's requirements. Trainees who cease to be entitled to supplementary benefit are still able to claim other income-related benefits (such as refunds, exemption from prescription charges, housing benefit, welfare foods) in respect of themselves and their dependants and, of course, child benefit, depending on their individual circumstances.

Maternity Care

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the current provision of maternity care in each of the health authorities in the north-west.

Mrs. Currie: The latest available information held centrally on provision for maternity care in districts in the North Western regional health authority is contained in the table.

If the hon. Member seeks more recent information, or has more detailed local enquiries, he may wish to approach the chairman of the North Western regional health authority.

North-Western Health Authorities

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many health authorities in the north-west are proposing to reduce clinical services or close facilities in 1987-88 or 1988-89 to provide a balanced budget.

Mrs. Currie: Revenue expenditure by north-western regional health authority on hospital and community health services has increased in real terms by some 24 per cent. between 1978-79 and 1986-87. This has enabled substantial increases between 1978 and 1986 in the numbers of patients treated in the region: 22 per cent. more in-patients, 16 per cent. more out-patients and 85 per cent. more day cases. The key to maintaining and building on this success is sound resource management by district health authorities, within balanced budgets. The hon. Member may wish to address his detailed inquiries, about how this is achieved, to the chairman of the north-western regional health authority, which is responsible for ensuring north-western district health authorities balance their budgets.

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the projected year-end situation for each of the health authorities in the north-west on an income/expenditure basis.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is not collected on an in-year basis and the annual accounts of health authorities for 1987-88 are not due for submission to our department until the end of June 1988.

The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of the north-west regional health authority, who may be able to assist with the information he seeks.

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the cost of the 1987-88 pay awards to date of the north-west health authorities; and how this cost compares with the funding allocated by his Department.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not available centrally on the cost of pay awards by district health authority. The hon. Member may wish to ask the chairman of the north-western regional health authority for this information.

North-western RHA's share of the additional resources allocated following this year's pay review body awards to nurses, doctors and allied professions was £22·9 million. It was for the regional health authority to determine how those funds should be distributed amongst its districts.

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cumulative cost of pay award underfunding over the past three years in each of the health authorities in the north-west.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is not available. Health authorities operate within the cash planning system which means that they are expected to met all pay and price increases and develop services from within the total resources available to them. Between 1983-84 and 1986-87 north-western regional health authority's gross revenue expenditure increased by 5·1 per cent. in real terms. In 1987-88 the region has received a further real terms increase of 3·7 per cent.

Regional Health Authorities (Creditors)

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance his Department issues to regional health authorities about the acceptable level of creditors for a health authority to have in terms of (a) the number of weeks of creditors and (b) the percentage of trade creditors to allocation; and what were those levels for the past three years and projections for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mrs. Currie: The Department has issued no specific guidance on an acceptable level of creditors, but health authorities are expected to keep these within the bounds of financial prudence.

The Department does not collect in-year information on creditor balances and any attempt at estimates for 1987-88 or 1988-89 would be purely speculative.

Following are figures for the past three years derived from the summarised accounts of health authorities in England:

Regional and District Health Authorities[1]

	Column (a) Total creditors as at 31 March related to total expenditure for the year Weeks	Column (b) "Other" revenue creditors as at 31 March related to total revenue allocation for the year per cent.
1984–85	2·5	3·2
1985–86	2·6	3·3
1986–87	2·8	3·7

[1] Includes the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals.

Notes:

1. the figures for 1986-87 are based on provisional (that is, as yet unaudited) information.
2. The figures in column (a) cover revenue and capital creditor balances and expenditure.
3. "Other" revenue creditors includes mainly trade creditors which are not separately identified in the annual accounts of health authorities.

Peto Institute, Budapest

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's assessment of the work being undertaken in the Peto Institute, Budapest; and if he will indicate the level of research resources being made available for parallel treatment in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: We are aware of the favourable reports on the work being undertaken at the Peto Institute and the claims made for the success of the treatment. However as yet no proper evaluation of the benefits of conductive education has been undertaken either here or abroad. The Department of Education and Science has agreed to make available over a period of five years £326,000 in support of the evaluation of the conductive education project being established in Birmingham by the National Foundation for Conductive Education.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's policy on the condition popularly known as ME; if he will estimate the number of sufferers; what are the current totals of research expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Myalgic encephalomyelitis (ME) is a distressing complaint for which there is at present no agreed medical treatment. Data on incidence are not held centrally. The Department does not currently fund research in this field. Research is taking place at St. Mary's, Paddington. Seriological surveillance studies supported by the Scottish Home and Health Department at the Regional Virus Laboratory, Ruchill hospital, Glasgow, may also throw light on this condition. I understand that good progress on causation has been made by a combined team from the Royal Free and St. Thomas's hospitals.

Other current research into antiviral agents, allergies and immunological mechanisms may also improve knowledge of ME. The Medical Research Council is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical and biological research. Information about total expenditure on research in this field is not held centrally.

Immunisation Officers

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which district health authorities have appointed an officer to be accountable for immunisation performance in that district.

Mrs. Currie: I am pleased to record that all except two authorities, which are making arrangements to do so, have made such appointments.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Special Housing Association

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of tenants living in Scottish Special Housing Association rented accommodation in the Clydesdale constituency for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally by constituency area.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of tenants living in Scottish Special Housing Association rented accommodation in East Lothian in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally. The numbers of Scottish Special Housing Association dwellings in the area of East Lothian district council are set out below.

At 31 March	Number of dwellings
1979	1,231
1980	1,275
1981	1,287
1982	1,275
1983	1,256
1984	1,225
1985	1,148
1986	1,156

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Rifkind: A fee of £10 per registry entry has been set for access under section 21 of the Data Protection Act 1984; there are at present 72 register entries for the Scottish Office; the total cost to a data subject for access to all register entries would therefore be £720.

Health Care

Dr. Moonie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has yet reached a decision as to whether to accept the conclusion of the Sharpen report on health care spending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 28 October 1987.

Dr. Moonie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Sharpen report on health care spending will be published.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 26 October 1987.

National Health Service

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1979 (i) the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in East Lothian and (ii) the number of National Health Service staff, in terms of full-time equivalents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally on a constituency basis.

Mr. Doran asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing, for each year since 1979 (i) the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in the Aberdeen, South constituency and (ii) the number of National Health Service staff, in terms of full-time equivalents.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in Cunninghame, North constituency since 1978.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally on a constituency basis.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Dr. Moonie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what his Department is doing to reduce waiting times for ear, nose and throat surgery in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regard reduction of the length of time patients have to wait for in-patient treatment or consultations as one of the most urgent tasks facing the Health Service. I have therefore established a working group within my Department, which is currently studying various methods of reducing waiting lists and waiting times and I have impressed on health boards the importance of the task.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many of the Clydesdale patients on 1984, 1985 and 1986 waiting lists for more than three months were over 60 years of age;

(2) how many patients in Clydesdale in need of operations have been asked to wait due to lack of medical and hospital facilities for more than three months for each year since 1974.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally on a constituency basis.

Hospital Patients (Early Discharge)

Dr. Moonie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what his Department is doing to encourage early discharge from hospital following surgical procedures.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Explicit advice on detailed aspects of clinical practice is not normally given by the Department but by the royal colleges and other sources within the profession itself. More general advice is given in, for example, reports from the National Medical Consultative Committee which are published through the Scottish Health Service Planning Council and the Department. The recently published report on the management of orthopaedic services in Scotland is an example of this.

The appropriate use of clinical resources of all kinds including acute post-operative care is a central aspect of the work of the clinical resource use group set up recently under the chairmanship of the chief medical officer with members drawn from a number of professional medical fields.

Medical Staffing

Dr. Moonie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish the Shaw report on medical staffing in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that the report "Staffing the Service — The Next Decade" will be presented to the Scottish Home and Health Department and to the Scottish joint consultants committee and published around the middle of December.

North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to retaining the social remit of the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board after privatisation.

Mr. Lang: I am giving this matter close consideration.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Crown Estate Commissioners charge rent for pipes leading into the sea emanating from and owned by Dounreay, Windscale and Hunterston nuclear power stations.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the Crown Estate Commissioners that they have received or are receiving payments in respect of pipelines and associated works on the seabed at Dounreay, Sellafield (formerly Windscale) and Hunterston nuclear establishments.

Highlands and Islands Development Board

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total amounts paid to projects in the Western Isles by the Highlands and Islands Development Board in each year since 1979 in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms, based on 1986-87 prices, showing the percentage changes in payments between years.

Mr. Lang: Expenditure approved by the Highlands and Islands Development Board on businesses and projects in the Western Isles is as follows:

	(a) Cash terms		(b) 1987 prices
	£000s	per cent. change	£000s	per cent. change
1979	2,045	—	3,681	—
1980	1,719	−15·9	2,623	−28·8
1981	3,763	+118·9	5,132	+95·7
1982	3,316	−11·9	4,164	−18·9
1983	4,500	+35·7	5,402	+29·8
1984	4,254	−5·5	4,865	−10·0
1985	7,159	+68·3	7,717	+58·6
1986	3,564	−50·2	3,715	−51·9

Hospital Beds

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1979 (a) the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in the Western Isles and (b) the number of National Health Service staff in terms of full-time equivalents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally on a constituency basis.

Tourism

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set up a working party to co-ordinate all the appropriate statutory bodies and local authorities involved in the development of a suitable tourist stopping place on the A1 trunk route where it crosses the English/Scottish border at Dumbarton toll in Berwickshire; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

A1 (Cockburghton)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will sanction the use of double white lines to prohibit overtaking throughout the length of Cockburghton at the A1 as a temporary safety measure pending the realignment of the main road; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have reviewed the earlier decision that the white lines near the Cockburnspath junction should not be extended and, although the usual criteria are not met, I have decided that the continuous double white lines down the centre of the road should be continued past the village and just beyond the brow of the hill on the north side.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he now expects to announce a date for the public inquiry into the proposed route for the A1 realignment at Cockburghton in Berwickshire.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Preparations are being made for an inquiry to consider objections to the A1 Tower to Dunglass diversion orders. I expect this to be held in early 1988.

Local Councillors (Allowances and Expenses)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will now authorise a full scale review of members allowances and expenses for serving councillors in local government in Scotland, with particular reference to the particular expenses involved in travelling to rural areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. The level of travel and subsistence allowances for councillors is reviewed each year as a matter of routine. The views of the local authority associations, as expressed from time to time, are taken into account in these reviews. The Government are at present considering the Widdicombe committee's recommendations on councillors' remuneration.

Forestry

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he has any plans to change the consultation procedures undertaken by the Forestry Commission prior to approving planting applications under the forestry grant scheme;

(2) if he will make a statement on the revised composition of regional advisory committees involved in the Forestry Commission process of consultation in approving planting grants.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The consultation procedures are refined from time to time to meet changing circumstances.

My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to be in a position soon to make a statement to the House on the composition and procedures of the regional advisory committees.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will consider setting up a system of planting licences to replace the existing forestry grant scheme administered by the Forestry Commission.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is not persuaded that this is necessary or desirable.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all those voluntary bodies that may be consulted by the statutory authorities involved in the existing consultation procedures in the forestry grant scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The statutory authorities may consult with voluntary bodies as they see fit. There is no prescribed list of bodies to be consulted.

Passenger Ferries

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the implications of suggested alterations to stability criteria for passenger ferries following the Zeebrugge disaster for vessels operated by Caledonian MacBrayne and P and O from and between Scottish ports; and what funds are available for him to support the replacement and modification of ferries serving the Scottish islands.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for marine safety and for consideration of the recommendations of the Zeebrugge inquiry report rest with the Secretary of State for Transport. He is at present consulting all ferry operators, including Caledonian MacBrayne and P and O, on these recommendations, including those involving stability. It will not be clear what the implications are for ferry operators until the results of the consultations have been considered.

A1 (Gladsmuir)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to initiate any improvements to the A1 road at Gladsmuir following the meeting between the acting Under-Secretary and the hon. Member for East Lothian on 8 October.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At the meeting on 8 October I proposed that a scheme of hatching and right-hand turning lanes be provided at Gladsmuir on the A1. Arrangements will be set in hand if this is the wish of local people.

Housing

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) the number of people on housing waiting lists, (b) the number of new public sector houses built, (c) the number of new private sector houses built, (d) the number of new lets and re-lets from waiting lists and (e) the number of people housed under the homeless persons legislation in each district and islands area in 1978-79 and in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Consistent reliable information on the number of people on housing waiting lists and the number of lets and re-lets from waiting lists is not available. The table below shows the numbers of new public and private sector dwellings completed in the years 1978-79 and 1985-86, the latest year for which figures are available, together with the numbers of applicants housed in permanent or temporary accommodation under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 in those years.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list actions taken by the Government to improve the choice of rented accommodation for people in Scotland since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government's commitment to extending choice for those who wish to rent is reflected by action taken to stimulate housing provision in both the public and private sectors. Total gross investment in Scottish public sector housing has risen by 14 per cent. in real terms since 1979. Within this total, capital allocations to local authorities have risen by 82 per cent., or £181 million, over the last three years. Substantially increased resources have been made available to the housing association movement for which over £100 million has been provided in each of the last six years, and where 30,000 new tenancies have been created. Other action taken by the Government includes the introduction of short tenancies, under part IV of the Tenants' Rights Etc (Scotland) Act 1980, to stimulate the supply of accommodation to rent in the private sector. The Local Government Bill at present before Parliament includes provisions to give Scottish local authorities new powers to give financial assistance to private landlords, including housing associations, to encourage the provision of housing for rent.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many households are overcrowded in each district and islands area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on overcrowding under part VII of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 is not available centrally. Limited information on number of persons per room is available from the census 1981 Scotland housing and household report, table 33 "Small area statistics".

n.a.—Not available.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will commission a comprehensive national house condition survey in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no immediate plans to do so but am considering representations from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and others on this subject at the present time.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest numbers for houses in need of urgent repair in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many people are on housing waiting lists in Glasgow Provan, and in the whole of the Greater Glasgow area, respectively;

(2) what is the number of people on housing waiting lists in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Reliable and consistent information on waiting list figures is not available centrally.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what urgent steps he is taking in order substantially to reduce the number of young unemployed in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: We shall continue with our successful policies of keeping inflation down, stimulating enterprise, sustaining competitiveness in industry and strengthening the private sector, which are the key to creating a stronger economy and reducing unemployment. The guarantee of a YTS place means that no one under 18 need be unemployed. The new job training scheme aimed primarily at 18 to 25-year-olds together with the expansion of places available under the enterprise allowance scheme (to 9,500 places in Scotland in 1987-88) and the assistance to employers through the new workers scheme will all help young people into employment. While unemployment among young people remains too high the number of unemployed claimants under 25 in Scotland has fallen substantially since the beginning of the year.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what urgent steps he is taking substantially to reduce the total number of unemployed people in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: We shall continue with our successful policies of keeping inflation down, stimulating enterprise, sustaining competitiveness in industry and strengthening the private sector, which are the key to creating a stronger economy and reducing unemployment. The wide range of the Manpower Services Commission's training programmes will provide over 50,000 adult training opportunities in Scotland this year to enable many people to retrain in the skills needed today. In addition some 30,000 people in Scotland are currently gaining useful work experience in the community programme and 9,500 people will have the opportunity this year to join the enterprise allowance scheme for unemployed people setting up their own businesses. Since January 1987 unemployment in Scotland has fallen by almost 48,000.

Local Authority Facilities

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what new funds he is making available to Scottish local authorities in order to tackle the problems of street lighting and home safety, in particular for elderly people, lack of entertaining and sporting facilities, and other similar deficiencies.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 23 July my right hon. Friend announced provision for local authority current expenditure in 1988-89. This is £3,640 million, 4 per cent. above local authorities' budgets in 1987-88. There is ample scope within this generous figure for authorities to choose their own priorities for expenditure, including the services mentioned by the hon. Member.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what are the most recent statistics for people in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in Scotland paid for by public funds;

(2) how many people are at present in bed-and-breakfast accommodation paid by public funds in Glasgow, Provan and in the whole of the Greater Glasgow area, respectively.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no overall figures for the number of persons in bed-and-breakfast accommodation paid out of public funds. However, it is estimated that the number of households placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation under The Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 at 30 June 1987 for Scotland was approximately 400. The comparable Glasgow district figure was 124.

Information held centrally does not identify areas other than at district council level or their aggregates.

Rating Reform

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest assessment of the impact on voter registration of the implementation of the poll tax in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no such assessment. The implementation of the community charge system is a quite separate process from electoral registration and should have no adverse impact on it.

Hospital Staff

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the number of full-time nurses serving in hospitals in the Clydesdale area for each year since 1974;

(2) what was the number of full-time doctors serving in hospitals in the Clydesdale area for each year since 1974.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally on a constituency basis.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many elderly people have been in National Health Service residential homes in Clydesdale since 1974;

(2) how many elderly people have been in National Health Service residential homes in Scotland for each year since 1974.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no National Health Service residential homes for the elderly.

Retirement

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated number of people coming into retirement in the whole of Scotland in 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Registrar General estimates that the number of people reaching pensionable age in Scotland in each of the years specified will be in the range 51,000 to 52,000.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated number of people coming into retirement in the Clydesdale area in 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Registrar General estimates that the number of people reaching pensionable age in Clydesdale in each of the years specified will be about 550.

Forestry Rangers

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of forestry rangers employed by the Forestry Commission at each grade in Scotland for each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the following table:

Year (as at 1 April)	Senior Ranger (Grade 1)	Senior Ranger (Grade 2)	Ranger (Grade 1)	Ranger (Grade 2)	Trainee Ranger	Totals
1983	102	37	15	9	3	166
1984	105	31	18	5	3	162
1985	109	30	12	3	2	156
1986	115	26	3	4	3	151
1987	116	24	1	3	1	145

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the pay scales of forestry rangers working for the Forestry Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton Following a recent review of the terms and conditions of all forestry workers, including rangers, the Forestry Commission will shortly be seeking to negotiate a revised pay structure with the trade unions concerned.

Red Deer Stalkers

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers of red deer stalkers employed by the Forestry Commission at each grade, in Scotland, for each of the last five years, and the pay scale for each grade.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton The Commission does not employ persons to act solely as deer stalkers. Some forestry rangers carry out deer stalking as part of their duties.

Andrew Marshall

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to appeal against the findings of Sheriff James R. Smith in the case of the Procurator Fiscal v. Andrew Marshall; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The question of an appeal against the decision of a sheriff in a criminal case is not one for the Secretary of State for Scotland. The procurator fiscal in whose name the proceedings were raised has, however, marked an appeal against the sheriff's decision and the matter will, accordingly, come before the High Court of Justiciary shortly. In the circumstances any further statement would be quite inappropriate.

Macaulay Land Use Research Institute

Mr. Buchanan-Smith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in establishing the new Macaulay land use research institute in Aberdeen, particularly with regard to its physical location on one site in Aberdeen.

Mr. Rifkind: The new research institute came into being on 1 April 1987. A board of governors under the chairmanship of Professor Ian Cunningham CBE has been established, and a director, Professor T J Maxwell appointed. The board has given further consideration to the question of where in Aberdeen the new institute should be located, and have decided, following consultation with my Department, that location at Craigiebuckler, rather than at Bucksburn, would be preferable, and that further detailed planning on the feasibility of this should be pursued. It also considers that development at this site should be accompanied by further developments at Glensaugh and Hartwood research stations. I have agreed that the board should proceed to develop its plans on the basis it has outlined.

Mental Health

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many current occupants of Her Majesty's prisons in Scotland have ever been admitted to National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units with a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychoses;

(2) how many people were admitted to Her Majesty's prisons in Scotland who had previously been discharged from mental illness hospitals and units after a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychoses in each of the last five years; and how many were recidivists.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not readily available in the form requested. The number of inmates in Scottish penal establishments diagnosed as suffering from psychoses in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	Number
1982	88
1983	32
1984	56
1985	62
1986	63

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many community psychiatric nurses there have been in Scotland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not at present collected centrally. Arrangements are being made to do so as part of a more general development of manpower and personnel information systems in health boards.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give a detailed list of hospital wards serving the Clydesdale area since 1974 which have closed due to shortage of funds;

(2) how many hospital wards serving the Clydesdale area were closed for each year since 1974;

(3) if he will give a detailed list of hospital wards in Scotland which closed due to shortage of equipment, for each year since 1974;

(4) if he will give a detailed list of hospital wards serving the Clydesdale area since 1974, and the detailed reasons for closure in each case.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 26 October to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray).

ENVIRONMENT

Ozone Layer

89. Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the list of the scientific organisations and individual scientists he has consulted or is consulting with regard to the problems posed by the damage inflicted to the ozone layer.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has established, jointly with the Meteorological Office, the stratospheric ozone review group, to advise on the effect of man-made pollutants on the ozone layer. Its members are:

Dr. J. Pyle (University of Cambridge)—Chair
Dr. R. Jones, Dr. A. O'Neill (Meteorological Office)
Dr. J. Farman (British Antarctic Survey)
Dr. H. Roscoe (University of Oxford)
Dr. L. Gray (Rutherford Appleton Laboratory)
Dr. S. Penkett (University of East Anglia)
Dr. R. Cox (Harwell Laboratory)
Dr. G. Jenkins (Department of the Environment)

Their first report — "Stratospheric Ozone", Her Majesty's Stationery Office — was published in August this year and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he or his colleagues in the European Community or other European countries have held consultations aimed at a joint response to the problems which certain industrial and chemical activities cause to the ozone layer;

(2) whether Her Majesty's Government are preparing a joint governmental response to the serious problems caused by damage to the ozone layer.

Mr. Moynihan: The United Kingdom, the European Community and seven other member states have signed the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer. The remaining member states expect to sign by the end of the year. We are already consulting producing and using industries on how to put the provisions of the protocol into practice. In due course the Environment Council will consider those aspects which have to be implemented at Community level. At a meeting of European Environment Ministers on 25 October my noble Friend Lord Belstead suggested wider consultations between the Community and EFTA countries, and in particular closer cooperation on the protocol's provisions for regular scientific review.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what scientific advice he has received about delays in the adoption of the measures needed in order to avoid further destruction of the ozone layer.

Mr. Moynihan: The assessments in the report of the stratospheric ozone review group show that, according to our current knowledge, the stringency and timetable of the measures agreed in the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer will be adequate to avoid any significant depletion of the global ozone layer. We are keeping in close touch with scientific developments and, as provided in the protocol, will keep the adequacy of the measures under review.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he is giving to British industries which produce aerosol and other similar chemicals about the damage inflicted to the ozone layer of our planet by such products.

Mr. Moynihan: Concern about the ozone layer is well known to industries in the United Kingdom producing and using chlorofluorocarbons — (CFCs) — and halons, chemicals which have the potential to damage the ozone layer. My Department kept in close touch with them during negotiation of the recently agreed Montreal protocol and we are now consulting them on its implementation. ICI is represented as an observer on the stratospheric ozone research group which will be watching developments closely with a view to producing a second report next year. Discussions were also held at a recent seminar organised by the Chemical Manufacturers Association in Edinburgh to review the subject of the antarctic ozone hole and related matters.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his assessment of the outcome of the meeting recently held in Canada about the problems created by the ozone layer.

Mr. Moynihan: It is the Government's view that the agreement at the diplomatic conference in Montreal on 16 September of a protocol to control production and consumption of ozone layer depleting substances is a significant environmental achievement.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had talks regarding extra funding to research departments of universities on matters related to aerosols and similar products and about their impact on the ozone layer.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department is funding a programme of research into stratospheric ozone, including the effects of aerosols propellants at the following establishments:

Harwell Laboratory (laboratory Kinetics)
University of Cambridge (Computer Modelling)
University of Oxford (Balloon Measurements)
British Antartic Survey (Antarctic Ozone)
National Physical Laboratory (Instrument Development)
Inscon (Monitoring Chlorofluorocarbons)

In addition, there are substantial research programmes run by the Meteorological Office and Science and Engineering Research Council, with which we keep in close touch.

Rate Support Grant Settlement

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the date for making the announcement of details in respect of the rate support grant settlement for 1988-89.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend issued a consultation paper on 27 October setting out details of his proposals for the 1988-89 rate support grant settlement in England.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Ridley: I propose to charge a fee of £10 for subject access by members of the public. There is no current intention to charge the Department's own staff seeking access to personal data held about them as employees.

My Department — including PSA and the Crown Suppliers—has 13 register entries, each of which covers several separate systems. In the unlikely event of a data subject requesting access to all entries, the total cost would be £130.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new companies opened up in enterprise zones throughout the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Trippier: The numbers of incoming firms to the enterprise zones in the United Kingdom and, among those, the numbers of new start-ups are contained in the table[1]:

	All incoming firms	New start-ups
June 1981–May 1982	295	165
June 1982–May 1983	474	281
June 1983–September 1984	45	[2]—
October 1984–December 1985[3]	506	[2]—

[1] The information from 1981 to May 1983 has been derived from the publication "Monitoring Enterprise Zones, Year Three Report" by Roger Tym and Partners 1984. From June 1983 the data was collected from the publications "Enterprise Zone Information 1983-84" and "Enterprise Zone Information 1984-85", both by the Department of the Environment. There were differences between the methods used. Thus the changes between 1981-83 and 1983-85 may be due in part to differences in definition.

[2] Data not available.

[3] The data for Belfast and Londonderry Enterprise Zones extends to September 1985.

Figures for later years will be available shortly with the publication of "An Evaluation of the Enterprise Zone Experiment" and "Enterprise Zone Information 1985-86".

Rating Reform

Mr. John Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what further consideration he has given to the implementation of the proposed poll tax.

Mr. Howard: I have given, and continue to give, a high priority to this issue.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest assessment of the effect on the rate of electoral registration of his proposal for a poll tax.

Mr. Howard: The basis for compiling the electoral register in England and Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. I understand that he has no proposals for changing the date for electoral registration.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 22 October, Official Report, column 866, he will set out the information he has about the number of domestic properties in each local authority in the rateable value bands listed in the answer.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed the available information in the Library.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the studies leading to the Green Paper Cmnd. 9714 "Paying for Local Government" which are referred to in the final paragraph of the ministerial foreword.

Mr. Howard: No. The conclusions arising out of the studies are contained in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government"—Cmnd. 9714.

Mr. Blunkett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total cost to date of government initiatives to promote the community charge; and if he will also supply specific figures for the cost of (a) the tours by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) and by the Minister of State, the hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe, (Mr. Howard) respectively, (b) the production of the booklet entitled "Paying for Local Government" and (c) the production of a video by the same name.

Mr. Howard: Since the publication of our Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" in January 1986, successive Ministers have taken the usual steps to ensure that Parliament, the media and all those affected, including local businessmen and the general public, are informed about the detail of the three-part package of reforms. It is not possible to put specific figures to the costs involved.

The three particular information exercises mentioned by the hon. Member all address the detail of the Government's proposals for local government finance as a whole, rather than focusing on the community charge.

(a) The total cost of the regional visits made by my hon. Friend and myself, when we held discussions with leaders and officers of 20 local authorities as well as 11 meetings with local businessmen, was some £9,200, which includes the cost of back-ground panels explaining the three-part package. Some of the visits took place in association with other Government business.

(b) Production and printing 100,000 copies of the booklet cost £16,200.

(c) Fifty copies of the video were produced at a cost of £15,000.

Sand and Gravel

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against refusal to allow sand and gravel extraction operations have been made over the past eight years; and how many of those appeals have been allowed by him and his predecessors.

Mr. Trippier: Information is available only in respect of cases decided by the Secretary of State. Of the 63 sand and gravel appeals determined between 1 October 1980 and 30 September 1987, 25 were allowed.

Falconry

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of falconry licences issued during each of the last five years, giving the categories and numbers of prey species involved; and whether details are collected by his Department of the numbers of prey finally taken.

Mr. Moynihan: Details of the number of falconry licences issued in the past five years and of the prey species involved are set out in the table. All licensees are required to submit returns of numbers of prey taken.

Sewage

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will detail resources needed to bring up to the required standards the sewage systems in the whole of the United Kingdom;

(2) what plans he has to tackle the crisis in British sewage systems in the event of privatisation of water authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: The regional water authorities are spending enough on the renewal and replacement of their sewerage and other assets to maintain the integrity of these systems and to improve the performance and quality of their services. In 1986-87 their capital expenditure on sewerage and sewage treatment and disposal was £465 million, 25 per cent. more than in 1980-81 in volume terms.

Water services in other parts of the United Kingdom are a matter for the Secretaries of State concerned.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take urgent steps in order to make urban development corporations accountable to the local communities and their elected local authorities in matters related to green areas, shopping, transport and educational facilities and to environmental requirements.

Mr. Trippier: No. The UDCs are appointed by the Secretary of State and are accountable through him to Parliament. They seek to work closely with local authorities and are required to consult local authorities about the exercise of UDC powers.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures are in his view needed in order to avoid speculation in the housing sector, in the event of the creation of further urban development corporations.

Mr. Trippier: None.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many of the occupants of the homes built by the London Docklands development corporation were previously residents in that area;

(2) how many families previously resident in the London docklands and with an annual income of £9,000 or less have been able to acquire new homes made available by the London Docklands development corporation;

(3) how many new homes have been built by the London Docklands development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: A total of 6,928 new homes were completed within the LDDC's area between July 1981 and 31 March 1987. None was built by or for the corporation itself. Of 4,210 homes built on corporation-owned land, 3,263 were for owner occupation. Of these 1,490—46 per cent.—were sold to individuals previously resident in one of the three docklands boroughs.

No information is available about the previous residence of tenants of homes provided on LDDC land or of owners of homes built on non-LDDC sites. No income data is available relating to occupants of new homes in docklands.

Rents

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the estimates for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991 of the increased cost of housing benefits which will result from his proposals to end the present protection on rent prices in the private sector.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our deregulation proposals will apply only to tenancies granted after the legislation comes into effect. The rights of existing tenants in respect of both rent and security, will not be affected.

Any estimate of the effects of the proposals on housing benefit payments would at this stage be purely speculative.

Low-cost Houses

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many low-cost houses are at present needed in order to extend private home ownership to low income families.

Mr. Waldegrave: Not all low-income families would wish to try to buy a house on mortgage and many would have insufficient means to do so, even on low-cost home ownership terms. There is, therefore, no point in attempting to estimate how many low-cost houses are needed to enable all low-income families to buy.

Water (Privatisation)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the European countries where the national water resources have been privatised.

Mr. Moynihan: A number of countries involve private companies in water supply services either directly or through franchise arrangements. In France 62 per cent. of the population receives water from private companies.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific steps he is taking for the protection of the health of British people in the event of privatisation of water authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: The legislation giving effect to our proposals for the restructuring and privatisation of the water authorities in England and Wales will clarify and strengthen the legal basis for drinking water quality standards. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and local authorities will continue to have monitoring roles in this area. The National Rivers Authority will be responsible for granting consents for discharges to rivers, estuaries and coastal waters, including the discharge of effluent from the sewage treatment works of the privatised utilities.

Drinking Water

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will give a detailed response to the European Community report which found that drinking water in Britain is not up to the standards required.

Mr. Moynihan: The European Commission has queried some aspects of the implementation of the EC drinking water directive in the United Kingdom. The Government are examining the queries and will be replying to the Commission shortly.

Development Corporations

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what relative priority is accorded to (a) the commercial interests of development, and (b) the needs of the local community in deciding the policies of a development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: It is for the UDCs to decide how to regenerate their areas. In doing so, they will have in mind the need to strike a balance between commercial interests and the needs of the local community.

Housing (Consultations)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in tackling the housing crisis in Britain, he will make it his policy to consult fully and regularly with local authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is already my practice to do so.

Bed and Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest statistics for people in bed and breakfast accommodation in the United Kingdom, paid by public funds.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are no overall figures of the number of people in bed and breakfast accommodation paid for by public funds. However, there were an estimated 11,300 households in Great Britain, who were being accommodated in bed and breakfast at the end of June 1987 by local authorities under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Acts. In almost all of these cases at least part of the costs will have been met from public funds.

National Coal Board (Tenants)

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what protection he will give to the tenants of National Coal Board houses once such houses are sold to private owners.

Mr. Waldegrave: Tenants of British Coal who are transferred to private landlords will continue to have the full protection of rent, landlord and tenant and housing legislation. They will enjoy the same security of tenure, the right to a registered rent, and continue to have protection against the harassment and illegal eviction. New landlords will have repairing obligations under the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985 and the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987. Existing tenants will continue to enjoy protection in respect of rents and security when our proposals for reform of the rent legislation are implemented.

Storm Damage

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans there are to give assistance to private householders to remove fallen trees following the recent hurricane.

Mr. Moynihan: Removal of fallen trees is financially a matter for the owners of those trees. My right hon. Friend has already issued advice to householders on tree removal and the case of damaged trees. The Task Force, Trees, of the Countryside Commission will be considering what further advice to offer.

Mr. Blunkett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's latest available estimate as to the cost to local authorities of making good storm damage consequent upon the gales of 15 and 16 October; what amount of grant will be lost to local authorities as a result of their paying up to a penny rate on repair; and how this sum breaks down between the individual affected authorities.

Mr. Chope: The Department has asked local authorities to give initial estimates of the costs of dealing with the storm damage by Friday 30 October.

Prudent local authorities will have budgeted for their likely level of grant after taking account of contingencies. They therefore should not suffer additional grant losses as a result of having to meet emergency-related costs up to the threshold of the Bellwin scheme.

County Hall, London

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on what grounds he disagreed with the inspectors view that the advantage of retaining the main building of County Hall for local government activities was an overriding consideration.

Mr. Chope: The grounds are set out in the decision letter issued on 20 October, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigation are being pursued by his Department on the listed building implications for the development of County Hall as a hotel.

Mr. Chope: None. These are matters for the London residuary body, as the owners of County Hall.

London City Airport

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if any inquiries have been made in his Department for the use of London City airport by any aircraft other than the Dash-7.

Mr. Chope: No.

Parkinson and Woolaway Houses

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of Parkinson and Woolaway houses in private ownership he now expects to be repurchased by local authorities on the grounds that the cost of repair would exceed the value of the repaired house.

Mrs. Roe: Local authorities have reported some 800 Woolaway and 1,000 Parkinson dwellings in private ownership. It is not possible to forecast reliably the proportion likely to be repurchased by authorities under the housing defects legislation, but we would expect the majority to be repaired. We are currently considering whether the Act's rules concerning repurchase as against repair can be made more flexible.

Brixham Harbour (Development)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he chose not to call in the recent planning application for a housing development and marina at Brixham harbour, Devon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Because I considered that it did not meet the criteria for doing so, which are set out in my Department's circular 2/81.

Peterborough Development Corporation

Mr. Quentin Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the date on which Peterborough development corporation is to be wound up.

Mrs. Roe: On 11 June 1986 my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) announced that 30 September 1988 had been set as the target wind up date for the corporation. Consultations under section 41 of the New Towns Act 1981 with Cambridgeshire county and Peterborough city councils have been undertaken, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have considered the responses received. Having taken these into account, my right hon. Friend confirms his intention to wind up Peterborough development corporation on 30 September 1988. The necessary order will be made next year.

Local Government Act 1985

Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what the latest information returned by London boroughs and metropolitan districts under section 56 of the Local Government Act 1985 shows.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has today placed the information relating to September 1986, December 1986 and March 1987 in the Library of the House. The remaining information for June 1987, March 1988 and March 1989 will be placed in the Library when it becomes available.

I announced in February that some 6,300 posts had been saved immediately on abolition. The residuary bodies employed nearly 4,500 staff in June 1986. They are making good progress towards the early completion of these tasks and their staff had fallen by 600 by March 1987.

The information returned under section 56 shows that the number of staff engaged on functions inherited from the abolished councils rose by nearly 1,200 between June 1986 and March 1987.

The estimates include all staff reported as taken on by successor councils to discharge their inherited functions, whether as an immediate consequence of abolition or subsequently. It is evident that some successor councils have not taken full advantage of the opportunity created by abolition for the streamlining of services and the elimination of duplication. Such councils remain accountable to their electorates for failing to pass on to ratepayers the real benefits in cash savings and improved services which abolition has achieved.

Barnacle Geese

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the removal of barnacle geese from the EEC protected birds list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have not received any representations to remove the barnacle goose from the species listed on annex 1 to the Council directive 79/409/EEC on the conservation of wild birds.

ENERGY

Elderly Persons (Home Heating)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Energy what advice his Department makes available to elderly people to try to ensure cost-effective heating of their homes.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department's energy efficiency office produces a range of publications which provide information to householders, including the elderly, on the cost-effective energy efficiency measures which they can take to improve their homes. Advice is also available to the public on the free Monergy hotline telephone service number 0800-234-800. In addition, the office supports the community insulation projects which provide a free or low-cost insulation service and advice for elderly and other householders on low incomes.

BNF Sellafield

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list each occasion since April 1986 on which a Minister in his Department had made a statement encouraging members of the public to visit British Nuclear Fuels Sellafield nuclear complex.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 24 July 1987 at column 519.

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply on 24 July, Official Report, column 517, on how many occasions and for what length of time Euratom inspectors have been present at British Nuclear Fuels plc Sellafield nuclear site since March 1986.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have nothing to add to my reply of 24 July, at column 517.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South, (Mr. Mullin) Official Report, 24 July, column 517, whether plutonium from Calder Hall and Chapel Cross Military Magnox reactors is kept segregated from safeguarded plutonium stocks in a separate building.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 24 July at column 517.

Mr. Riddick asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is now in a position to publish further information on plutonium in line with recommendation 13(b) of the Sizewell report.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In the light of discussions between my Department, the AEA, BNFL and the generating boards, I have decided to publish information concerning the production of plutonium from United Kingdom civil reactors on an annual basis from 1986-87 onwards. Work on collating the information is in hand and we will publish it as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Pollution

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he will take to the conference next month of Environmental Ministers from all North sea states to (i) limit industrial discharges into the marine environment, (ii) stop all sea dumping and incineration, (iii) phase out the discharging through pipelines of heavy metals, radio-nuclides organochlorines and other chemicals known to affect the food chain and (iv) test for more chemicals than Her Majesty's Government presently do; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I am giving detailed consideration to the issues that will be considered in London later this month at the second international conference on the protection of the North sea, including some of those mentioned by the hon. Member. I cannot prejudge the United Kingdom's final negotiating position at the conference nor predict what the outcome will be.

Rating Reform

Mr. Mans asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what transition arrangements will be made when the community charge is introduced in 1990.

Mr. Howard: The Government are considering their proposals for transitional arrangements in the light of recent representations.

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the charitable status of manses will be maintained under his proposed community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: When the community charge is fully in force, no domestic property will pay rates. The question of charitable status will not therefore arise.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the reply of 26 October, Official Report, columns 37-38, he will give a source for the sample survey data on which the projections in the answers on regional gainers and losers in respect of the poll tax are based.

Mr. Howard: The information is taken from the family expenditure surveys for 1981 to 1984 inclusive.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the titles of papers on the sea disposal of nuclear wastes submitted by his Department to the London dumping convention in October 1987; and if he will place copies of all such reports in the Library.

Mr. Moynihan: In common with other contracting parties to the London dumping convention, the United Kingdom submitted to the October 1987 meeting a response to a questionnaire on nuclear matters framed at the 1986 convention meeting. A copy of this questionnaire and the United Kingdom response have been placed in the Library. The response refers to a number of documents, including the "Report of the Independent Review of Disposal of Radioactive Waste in the North East Atlantic" (the Holliday report, 1984), and the "Assessment of Best Practicable Environmental Options (BPEOs) for Management of Low and Intermediate Level Solid Radioactive Waste" (DOE, 1986). Both of these documents are already in the Library.

Water Authorities

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Environment if he will list the water authorities engaging senior management staff on performance related contracts in the financial year 1986-87; what was the number of personnel involved; and what was the average bonus paid out in each water authority area for the financial year 1986-87.

Mr Moynihan: This information is not held centrally.

British Coal Houses

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Housing Corporation regarding the purchase of British Coal houses.

Mrs. Roe: On 30 September my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning met representatives of British Coal and the Housing Corporation to discuss the progress of negotiations between British Coal and the housing associations interested in purchasing certain blocks of British Coal houses in Yorkshire and Nottinghamshire. I understand that these negotiations are continuing.

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make additional finance available to enable housing associations to purchase British Coal houses.

Mrs. Roe: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Storm Damage

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what categories of buildings owned by county councils and district councils are not eligible for financial assistance for their repair following the recent hurricane; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Buildings suffering damage which is insurable under normal building insurance policies would not qualify under the scheme of special financial assistance to local authorities announced by my right hon. Friend on 21 October.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Development Policy

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for overseas development policy of the decisions taken at the latest meetings of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

Mr. Chris Patten: Britain's aid policy, particularly on major issues such as developing-coutry debt and structural adjustment, is entirely consistent with decisions taken at recent IMF-IBRD meeting.

Third World

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans his Department has for supporting education, specifically for women, in the Third world.

Mr. Chris Patten: About £140 million a year is provided from the aid programme for supporting education. A substantial poportion is spent on education within developing countries and benefits both sexes.

Some £50 million of the total is currently spent on training in Britain. We are exploring the reasons for the low number of nominations of women or training awards and are making a major effort to increase the number receiving awards for the 1988-89 academic year and beyond. We also support less formal education specifically for women. Examples include aid for Pakistan's Open University, which is particularly helpful to women who cannot leave home for education, and recruitment of women for training as agricultural extension workers in Nepal.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Reform

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what response he has received from the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation to the consultation paper on the proposals for a national curriculum; and what consideration he proposes to give to it;

(2) what response he has received from the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation to the consultation paper on the proposals for grant-maintained schools, admission of pupils to maintained schools and financial delegation; and what consideration he proposes to give to it.

Mrs. Rumbold: Copies of these responses, along with all responses received other than those from individuals, have been placed in the Library. We are giving very careful consideration to the points which the Royal Association has made.

Inspectors' Reports (Publication Dates)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what date in each of the last six years his Department published Her Majesty's inspectors' report on local education authority provision and the quality of education.

Mrs. Rumbold: The annual expenditure report by Her Majesty's inspectors has been published on the following dates in the last six years:

5 April 1982; 20 July 1983; 6 June 1984;
23 May 1985; 21 May 1986 and 21 July 1987.

WALES

Conductive Education

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a grant to the University of Wales for a five-year evaluation by a research team to assess the effectiveness of conductive education and to monitor how well it transposes from Hungary to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The University of Birmingham will be carrying out research aimed at assessing the effectiveness of conductive education and monitoring how well it transposes from Hungary to the United Kingdom and I see no purpose in a second such project. Both my right hon. Friend and I will be taking an interest in the research and will consider particularly its relevance to children in Wales

Nursing Homes

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of state For Wales if he will provide a detailed breakdown of publicly-funded subsidies to private residential establishments and nursing homes by local authority in Wales for each of the last five years, together with the estimates for 1987.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on Monday 26 October 1987, at columns 25-27. I have also written to him today.

Cash Limits

Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to make any changes to his Department's cash limits in the current year.

Mr. Peter Walker: Yes. The cash limit on class XVII, vote 2 is being increased by £11,251,000 to £66,214,000. This increase relates to the grant-in-aid for the Welsh Development Agency and is necessary to cover the cost to the agency of taking on the residual industrial assets of the Cwmbran development corporation. As a consequence, there will be a corresponding reduction to the cash limit for WO/LA 1 of £11,251,000 to £353,747,000.

The cash limit on class XVII, vote 9 is being increased by £85,000 to £38,785,000. This increase covers the additional cost to the Department arising from the transfer of NHS audit staff from the DHSS. There is a corresponding reduction in the cash limit for class XV, vote 5.

The cash limit on class XVII, vote 10 is being increased by £22,675,000 to £953,289,000. This increase takes account of additional block grant payable in respect of teachers' pay, together with payments and abatements in grant in respect of previous years in the light of out-turn expenditure information. The adjustments to block grant will be subject to the approval of the requisite supplementary rate support grant reports by the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"The Times"

Mr. Warren asked the Attorney-General if he will prosecute The Times newspaper for publishing, on Friday 23 October, details of the Royal Navy nuclear deterrent base facilities in Scotland: and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No. I understand that the release of the material contained in the article in The Times on 23 October was authorised.

PRIME MINISTER

Commonwealth Conference

Mr. Ronnie Campbell asked the Prime Minister what cost to public funds arose as a result of her return from Vancouver to the United Kingdom at the end of the Commonwealth conference.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North West (Mr. Banks) on 22 October, at column 847.

Disabled People

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Prime Minister when Her Majesty's Government propose to implement those sections of the Disabled Persons (Representation Services and Consultation) Act 1986 which offer some assistance for mentally handicapped school leavers, their parents, and carers.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Disabled hopes to make an announcement shortly about the implementation of sections 5 and 6 of the Act.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Armed Robberies

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the percentage of armed robberies for the years 1979 to 1986 which involved unregistered guns;

(2) if he will make a statement on the number of armed robberies for the years 1979 to 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information for England and Wales relates to the number of offences of robbery recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been used and is published annually in table 3.1 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", the latest issue of which, Cm. 233, for 1986, was published on 29 October 1987. In 1986, 2,651 such robberies were recorded, compared with 1,038 in 1979; however, the proportion of all robberies in which firearms were used remained at about 9 per cent. during this period. The police do not record the number of firearms recovered which were shown to have been used in crime, nor the proportion of these which were subsequently found to have been illegally held.

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to transfer Irish prisoners in gaols in England, Scotland and Wales to prisons nearer their homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to extend his policy which enables prisoners in England and Wales to serve sentences in a prison near their family and relatives so that Northern Ireland prisoners on the mainland can be transferred to Northern Ireland prisons to complete their sentences.

Mr. John Patten: Under the Criminal Justice Act 1961 sentences inmates may be transferred at their own application between United Kingdom jurisdictions. In dealing with requests from inmates in England and Wales for transfers to Northern Ireland, the Department, in consultation with the Northern Ireland Office, considers each case on its merits, applying publicly stated criteria covering such matters as the length of the sentence remaining to be served, the inmate's current behaviour, and his or her history and background.

Transfers of sentenced prisoners to the Republic of Ireland will not be possible unless and until the Republic takes powers to hold prisoners sentenced in another jurisdiction.

Applications for transfers from inmates held in Scottish prisons fall to be dealt with by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Exclusion Orders

Mr. Mullin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all those who were the subject of exclusion orders between November 1974 and the present day, giving the date on which the order was made.

Mr. Hurd: No. Statistics on exclusion orders made under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts 1974, 1976 and 1984 are published quaterly in statistical bulletins published by the Home Office. I do not consider it right or fair to the individuals concerned for me to publicise their names without their permission.

Grants

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many section 11 grants he has approved in each of the last five years; how many applications he has refused; and how many are awaiting decision, categorised by (a) Waltham Forest, (b) London and (c) nationally and sub-categorised by whether they relate to (i) social services, (ii) education and (iii) other purposes.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is as follows. It is expressed in terms of numbers of posts applied for.

	1983	1984	1985	1986	[1]1987
Posts approved	1,188	856	898	786	124
Posts refused	[2]—	[2]—	[2]—	723	428

[1] 1 January—23 October

[2] Information not available.

Applications currently under consideration are:

Area	Education	Social Services	Other	Total
Waltham Forest	[1]6	22	2	30
London (including Waltham Forest)	[1]76	60	28	164
England and Wales (including London)	[1]631	223	124	978

[1] An application for posts for part-time staff covering 4,000 hours a year is also under consideration.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he accepts that provision for second generation immigrants with similar problems to first generation immigrants is eligible for section 11 grant approval, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Applications for section 11 grant are considered in accordance with the criteria set out in Home Office circular No. 72/1986. This makes clear that the scheme covers not only those born in another country of the Commonwealth, however long they have resided in the United Kingdom, but also their immediate descendants.

Immigration

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria for refusing entry at British ports to individuals who have obtained valid entry clearance visas; how many have been refused entry on arrival since the introduction of the current system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 13 of the "Statement of Changes in Immigration Rules" (HC 169), laid before Parliament on 9 February 1983.

Since visa requirements are extended to citizens of India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Ghana and Nigeria, the number of such citizens who have been refused entry at Heathrow, Gatwick and Dover while in possession of a valid entry clearance (up to 24 October) is as follows:

	Numbers
India	36
Pakistan	93
Bangladesh	49
Ghana	69
Nigeria	79
Total	326

Civil Defence

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what would be the cost of current proposals for nuclear civil defence (i) London and (ii) nationally, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Civil defence planning under the Civil Defence Act 1948 relates to measures to mitigate the effect of any hostile attack by a foreign power, whatever form it may take. Separate costings for nuclear aspects are not made.

In London, the principal responsibility for civil defence planning rests with the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority, whose preliminary estimate for civil defence expenditure as a whole for 1987-88 was £1·5 million. Total programmed expenditure on civil defence in the United Kingdom during 1987-88 is £105 million.

Fire Risk Categorisation Reviews

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he gives in respect of fire risk categorisation reviews.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Home Office fire service circular No. 4/1985, of which a copy is in the Library, commended to fire authorities the report on fire cover standards of the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council. The report recommended that fire authorities should review the categorisation of fire risk in their area and provided guidance on how the fire risk of areas should be assessed. Fire authorities were advised that Her Majesty's inspectors of fire services would be ready to offer advice on application of the guidance, and such advice has been given.

DNA Tests

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is proposed that DNA tests will be available for all seeking right of entry to Britain on the Indian subcontinent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: DNA tests have been commercially available since 1 June from Cellmark Diagnostics. It is open to any person who commissions such as test to submit the results in support of his immigration application, if he so chooses. In addition, the Government are carrying out a trial using the technique in a small sample of cases, so that the general acceptability and feasibility of its use in immigration work can be assessed. The trial is expected to be completed before the end of the year.

Hacking

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals to make hacking — unauthorised entry into a computer or communications system—a criminal offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Law Commission is examining the adequacy of the existing criminal law to cover misuse of computers. We will consider whether legislation is needed in the light of its advice.

Nationality

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been refused naturalisation under the British Nationality Act 1981 on the basis of either unsound mind or not being of good character.

Mr. Renton: Between July 1986 and September 1987, three applications for naturalisation as British citizens have been recorded as refused on the ground that the applicant was of unsound mind. Earlier figures are not readily available.

Between January 1983 and September 1987, 1,244 applications for naturalisation as British citizens have been recorded as refused on the ground that the applicant was not of good character.

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the steps being taken to inform people who are currently in prison, long-stay hospitals and homes for the disabled of their rights to register as British citizens under the provisions of the British Nationality Act 1981 before the deadline of 31 December.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question by the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 21 October at column 779.

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many women are eligible for registration as British citizens on grounds of marriage under the provisions of the British Nationality Act 1981;

(2) how many people living in Britain are eligible to register as British citizens by 31 December under the provisions of the British Nationality Act 1981;

(3) how many people have registered to date as British citizens under the provisions of the British Nationality Act 1981; and what proportion of the total number eligible this represents;

(4) how many people living in the London borough of Lewisham are eligible to register as British citizens by 31 December under the provisions of the British Nationality Act 1981.

Mr. Renton: The number of people entitled to apply before 31 December 1987 for registration under sections 7 and 8 of the British Nationality Act 1981 cannot be accurately estimated.

From 1983 to 1986 inclusive, some 112,000 adults have been registered as entitled on grounds of marriage to a British citizen or of long residence in the United Kingdom. Provisional figures for 1987 show there to have been some 24,000 registrations on this basis up to the end of September.

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases have people been refused registration as a British citizen under the provisions of the British Nationality Act 1981; and on what grounds.

Mr. Renton: Figures relating to the refusal of British citizenship alone are not readily available but between January 1983 and September 1987, 7,485 registration applications for British citizenship, British Overseas citizenship and British subject status were refused on the grounds either that the Secretary of State was not satisfied that the applicants had met the statutory requirements or that he did not think it appropriate to exercise his discretion to register them.

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to ensure that people who are eligible to register as British citizens under the British Nationality Act 1981 are fully informed of this right in time to make their application by the deadline of 31 December.

Mr. Renton: A free information leaflet "Your Right to British Citizenship", was published in 1986. It is available in seven languages. At the same time, a poster drawing attention to the leaflet was published and has been widely distributed to advisory and community organisations. We followed this up this year by publicising the leaflet in selected local and ethnic minority newspapers in March and September in an advertisement drawing attention to the 31 December 1987 deadline.

Offensive Weapons

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those religions and religious occasions which he proposes will be exempt from his proposed changes in the law relating to the carrying of offensive weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We propose in the Criminal Justice Bill to make it an offence for a person to have a bladed or sharply pointed article in a public place without good reason or lawful authority. It will be a defence for a person charged with the offence to prove that he has such an article with him for religious reasons.

Schools-Police (Relations)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the report from the working party of teachers and police representatives on ways of improving relations between schools and the police; what response he has made; and if he will make it his policy that the working party's recommendations should be made available to local police forces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has received a copy of the report, which we regard as a welcome demonstration of co-operation between teachers and the police over police involvement in schools. We are still considering a response to the report together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Prison Kitchens

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the number of random hygiene inspections of prison kitchens made by Government environmental health officers in each of the last five years, indicating the percentage of total prison kitchens which each figure represents;

(2) if he will list the number of occasions in each of the last five years when, as a result of random hygiene inspections, kitchen standards were found to be below the standard elsewhere applied through the Food Hygiene (General) Regulation 1970; and which prisons were involved.

Mr. John Patten: The arrangement for environmental health officers from the Department of Health and Social Security to conduct random hygiene inspections of prison kitchens was introduced only last year. A five-year profile cannot yet be provided.

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Government will take steps to secure the removal of Crown immunity of prison kitchens from inspection by local authority environmental health officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The prison service has its own internal arrangements for inspecting prison kitchens and there are no plans to make far-reaching changes. Inspections are considered to be of a standard equivalent to those that would otherwise be carried out by local authority environmental health officers. The arrangements do not preclude calling on local authority environmental health officers for advice, if necessary.

Life Sentences

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently serving life sentences in England for offences other than murder; and how many of these are of Irish nationality.

Mr. John Patten: The recording of nationality on the records held centrally for citizens of the Republic of Ireland is not completely reliable because it depends upon the information provided by the prisoner. On 31 August, 520 prisoners were serving life sentences for offences other than murder in prison department establishments in England and Wales, of whom about 15 were recorded as citizens of or born in the Republic of Ireland.

Trial Statistics

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide statistics showing the respective proportions of black, Asian and white defendants acquitted during 1985 and 1986 by courts in England and Wales following remands in custody until trial.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is given in the following table. However, the figures are to an unknown extent too low because for a substantial proportion of the untried prisoners the outcome of the court proceeding was not known—10 per cent. for the 1985 data and 19 per cent. for the 1986 data. Further analysis by ethnic origin of remand prisoners was published in "The ethnic origins of prisoners: the prison population on 30 June 1985 and persons received, July 1984-March 1985." (Table 16 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 17/86.)

Proportion of persons initially received into Prison Department establishments in England and Wales as untried prisoners in 1985 and 1986 who were known to have been found not guilty or not proceeded against: by ethnic origin

Young Persons (Analgesics)

Mr. Michael J. Martin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the incidence of young people, from Scotland in particular, providing false information to doctors in order to obtain analgesics for non-medical purposes; what action the police take in such cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that it is not possible to assess how many young Scots are obtaining prescriptions in this way. The Metropolitan Police are working closely with their colleagues in other forces and with the Drugs Inspectorate on this problem; and they will take appropriate action when circumstances allow. The situation is being carefully monitored.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy that all future disclosures of personal data from his Department's computer in Newcastle to the security services be covered by a certificate signed by him under section 27 of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

I can confirm that the requirements of section 27 of the Data Protection Act will be followed in respect of any request for personal data for the purpose of safeguarding national security.

CIVIL SERVICE

Public Bodies (Women's Representation)

Miss Emma Nicholson asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many women are member of public bodies, the members of which are appointed by Ministers; and what proportion these women represent of the total membership of those bodies.

Mr. Luce: Figures for appointments by Ministers to public bodies as of 1 April 1986 are to be found in "Public Bodies 1986" published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. Some 8,923 of these appointments were women, representing 19 per cent. of the total. Figures for 1987 will be published later this year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC (Exports)

Mr. John Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how the growth in British exports to the EEC compares with the growth of British trade over the past 10 years.

Mr. Butcher: In the 12 months ended September 1987, the value of United Kingdom exports to the other countries of the European Community was three and a quarter times that in the same period in 1976-77; United Kingdom exports worldwide were two and a half times their value 10 years ago.

Spirituous Beverages

Mr. Sims asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further action he has taken to secure the removal of discrimination in rates of value added tax levied on spirituous beverages in Greece since 1 January.

Mr. Maude: Following strong representations by the Government about the discriminatory VAT rates in Greece, the European Commission has commenced infraction proceedings against the Greek Government in the European Court.

Mr. Sims asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps have been taken to seek the removal of discrimination in rates of alcohol tax and value-added tax, as well as in alcohol tax deferment provision, applicable to spirituous beverages in Portugal since 1 January 1986.

Mr. Maude: We have made several representations to Portugal and to the European Commission about the elements in the Portuguese tax regime which discriminate againt imported products. As a result, significant improvements have been made in the Portuguese legislation, which removed the main tax discrimination against imported spirits. We are continuing to press the European Commission for further action.

Trade Marks

Mr. Mills asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many trade mark registrations were filed in 1979, 1983 and 1987.

Mr. Maude: The number of applications for the registration of trade marks filed in the years mentioned were as follows:

	Number
1979	19,328
1983	22,100
1987	25,778

The figure for 1987 relates to the period to the end of September and includes applications for the registration of service marks.

Patents

Mr. Mills asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many patent registrations were filed in 1979, 1983 and 1987.

Mr. Maude: The number of patent applications filed at the United Kingdom Patent Office in the years mentioned were as follows:

	Number
1979	44,666
1983	34,691
1987	23,014

In addition, applications designating the United Kingdom were filed at the European Patent Office as follows:

	Number
1979	10,402
1983	28,602
1987	28,014

The figures for 1987 relate to the period to the end of September.

Alvey Programme

Mr. Warren asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the reasons for the delay in announcing the successor programme to the Alvey programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The report's recommendations are being considered as part of our review of the priorities, in the field of research and development, for the Department of Trade and Industry. I will make a statement as soon as possible.

Rover Group

Mr. Anthony Coombs asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on Rover Group's plans to dispose of its interests in Ashok Leyland and Ennore Foundries.

Mr. Hind asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on Rover Group's plans to dispose of its interest in Ashok Leyland and Ennore Foundries.

Mr. Atkins: The Rover Group announced on 26 October that it had agreed to sell Land Rover Leyland

International Holdings, the holding company for its Indian interests, to the Hinduja/Iveco Group. These interests comprise 39·04 per cent. of the commercial vehicle manufacturer Ashok Leyland Ltd. and 59·09 per cent. of Ennore Foundries Ltd.

Following the completion of the sale of Land Rover Leyland International Holdings the Government will accept no further responsibility for ensuring that the obligations of Land Rover Leyland International Holdings, Ashok Leyland and Ennore Foundries are met.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the marginal cost of paying child benefit to all those families who currently pay income tax but whose income tax paid is less than the amount of child benefit received; and what is the outgoing on child benefit which is paid to families not liable for income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: For 1987-88 it is estimated that the difference between child benefit received and income tax paid by those families who pay income tax and whose income tax is less than the amount of child benefit they receive is about £200 million. Families who are not liable to income tax are estimated to receive about £1,200 million in child benefit in 1987-88.

Women Employees

Miss Emma Nicholson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many women now occupy posts in (a) the administrative grade of the Civil Service and (b) the executive grade of the Civil Service; and what proportions these represent of the total number of civil servants employed in those higher grades.

Mr. Brooke: The information as at 1 January 1987 is as follows:

Grade level[1]	Number of women	Percentage
Open Structure	1,800	8
Executive	55,300	27
Administrative[2]	182,900	66

[1] Broadly equivalent grades based on a comparison of salary scales.

[2] Formerly known as Clerical grades.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. John Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate in how many cases mortgage tax relief is given to more than one individual in respect of the same mortgage.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I assume that my hon. Friend is interested in the number of unmarried sharers who receive mortgage interest relief on a shared loan. Although firm information is not available, it is tentatively estimated that about 500,000 single people are involved in multiple borrower mortgages in respect of around 250,000 properties.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give the average mortgage interest tax relief per person in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in each year from 1977 to 1987, repriced for inflation;

(2) if he will give the average motgage interest tax relief per person in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in each year from 1977 to 1987.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates for the years 1977-78 to 1982-83 have been derived from the result of the survey of personal incomes and are given in the table.

Following the introduction of MIRAS in April 1983, estimates of the average value of mortgage interest tax relief in Scotland cannot be extracted from Inland Revenue records. Estimates of the amounts attributable to Scotland can be derived from the family expenditure survey (FES) but, as the sample size for the FES is relatively small, it is not possible to derive a robust estimate of the trend in the average amount received by mortgagors in Scotland after 1982-83. For 1983-84 onwards, the table therefore shows figures only for mortgagors in the whole of the United Kingdom.

FES data for 1983 to 1985 suggest that average mortgage interest tax relief per mortgagor in Scotland was about 15 per cent. higher than the average for the United Kingdom.

Personal Income

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage increase in real personal disposable income during the years 1957 to 1964, 1964 to 1970, 1970 to 1974, 1974 to 1979, 1979 to 1983, and 1983 to 1987; and what was the average annual percentage increase for each of these periods.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested is given in the table. Data for 1987 are not yet available so the growth in real personal disposable income for the period 1983-86 is given instead.

	Growth in real personal disposable income per cent.	Average annual growth rate per cent.
1957-1964	30·5	3·9
1964-1970	13·0	2·1

Figures for annual average growth rates for real personal disposable income over time periods from 1948 to 1986 are published in table 15.13 of the 1987 edition of "United Kingdom National Accounts" (the CSO Blue Book).

EMPLOYMENT

Community Programme

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will meet representatives of Leeds city council to discuss the council's managing agency for the community programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I shall be happy to consider a meeting once I am informed of any points of concern about the managing agency which the Leeds city council may have.

Training Commission Managing Agencies

Mr. Alex Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a list of the names and addresses of Training Commission managing agencies.

Mr. Cope: A list of managing agents for the new job training scheme is available in the Library. National lists of managing agents for YTS and the community programme are not currently available. Such lists are being prepared and copies will be placed in the Library in due course.

Manufacturing Industry (Barnsley)

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in manufacturing industries in the Barnsley, East constituency in each year since 1979.

Mr. Cope: The available employee estimates for constituencies are from the September 1981 and 1984 censuses of employment. An industry breakdown is not available for the earlier year, but the latest estimates indicate that there were 3,500 employees employed in manufacturing industries in the Barnsley, East constituency at September 1984. The figure excludes the self-employed.

Note: The constituency is defined in terms of ward boundaries as at 1981.

Coal Industry (Injuries)

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report the number and nature of major injuries in the mining industry for each of the last five years.

Mr. Cope: The number of major accidents reported to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Mines and Quarries occurring in the mining industry is as follows:

Year	All Coal Mines	Mines Other than Coal
1982	865	17
1983	824	31
1984-85[1]	378	29
1985-86	732	32
1986-87	982	23

[1] Covers a 15-month period (January 1984 to March 1985) during which time there was a major industrial dispute. It is not comparable with previous calendar year data.

The introduction of the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations on 1 April 1986 widened the coverage of the major injury category. Major injury accident figures from 1986-87 are therefore not directly comparable with those for earlier years.

It is not possible to list the nature of these injuries without incurring disproportionate cost.

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many participants there are on the job training scheme;

(2) how many participants have successfully completed a job training scheme course; and what qualifications they received.

Mr. Cope: By 25 September 1987, 22,111 people were receiving training on the new job training scheme.

As the scheme was launched nationally only last April, information on the number of participants who have successfully completed a job training scheme course and what qualifications they received is not yet available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress to date of the Government's safety review of pesticides.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Since the early 1960s the Advisory Committee on Pesticides has carried out major reviews of pesticides or classes of pesticides. Some of these are described in the 1984 and 1985 reports of the committee, copies of which are in the Library of the House. This work continues and will be summarised in the committee's further annual reports.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what staff and financial resources are presently devoted to the Government's safety review of pesticides.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is not possible to give accurate figures without disproportionate cost. Some 50 scientists are currently employed by my Department and the Health and Safety Executive on the evaluation of pesticides including those under review. In addition, members of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides and its scientific sub-committee also contribute to reviews.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Benefits

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the saving in a full year due to the fact that family credit and housing benefit will be means-tested rather than income tested; whether this figure will represent a real reduction in the total value of privately owned capital of the same amount; and how many persons will be affected.

Mr. Portillo: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to the introduction of a capital cut-off of £6,000, and a notional tariff income for those with capital of between £3,000 and £6,000, into the family credit and reformed housing benefit schemes next April. We estimate that approximately £80 million will be saved, almost entirely from housing benefit as a result of treating capital in this way rather than taking into account the actual income it generates as happens at present.

What effect the changes have on the total value of privately owned capital will depend on the individual behaviour of those affected. On the basis of information about income from capital in recent family expenditure surveys, which may not be wholly reliable, we estimate that some 2 million households will be affected in some way by the changes. This figure, which again mainly represents housing benefit recipients, includes those with smaller amounts of capital which will, of course, be treated more favourably under the new rules.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures showing the change in the number of families with children that would be entitled to family credit and to housing benefit in 1988-89 if child benefit (a) is increased in line with current earnings, (b) is increased in line with the Lawson-Rooker-Wise formula, or (c) remains at its present figure.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that (a) about 10,000 more families with children would be entitled to family credit than would have been the case if child benefit was increased in line with the movement in the retail prices index in the year ending September 1987, and (b) over 15,000 more families with children would be entitled to family credit than would have been the case if child benefit was increased in line with the increase in earnings over the same period.

In housing benefit, it is estimated that very few more families with children would be entitled to housing benefit than if child benefit was increased under either of the other two formulae.

Income Support

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last had discussions with disabled people's organisations about the likely effects upon disabled people of the proposed income support scheme; which organisations were involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I discussed the income support scheme with representatives of the disability organisations on 30 September and have subsequently replied to their alternative proposals. I have placed a copy of my letter in the Library.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the total annual cost of income support (a) in total and (b) minus the addition covering the 20 per cent. allocation for rates.

Mr. Scott: On the basis of the rates announced to the House by my right hon. Friend in his statement on 27 October at columns 179-81, the estimated cost of income support in 1988-89 would be £8,570 million. Excluding the 20 per cent. contribution to rates, the figure would be £8,290 million.

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the total cost of the increases in income support to compensate for the exclusion of 20 per cent. of rates from housing benefit on the figures in his statement of 27 October.

Mr. Scott: On the basis of the rates announced in my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 27 October at columns 179-81, the total cost (including the cost of additional payments of income support, housing benefit and family credit) would be £372 million.

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out in the Official Report the calculation by which he estimated that £1·30 and £1 represent the average new liability to rates of claimants of income support; and what is his estimate of how many claimants face a liability (a) above that average and (b) below that average.

Mr. Scott: The figures are based on statistical samples of the rates liability of existing claimants of supplementary benefit uprated to reflect the expected liability of income support claimants in 1988-89. We estimate that slightly under half of income support claimants will face a liability above their relevant average and slightly more than half will face a liability below that average.

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what compensation through income support to single mothers under 18 years he has provided for the exclusion of 20 per cent. of rates from housing benefit.

Mr. Scott: The proposed rates of benefit for all claimants under the age of 18 contain no element to compensate them for their 20 per cent. contribution to rates in recognition of the fact that the vast majority of this age group on income support have no rates liability. However, under the transitional protection arrangements, all supplementary benefit claimants receiving a rate rebate in respect of week commencing 4 April 1988 will, for the purpose of any benefit income to be protected, have included in that income, for transitional protection purposes from 11 April 1988, either £1, if a single claimant under age 25, or £1·30 in other cases (including single mothers under 18).

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table for rates of income support showing (a) the illustrative figures in the annex to the 1985 White Paper, (b) the illustrative figures uprated by the retail prices index since then, (c) the illustrative figures uprated by the Rossi index, (d) the amount by client group provided to compensate for the exclusion of 20 per cent. of rates from housing benefit and (e) the provisional figures for income support in his statement of 27 October.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is as follows:

Privatisation

Mr. Allen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he has any plans to put further National Health Service services out to tender; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We encourage health authorities to give careful consideration to any possibility of securing greater cost-effectiveness in the provision of National Health Service services, noting that competitive tendering has already generated annual savings of over £100 million for redeployment within the service.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the patient-orientated tasks being considered for privatisation and which were referred to in documents considered at a meeting of district general managers at the North-West regional health authority on 24 September.

Mr. Newton: I understand the occasion was a routine private meeting of North Western health authority general managers at which, among other items, the scope for developing the region's successful competitive tendering programme was discussed. The existing programme has already released some £8·5 million for direct patient services. The hon. Member may wish to pursue his detailed inquiries with the chairman of the North Western regional health authority.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the department equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act and (f) what action has been taken to facilitate job share, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Portillo: The departmental equal opportunities officer (DEOO) is the focal point for equal opportunities awareness within the Department. Central guidance is routed through him and all personnel are made aware of the importance of equal opportunities policy and practice through departmental circulars and instructions.

(a) It is not possible accurately to measure the amount of time spent by the DEOO on equal opportunities work. However, the DEOO has a full-time deputy and support staff.

(b) Other duties carried out by the DEOO are personnel and administration and these often overlap with equal opportunities work.

(c) There is no specific budget for equal opportunities work. However, a budget of approximately £8,000 was set aside for the current financial year to cover travel, subsistence and printing. In addition, those responsible for implementing equal opportunities work, for example personnel and training officers, make provision for this in their budgets.

(d) Meetings of DEOOs are held at least once a year. In addition, ad hoc meetings, seminars and working groups are held throughout the year on particular subjects.

(e) No specific guidance is issued. A programme of action for women, "Equal Opportunities for Women in the Civil Service", has been agreed with trade unions and has led to running a course, "Women in Management".

(f) Job share and part-time working are encouraged and publicised in departmental circulars and leaflets. Maternity leave of up to one year is routinely allowed and paternity leave is currently under consideration by Treasury. Sympathetic consideration is also given to the provision of special leave to cope with domestic difficulties such as sickness and school holidays, and this facility is publicised to staff in manuals and instructions.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement outlining the details of the scheme in the current year to govern the payment of severe weather allowances.

Mr. Scott: The current scheme for exceptionally cold weather payments is set out in the Supplementary Benefits (Single Payments) Amendment Regulations 1986 [SI 1986 No. 1961].

For this winter we plan to make it easier for claimants to get help during repeat periods of exceptionally cold weather. We intend to provide that, where a successful claim is made in respect of one period of exceptionally cold weather, that claim will remain valid in respect of subsequent periods of cold weather during the winter. At the same time we will be correcting a number of technical errors in the description of areas covered by particular weather stations. This will not change the links between local offices and weather stations themselves. Regulations to make these changes will be laid before the House shortly.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much was spent in each health region in each of the last five years on the care and treatment of patients suffering from schizophrenia; and what percentage each figure was of total expenditure on (a) mental and (b) all health services;

(2) what is the current annual cost overall per patient to the National Health Service in each health region of the care and treatment of patients with a main diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend the information he seeks as it is not collected; health authorities do not analyse mental illness costs by diagnosis.

Whipps Cross Hospital

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will agree to fund phases 2 and 3 of the proposed new development at Whipps Cross hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We gave approval in principle in June of this year to phase 1 of the redevelopment of Whipps Cross hospital including a new out-patient department, operating theatres and wards. The scheme will receive 35 per cent. capital support from the Department under arrangements to assist in the extra cost to health authorities of providing teaching facilities. The Department will consider submissions about future phases of the redevelopment when they are received from the health authorities concerned.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he has given to general practitioners about whom they should refer to Family Planning Clinics for the provision of contraceptive appliances free of charge on prescription, to help restrict the spread of AIDS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The "Handbook of Contraceptive Practice", issued by the Department to all general practitioners and other doctors working in family planning, refers to the value of condoms in reducing the risk of sexually transmitted disease; and to their availability from a range of sources including family planning clinics. The handbook is currently being revised by the Royal Colleges of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and the Royal College of General Practitioners to include specific references to AIDS.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services over what period of time the number of known AIDS sufferers in England and Wales is currently doubling.

Mr. Newton: At the present time, the number of cases of AIDS reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre from England and Wales is doubling every 10 months.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much his Department's single payments budget is underspent proportionally in the current finance year in each of the previous five years.

Mr. Portillo: There is no budget for expenditure on single payments which are determined in accordance with regulations.

Data Access (Fees)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Portillo: There is no charge for information held on social security records or for information held on health and personal social services records. In respect of health and personal social services information held by regional and district health authorities (boards in Scotland) and social services' departments of local authorities, it has been left to each authority to determine whether or not to charge for access. The policy for the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys is to give subject access free of charge. The Department has 33 registered entries and the OPCS 42.

Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the capital limits for supplementary pensions for each year since 1980, in cash terms and in real terms, using 1980 as a base year and the change in the retail price index over that period.

Mr. Portillo: The information is provided in the following tables.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are currently receiving retirement pension payments by means of automatic credit transfer to a bank or building society account.

Mr. Portillo: About 1·25 million. About 31 per cent. of newly retiring pensioners choose this method of payment.

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1973 the value of the basic state pension (a) at 1987 prices and (b) as a percentage of average male earnings.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table. Column (c) shows the basic retirement pension for a couple as a percentage of average net earnings for a married male manual worker without children.

July 1986	61·95	64·67	47·8
April 1987	63·25	63·25	45·7

[1] There is a small discontinuity between the figures for November 1982 and November 1983 caused by a change in the method of calculation of average earnings.

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the rates for the basic state pension and other long-term national insurance benfits at April 1988 if the uprating formula of the 1975 Act had been applied in every year since 1979.

Mr. Scott: The Social Security Act 1975 required pensions and other long-term benefits to be increased by the higher of the increase in either prices or earnings, but did not provide a formula for the period over which the increase was to be measured or to take effect, nor any requirement to measure the increase either historically or on a forecast basis. Moreover, the Secretary of State was given freedom to estimate the changes in prices and earnings as he saw fit. In view of the discretion inherent in the original wording of the 1975 Act, which was interpreted in different ways during the 1970s, it is not possible to give an accurate estimate of what pensions would be in April 1988 on this basis.

If retirement pension had however been increased in line with the movement of earnings between November 1978 and September 1986, the end of the uprating period for the April 1987 uprating, a single person's retirement pension would have been £43·70 in April 1987 and a couple's pension £69·90. It is not yet possible to provide comparable figures for April 1988.

Pensioners (Standing Charges)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to assist pensioners with the payment of standing charges on domestic services.

Mr. Portillo: The normal weekly rates of supplementary benefit provide for normal day-to-day living expenses, including standing charges on domestic services. We believe it is right to concentrate available resources on those most in need, through the supplementary benefit scheme.

"The Unkindest Cut of All"

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will be taking any action in regard to the report entitled, "The Unkindest Cut of All", from the disabilities study unit, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I am grateful to the right hon. Member for sending me a copy of this report. I have not yet had a chance to study it. When I have done so, I will write to him.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Michael J. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the incidence of doctors prescribing analgesics to drug addicts for non-medical purposes; what steps his Department takes to control such practices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Department has no information which would enable an assessment to be made of the extent of any such prescribing.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has powers under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 to prohibit, by direction, a practitioner whom he finds has been prescribing controlled drugs in an irresponsible manner from prescribing some or all controlled drugs.

Any case of alleged irresponsible prescribing can be referred to the General Medical Council which can take action against a doctor whom it judges to have acted unethically.

The Department's regional medical officers are able to offer advice to general practitioners within the NHS and can alert them if there is evidence that a particular drug is being misused.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost savings arising from the abolition of the existing supplementary benefit scheme, taking account of the effect of the statutory uprating which was due this November.

Mr. Scott: In public expenditure terms, we estimate that expenditure on income support and the social fund (excluding payments for maternity and funeral expenses) will be £290 million higher in 1988-89 than if the existing supplementary benefits scheme had continued with rates increased in the usual way. The statutory date for upratings was fixed at April by the Social Security Act 1986.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the reduction in expenditure in a full year from increasing the rent taper of housing benefit from 60 per cent. to 65 per cent.; and how many claimants will lose entitlement to housing benefit as a result.

Mr. Portillo: The reduction in expenditure in a full year from increasing the housing benefit taper from 60 to 65 per cent. is estimated at £46 million. We now estimate that some 60,000 households will lose all entitlement to rent rebates or allowances as a result of this change.

Child Benefit

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what level of child benefit would be necessary at April 1988 to maintain its real value as at April 1979; and what is the reduction in expenditure in a full year achieved by the failure to maintain that value.

Mr. Scott: Until the April 1988 retail prices index is available, the rate of child benefit needed to maintain its April 1979 value will not be known. If its April 1979 value was expressed in April 1987 terms and then uprated by 4·2 per cent. (the latest available RPI movement, between September 1986 and September 1987), the level of child benefit would be £7·80 which would represent a total additional net cost of around £220 million a year.

Kidney Stones (Treatment)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why there are no shock-wave machines for the treatment of patients with kidney stones in the west midlands region.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 21 October 1987, c 808]: Shock-wave treatment (lithotripsy) for patients with kidney stones is a relatively new technique. We have made it clear that we expect it to develop eventually into a regional service but it is for health authorities to decide whether, and if so when, to install a machine which is likely to cost between £500,000 and £1 million, depending on the equipment chosen. Several are already in operation or will shortly become operational elsewhere in the country and it is open to clinicians in the west midlands to refer patients to centres where the treatment is available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Aged and Disabled People

Mr. Jim Marshall asked the Seretary of State for Northern Ireland how many ACE funded posts have been created to assist the aged or disabled in their own homes.

Mr. Viggers: Information is not available in the form requested. However, in 1986-87 1200 ACE workers were employed in projects to assist the elderly, the physically disabled and the mentally ill in institutions, in community provision and in their own homes.

Electricity Disconnections

Mr. Jim Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many domestic electricity disconnections were carried out in the years 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 due to indebtedness.

Mr. Viggers: Precise figures of domestic disconnections are not readily available, but the total numbers of disconnections for debt effected during the years concerned were 1148, 1599, 1858 and 2619, respectively. These figures include a very small number of commercial disconnections.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Jim Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action the Government are taking to assure the future of shipbuilding operations at Harland and Wolff.

Mr. Viggers: The future of shipbuilding operations at Harland and Wolff is dependent on the company's ability to secure orders on a commercial basis. Government financial support for merchant ship orders is available within the framework of the EC VI directive on aid to shipbuilding.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how much was spent by his Department in each of the last five years on the care and treatment of patients suffering from schizophrenia; and, what percentage each figure was of total expenditure of (a) mental and (b) all health services;

(2) what is the current annual cost overall per patient to his Department's health and social security budget of the care and treatment of patients with a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychoses.

Mr. Needham: The expenditure of the health and social services boards is not analysed in such a way as would enable the information requested to be separately identified.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each of the last five years in Northern Ireland how many people discharged from mental illness hospitals, after a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychoses, having been proved vulnerable boarders, subsequently became voluntary boarders.

Mr. Needham: This information is not available.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidance his Department gives to mental illness hospitals on the retention of patients whose condition is unlikely to improve; and what is the current policy of each hospital in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: No guidance is given. The treatment of patients in psychiatric hospitals is a matter of clinical judgment.

Residential Care

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many residential homes have been registered and opened in the following areas since 1983 (i) Down unit of management, (ii) Newry and Mourne unit of management (County Down only) and (iii) Banbridge unit of management (in the electoral wards of Bannside, Katesbridge, Dromore South, Dromore North, Quilly, Garran and Croob); what are the capital and running costs of such homes; and how they compare with health board operated accommodation; and how many people are in (a) private residential care and (b) health board residential care.

Mr. Needham: Since 1983, a total of 14 private residential homes providing 161 places have been newly registered by health and social services boards in the areas specified. The capital and running costs of private residential homes are not known and comparison with similar costs for statutory homes is not therefore possible. Information on the numbers of residents of private homes is not held but it is known that registered private residential homes (including voluntary homes) provide a total of 266 places in these areas. On 31 December 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, 344 people were accommodated in nine statutory residential homes which provide a total of 374 places in the same areas.

MacBride Principles

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what has been the cost to public funds to date of briefing lobbyists in the United States of America on Her Majesty's Government's attitude to the campaign on the MacBride principles;

(2) what has been the cost to public funds to date of briefing politicans in the United States of America on Her Majesty's Government's attitude to the campaign on the MacBride principles;

(3) what has been the cost to date to the British embassy in Washington and British consulates in the United States of America of Her Majesty's Government's opposition to the campaign on the MacBride principles in the United States of America;

(4) what has been the cost to date to his Department and Her Majesty's Government's campaign of opposition to the campaign on the MacBride principles in the United Kingdom and the United States of America;

(5) how many officials have been involved to date in work directly related to the campaign on the MacBride principles in the United Kingdom and the United States of America;

(6) what have been the legal costs to date of the Government's opposition to the campaign on the MacBride principles in the United Kingdom and the United States of America;

(7) what has been the cost to date to the Department of Economic Development in Northern Ireland of the Government's opposition to the campaign on the MacBride principles in the United Kingdom and the United States of America.

Mr. Viggers: The explanation of Government policy and achievements in the field of fair employment in Northern Ireland is one of a range of closely related tasks, shared among the Northern Ireland Office, Northern Ireland Departments and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, including diplomatic posts overseas. It would be disproportionately expensive to seek to isolate the costs, and other details, of this one specific aspect of their activities.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many documents have been published in the United States in relation to Her Majesty's Government's campaign on the MacBride principles.

Mr. Viggers: None. However a number of publications reflecting the development of Government policy in relation to fair employment in Northern Ireland are available in the United States, including the following:

Guide to the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1976
Equality of Opportunity in Employment in Northern Ireland: Future Strategy Options: A Consultative Paper
Fair treatment for All
Religious Equality of Opportunity in Employment: Guide to Effective Practice.

Captain Hayward

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether Captain Hayward, currently in prison in Sweden, was attached to a Special Air Service unit involved in the murder of three unarmed youths in Strabane; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have been asked to reply.

It is not our policy to discuss the activities of special forces or to confirm or deny whether any individual is or was attached to the special forces.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Asia

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government support Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's proposals to keep Asia free from outside military presences and make the Indian ocean a zone of peace: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We support in principle the creation of an Indian ocean zone of peace, and regularly participate in meetings of the United Nations ad hoc committee on the Indian ocean in New York. The security situation in the region, for example in the Gulf and Afghanistan, prevents the establishment of such a zone at this stage.

Rarotonga Treaty

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will explain Her Majesty's Government's attitude to the 1985 Rarotonga treaty which aims to restrict the testing, deployment or use of nuclear weapons in the south Pacific; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: As my hon. Friend the then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) told my hon. Friend the Member for York (Mr. Gregory) on 20 March, we give careful consideration to the protocols to the south Pacific nuclear-free zone treaty (the treaty of Rarotonga). Having taken full account of our security interests in the region and more widely, the views of our allies and the regional states themselves, the texts of the treaty and protocols and the announced policy of the Soviet Union, we have concluded that it would not serve our national interest to become party to the protocols to the treaty.

At the same time, we remain ready as a matter of policy to respect the intentions of the regional states as set out in protocol I. In other words, we have no intention of testing, manufacturing or basing nuclear weapons on Pitcairn, the only territory under our jurisdiction within the area covered by the treaty.

Further, with respect to proctocol II, we reaffirm the British undertaking given in 1978 to non-nuclear weapon states which are parties to the NPT or equivalent commitments, not to use nuclear weapons against such states except in the case of an attack upon the United Kingdom, its dependent territories, its armed forces or its allies by such a state in association or alliance with a nuclear weapon state.

Third, in respect of protocol III, we note that we have no intention of conducting nuclear tests in the south Pacific.

Mr. Mordechai Vanunu

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has made to the Israeli Government about the kidnap and trial of Mr. Mordechai Vanunu; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In reply to our representations after Mr. Vanunu's disappearance the Israeli Government gave a formal assurance that Mr. Vanunu left this country of his own volition. We have no reason to doubt this assurance. We have made no representations about the conduct of the trial.

Israel (Nuclear Missiles)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement indicating Her Majesty's Government's view on the development by the Israeli Government of its Jericho II nuclear missiles.

Mr. Mellor: We saw press reports in July of the test-firing of a Jericho II missile by Israel. We are concerned about the introduction of any new long-range missile into the middle east, particularly if it is nuclear capable.

South Africa

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement indicating Her Majesty's Government's view on the production of a nuclear device by the South African Government.

Mr. Mellor: We have no evidence of the production of a nuclear device by the South African Government. We would view the production of such a device by any non-nuclear weapon state with very grave concern. We have consistently urged the South African Government to accede to the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. We welcome the recent South African statement to the International Atomic Energy Agency that they are now willing to negotiate accession to the treaty. This would oblige them to place all their nuclear facilities and materials under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards.

Deportations (Israel)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has made to the Israeli authorities about that Government's deportation of Arabs and Palestinians; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have repeatedly made clear to the Israeli authorities our view that deportation of residents from the Occupied Territories in contrary to international law. On 28 December 1986, the Foreign Ministers of the Twelve issued a statment in protest at the deportation of Mr. Akram Haniyya.

Nuclear Power Station (Daya Bay)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the construction errors in the nuclear power station being built at Daya bay, 30 miles from city centre in Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: Construction work on the second layer of the unit 1 reactor raft of the Daya bay plant was suspended in mid-September following the discovery that a number of reinforcement bars for the first and lowest of the five concrete layers (316 out of a planned total of over 14,500) had inadvertently been omitted. The joint venture company responsible for the project is considering remedial action to ensure that the finished construction will still comply with all the safety requirements of the original design. We are satisfied that all the parties involved attach the utmost importance to considerations of safety, and to the need to make certain that these are not compromised.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Eggar: In common with other Government Departments, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (including the Overseas Development Administration) does not propose to charge its employees (including successful job applicants and former civil servants) in its capacity as employer for routine and reasonable access to any personal record. In addition, the Overseas Development Administration has decided to extend this subject access to all personal records maintained on current and retired technical co-operation officers, current and retired supplemented staff, overseas pensioners and prospective employees under bilateral and multilateral technical co-operation schemes. There will, however, be a charge of £10 each in respect of all other applications from members of the public. This fee has been set in accordance with Treasury guidelines on recovery of costs.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has eight register entries, and the Overseas Development Administration one register entry.

The cost to any members of the public of a single search on each register entry where they might appear as subjects would be £80.

Heysel Stadium Disturbance (Trial)

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth affairs what arrangements have been made to observe the trial of the Heysel stadium defendants in Brussels.

Mr. Eggar: Staff resources permitting, an official from Her Majesty's embassy in Brussels will attend any trial as an observer.

Malta

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has yet met the Maltese Minister for Foreign Affairs; what progress has been made in strengthening United Kingdom economical, commercial, cultural and educational links with Malta; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend and I held talks with Dr. Tabone, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Malta, on 23 October. They covered all aspects of our bilateral relations, including areas mentioned by my hon. Friend. We are considering how best we can strengthen those links.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present eight meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for November.

The Development Council on 9 November will consider draft guidelines on the following subjects: the evaluation of aid; issues relating to women in development; the need to take account of environmental factors in aid; and the Community's aid programme to Asia and Latin America in 1988. The Council will discuss the economic situation in sub-Saharan Africa and will consider a Commission proposal for establishing a special Community programme to assist certain highly indebted, low-income countries in that region. The Council will also consider reports by the Commission on the following subjects: the implementation of the Community's programme to combat AIDS in developing countries; the co-financing by the Community of projects with the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD); and the food aid framework regulation.

The Energy Council will meet on 13 November and will consider the Council's recommendation on new and renewable sources of energy including the possible establishment of a special group on commercial aspects, draft Council conclusions on environmental costs borne by the refining industry, and a proposed directive on the energy efficiency of buildings. Ministers will also consider the outlook for greater efficiency in the use of electricity in the Community.

The Economic and Finance Council meets on 16 November. The Council may discuss Commission proposals on the next stages of capital market liberalisation; the 7th VAT directive on the treatment of second hand goods; the 18th VAT directive which abolishes certain transitional derogations from the provisions of the Community's basic VAT law (the 6th VAT directive); the Commission's package of tax proposals to remove fiscal barriers to trade in the Community and the UCITS collective investment schemes directive.

The Agriculture Council is expected to meet on 16-17 November to discuss agricultural stabilisers, income aids and pre-pensions. Internal market items may also be discussed.

The Foreign Affairs Council meets on 23-24 November. Discussions will include European Community-United States trade relations; the possibility of a trade and economic co-operation agreement between the EC and the Gulf Co-operation Council; the future financing of the Community, and GATT article XXIV.6 negotiations with Japan.

The Fisheries Council is expected to meet on 24 November to discuss amendments to market regulations, guide prices and a report on third-country fisheries relations.

The Internal Market Council on 30 November will discuss a number of measures relevant to the completion of the single market.

The Research Council will meet on 30 November. The provisional agenda anticipates the formal adoption of three individual research programmes, namely RACE, (R&D in advanced communications technologies in Europe) (1987-1991), a research and development programme in the field of science and technology for development (1987-1990) and a programme of research and development in the field of medical and public health (1987-1989). It is also expected that the Council will approve a common position on the following research programme proposals: ESPRIT II; the proposed revisions to both the BRITE programme (industrial technologies) and the radiation protection programme. Discussion on the proposals for the next multi-annual programme of the Community's joint research centre (JRC) will also take place and there may be a first discussion on the fusion programme. A proposal for a Council regulation in the health care field of information technology and telecommunications will also be discussed.

Foreign Compensation

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in implementing the Foreign Compensation (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) (Distribution) Order.

Mr. Eggar: Excellent progress is being made. Of the 4,582 bond claims submitted to the Foreign Compensation Commission 3,265 (71·3 per cent.) had already been registered by 9 October; 304 claims (6·6 per cent.) had been withdrawn by the claimants; 204 claims (4·5 per cent.) had been refused registration because the claims did not meet the terms of the order and 810 claims (17·7 per cent.) remained to be registered (or rejected). Of the 2,308 property claims, 1,667 claims had been matched against claims on the register of Russian claims; 641 claims are currently unmatched, although some of these could turn out to be valid.

As a result my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has directed that the Foreign Compensation Commission should on 30 October make an interim payment of 10 per cent. of the value assigned to a bond to all persons whose claim in respect of a bond had been registered on 9 October and that a like payment should be made as soon as possible thereafter to those whose claims in respect of bonds were registered after 9 October. This is the most substantial interim payment ever made by the Foreign Compensation Commission.

Evaluation of property claims, where the Commission must exercise its judicial discretion, is more complex. But the Commission is making every effort to expedite the process with the objective of making a final payment to all claimants in 1989.

Bulgaria

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is now the position in respect of bond claims by United Kingdom nationals against the Government of Bulgaria.

Mr. Eggar: The British Government and the Bulgarian Government signed an agreement on 16 September relating to final repurchase of certain bonds of foreign public loans of the Principality of Bulgaria and the Kingdom of Bulgaria held by United Kingdom nationals.

In accordance with the agreement the Bulgarian Government have nominated the National Westminster Bank to repurchase from persons who were United Kingdom nationals on 16 September 1987 the following bonds at the following rates:

Loans	Nominal value of bond	Payment
(a) Foreign Public Loans
6 per cent. State Mortgage Loan 1892	Gold Francs 500	French Francs 35
5 per cent. Bulgarian State Gold Loan 1902	Gold Francs 500	French Francs 35
5 per cent. Bulgarian State Gold Loan 1904	Gold Francs 500	French Francs 35
4½ Bulgarian State Gold Loan 1907	Gold Francs 500	French Francs 35
4½ Bulgarian State Gold Loan 1909	Gold Francs 500	French Francs 35
6½ Bulgarian State Loan 1923	Franch Francs 500	French Francs 35
7 per cent. Settlement Loan 1926 Sterling issue	Pounds Sterling 100	Pounds Sterling 40
US dollar issue	US dollars 500	US dollars 35
7½ Stabilisation Loan 1928 Sterling issue	Pounds Sterling 100	Pounds Sterling 40
US dollar issue	US dollars 500	US dollars 35
French issue	Poincaré Francs 2,500	French Francs 175
(b) Foreign Public Guaranteed Loans
5 per cent. Bulgarian Loan 1895	Gold Francs 500	French Francs 35
5 per cent. Loan Municipality of Sofia 1906	Gold Francs 500	French Francs 35
5 per cent. Loan Municiipality of Varna 1907	Gold Francs 500	French Francs 35
4½ Loan Municpality of Sofia 1910	Gold Francs 500	French Francs 35 and so in proportion for bonds of other denominations.

Copies of the offer and the appropriate form of acceptance may be obtained from the paying agent: National Westminster Bank plc, Stock Office Services, National Westminster House, Station Way, Crawley, West Sussex RH10 1JE.

The offer remains open for acceptance until 15 October 1989.

TRANSPORT

Road Schemes (London)

Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the increased support for London boroughs for minor road schemes since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Support for minor road schemes in London was not itemised separately before the change to the transport supplementary grant system in 1985-86. Since then support for minor works, including urban traffic control, through the grant has increased from £5 million in that year to £10 million in 1986-87 and £16 million in the current financial year.

Motorway Service Areas

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all motorway service areas which give direct access on to local roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All 42 motorway service areas in England are accessed by customers direct from the motorway apart from Aust, Exeter, Ferrybridge, Gordano and South Mimms, which are reached from other roads. Those accessed direct from the motorway, apart from Anderton and Washington, also have rear accesses to local roads for authorised users including service, staff and emergency vehicles.

Traffic Statistics

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will publish the 1987 monthly road traffic statistics to date observed on the A259 between St. Leonards on sea and the county border between East Sussex and Kent, indicating the monitoring points;

(2) if he will publish the 1987 monthly road statistics to date on the A21 trunk road indicating the monitoring points.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An analysis and publication of the results of the 1987 census counts on the A259 and A21 cannot be done until the year's census work is completed.

The results of the 1985 census on a map and the 1986 on computer print-out are available on request.

Buses

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the numbers of bus routes operated by (a) private bus operations and (b) public sector and local authority owned operators running either in whole or in part after 7 pm and which are not subject to any payments from a local authority.

Mr. David Mitchell: The number of registered services not receiving any subsidy from local authorities and operating after 8 pm is as follows:

	Number
PTCs owned by District and Regional Councils	476
PTCs owned by metropolitan PTAs	678
NBC and former NBC subsidiaries	1,301
SBG	370
Private sector	561

Information on evening services is available only for services operating after 8 pm rather than 7 pm.

Fares (VAT)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he next proposes to meet representatives of the Association of County Councils to discuss the implications for public transport policy of value added tax levels on fares.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have no plans to do so.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with British Rail the current options for electrification of the east coast line as between the Wisburyn-Linlithgow-Glasgow line and the Wisburyn-Fauldhouse Shotts-Glasgow line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that British Rail is still assessing whether there is a case for electrifying any possible route from Edinburgh to Glasgow. Meanwhile, it would be inappropriate for me to intervene.

Taxis

Mr. Morley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the number of bankruptcies of taxi firms since the Transport Act 1986.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have not information on this subject, but I am aware that the number of new entrants to the business of taxi operations vastly exceeds withdrawals and bankruptcies.

Air Crash Inquiries

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make it his policy to call, via the United Nations and other international agencies, for all countries and airlines to publish official reports of air crash inquiries where there has been loss of life;

(2) what steps he takes to ascertain the cause of a foreign airline accident which has resulted in the death of a British subject where the country concerned does not publish the result of the inquiry findings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The International Civil Aviation Organisation, under the aegis of the United Nations, recommends to contracting states in its "International Standards and Recommended Practices for Aircraft Accident Investigation" that:

> "In the interests of accident prevention, the state conducting the investigation should publish the Final Report as soon as possible".

On those occasions when the United Kingdom has a special interest in a foreign airline accident by virtue of fatalities to British citizens, and where that state does not publish the results of its investigation, the chief inspector of accidents is able to contact the investigating authority of the state in question to facilitate the availability of information.

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the London borough of Greenwich about the need to improve the standard of service on the Woolwich ferry; and with what result.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is in regular touch with the London borough of Greenwich about the standard of service during the present dispute. We are expecting improvement to come from the implementation of the review of the operation of the ferry now nearing conclusion.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport on how many days since 1 April the Woolwich ferry has been subject to disruption; and what is the estimated number of crossings lost as a result.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Up to 28 October, there has been disruption on 205 days. About 18,100 crossings have been lost.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he receives the consultants final report on the future of Woolwich ferry; and when he intends to discuss these with the London borough of Greenwich.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We received the consultants' final report in July. Officials of the Department and the London borough of Greenwich have discussed the recommendations. I hope to meet councillors in the near future to consider the outcome with them.

East Coast Railway Network

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received any request from British Rail for investment in the improvements of the east coast railway network: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The electrification of the east coast main line between London and Edinburgh is progressing well ahead of schedule. I have received no request from British Rail for further investment.

Glasgow Airport

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to give grants for noise control to all houses affected by the extension of Glasgow airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No, this is a matter for the airport operator taking into account the views of the local authorities and communities surrounding the airport.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether preparatory work has been undertaken at sites in Britain whilst discussions with the United States Government and NATO officials about the construction of underground storage facilities for nuclear weapons has been continuing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No preparatory work of that kind has been undertaken.

Trident

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the National Audit Office's report on the Trident programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. A statement would be inappropriate at this time. The appropriate Ministry of Defence accounting officer will shortly be examined by the Public Accounts Committee on this report. The Committee will report in its turn. The Government will respond to this in due course.

AWACS

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has received any recent evidence that the United States AWACS early warning and control system which Her Majesty's Government are purchasing would be vulnerable to missiles which home in on radar systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: While — like any aircraft — the AWACS system is not invulnerable to attack, I am fully satisfied that it will be highly survivable in performing its operational tasks. Considerable work has been done to develop appropriate tactics to reduce the aircraft's vulnerability. Its radar range is such that it can be positioned in protected airspace and still provide airborne early warning and direct friendly fighters.

Radiation

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are made to monitor radiation levels in areas around where nuclear weapons are kept;

(2) what arrangements have been made to monitor the release of radiation from bases operating microwave radar communications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Routine monitoring of radiation levels is carried out at all locations where nuclear weapons are based and at which microwave communications are operated.

NH-90 Helicopter

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much expenditure Her Majesty's Government incurred in the NH-90 helicopter project, abandoned earlier in the current year.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our commitment to the NH-90 project was limited to a fixed price contract valued at £1·5 million which was the United Kingdom's share of the cost of the feasibility/predefinition study work. The experience and knowledge Westland gained in the study will be of value in other defence programmes.

Merlin Anti-tank Mortar

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department has taken to evaluate the British Aerospace Merlin anti-tank mortar.

Mr. Sainsbury: A limited contract in support of the joint evaluation of the Merlin 81 mm anti-armour mortar bomb was placed with British Aerospace plc (Army weapons division) in July 1987. A series of demonstration firings is planned.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Defence for what purpose a nuclear test was conducted jointly with the United States of America on 16 July.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to disclose the purposes of British underground nuclear tests. This test was required to maintain the effectiveness of our nuclear capabilities.

Jet Pilots (Low-flying Training)

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Royal Air Force fast jet pilots are currently qualified to fly at 100 ft above ground level;

(2) what are the weather minimums for low-flying training below 250 ft in the United Kingdom;

(3) what consideration has been given to establishing operational low flying at 100 ft above ground level as part of the regular continuation training programme for pilots on Royal Air Force fast jet squadrons.

Mr. Freeman: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions since 1977 authorisation has been given to foreign air forces to conduct low-flying training over the United Kingdom at less than 250 ft above ground level; and if he will give for each such occasion the nationality, type and numbers of aircraft involved, the dates the training occurred, the location of the training, the number of sorties flown and the purpose of the training.

Mr. Freeman: No foreign air forces are authorised to fly in the United Kingdom low-flying system at less than 250 ft above ground level.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a map showing the areas in which military jet aircraft are permitted to fly at less than 250 ft above ground level.

Mr. Freeman: I have already described in detail to those hon. Members whose constituencies are involved the locations of the areas in which low-flying training below a level of 250 ft is authorised. The Welsh area consists of the south-west portion of Montgomery, north-west quarter of Brecon and Radnor, north-east corner of Carmarthen and eastern part of Ceredigion and Pembroke north.

Jet Aircraft (Low Flying)

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties at less than 250 ft above ground level were authorised in each year since 1974 in each one of the areas of the United Kingdom available for such flying.

Mr. Freeman: Before 1979 low-flying sorties below 250 ft could be authorised anywhere in the low-flying system by appropriately senior officers. Only as part of the revised United Kingdom low-flying system, introduced in 1979, was the decision taken to confine such flights to three specially designated, sparsely populated areas. The information requested is thus available only from 1979 and refers to movements into low-flying areas rather than sorties, which, on average, consist of about 2·5 movements per sortie.

Number of movements authorised for flying below 250 ft

	Number
1979	787
1980	797
1981	660
1982	238
1983	1,922
1984	1,007
1985	1,153
1986	1,200

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the military low-level training sorties flown over the United Kingdom in each year since 1974 included authorisation to fly at: (a) 200 ft. above ground level and (b) 100 ft above ground level.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of low flying training movements carried out below 250 ft., as a proportion of all-low-flying training movements, for each year since 1979 (when the revised United Kingdom low flying system was introduced) are as follows. Such flights may be authorised down to a minimum level of 100 ft. but records do not distinguish between levels within the 250-100 ft. band. Details of the military low flying training carried out below 250 ft. are not available for the period prior to 1979.

	Per cent.
1979	0·37
1980	0·35
1981	0·24
1982	0·08
1983	0·55
1984	0·31
1985	0·36
1986	0·35

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many days in each year since 1974 low flying in the United Kingdom below 250 ft. was authorised.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is no longer available for the period before 1979, when the revised United Kingdom low-flying system was introduced. Nor could it be provided for all subsequent years without disproportionate effort. In 1986 low flying below 250 ft. was authorised on approximately 113 days.

Devonport and Rosyth Dockyards

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Defence what the arrangements are for meeting the redundancy costs arising from the planned reduction in work forces at Devonport and Rosyth dockyards.

Mr. Sainsbury: Approval for expenditure in the current year to fund the redundancy costs paid by dockyard contractors will be sought in a Winter Supplementary Estimate for class 1, vote 5. Pending approval of this Supplementary Estimate by Parliament, urgent expenditure will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

SCOTLAND

Cancer

Dr. Moonie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide details of all validated deaths from each form of leukaemia and lymphatic cancer in those aged (a) under 21 years and (b) 21 years and over for the years 1972 to 1986 inclusive for the areas within a five mile radius of Rosyth, Hunterston and Dounreay.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not readily available.

Computerised Patient Administration

Dr. Moonie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is satisfied with the progress made so far with the development of a computerised patient administration system by health boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards, and the Common Services Agency's directorate of health service information systems, have been giving priority to this subject. I hope to be in a position to make a statement very soon.

Immunisation

Dr. Moonie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take to improve the uptake of all childhood immunisation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend recognises the importance of childhood immunisation and has encouraged parents by means of regular advertisements and leaflets to have their children immunised. Immunisation is not compulsory and the level of uptake depends on the interest of parents, general practitioners and health visitors.

Health

Dr. Moonie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will consider taking action to ensure that health boards devote an adequate amount of their resources to health promotion.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend allocates resources to health boards and it is for them to use these resources in the best interest of patient care within their respective areas having regard to competing demands. We have made it clear that we regard health education and prevention as an important aspect of the work of health boards and of all professional groups who come into contact with patients.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing, for each year since 1979 (a) the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in the Monklands, West constituency and (b) the number on National Health Service staff, in real terms of full-time equivalents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally on a constituency basis.

Hospitals (Waiting Times)

Dr. Moonie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are waiting for orthopaedic surgery in (a) the Victoria hospital, Kirkcaldy and (b) Bangour hospital, West Lothian.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Provisional figures for 31 March 1987 show that, for in-patient treatment in the speciality of orthopaedics, there were 441 people waiting for admission to the Victoria infirmary, Kirkcaldy, and 106 waiting for admission to Bangour general hospital.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of people unemployed in the Western Isles, by sex, who are (a) under 25 years, (b) between 25 years and 35 years, (c) between 35 and 50 years and (d) over 50 years.

Mr. Lang: The number of unemployed claimants is as follows.

Western Isles constituency
July 1987

Age group	Males	Females	Total
Under 25	307	232	539
25 to 34	262	115	377
35 to 49	450	97	547
50 and over	405	65	470
All ages	1,424	509	1,933

This information is available in the Library.

Mr. Doran asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all closures that have resulted in 25 or more redundancies in the Aberdeen constituency in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information requested cannot be provided since details of closures and redundancies confirmed by individual companies are provided to the Manpower Services Commission in confidence.

Salmonella (Hospitals)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the origin of the recent outbreaks of salmonella poisoning at Law hospital near Lanark and the royal infirmary, Edinburgh.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Between 23 and 24 August two patients from a geriatric ward at Law hospital presenting symptoms of salmonella poisoning were transferred to Monklands district general hospital infectious diseases unit. Two different types of salmonella were identified. Both patients made a complete recovery. On 24 August 11 geriatric patients from the same ward displayed symptoms which suggested food poisoning. They were tested for infection at Law hospital but salmonella was not identified in any of the patients. They remained at Law hospital and recovered well. The ward and hospital kitchens were examined and samples of all meals (which are retained to enable analysis to be undertaken in the event of infection developing) were tested. Despite intensive investigations the sources of the infections could not be traced.

There have been no cases of salmonella poisoning at the royal infirmary, Edinburgh, within the last year.

Firearms

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many shotguns and handguns have been confiscated by the courts in Scotland from persons convicted of firearms offences in the past 10 years; and how the confiscated firearms were disposed of.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Comprehensive information on confiscation and disposal of firearms is not held centrally.

Northern General Hospital (Leith)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the recent fatalities which occurred at Leith's northern general hospital as a result of food poisoning; and if there will be a fatal accident inquiry.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Lothian health board is at present considering the findings of its own investigation into the cause of the outbreak together with the recommendations of a report on the incident prepared by the environmental health department of Edinburgh district council. I shall study both reports and I shall want to be assured that the health board is taking all possible steps to prevent a recurrence. The incident is presently under consideration by the procurator fiscal; a decision whether to hold a fatal accident inquiry rests with my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of those convicted of crimes in Scotland in each of the last five years have ever been admitted to National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units with a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much was spent by his Department in each of the last five years on the care and treatment of patients suffering from schizophrenia; and what percentage each figure was of total expenditure on (a) mental and (b) all health services;

(2) what is the current annual cost overall and per patient to his Department's health and social security budget of the treatment of patients with a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards and local authorities and local authorities are encouraged to give high priority to the provision of services for the mentally ill but it is for these agencies to determine their own spending from their general allocations according to their perception of need. Information about spending on specific forms of mental illness is not available centrally.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much his Department spent on research into schizophrenia in each of the last five years; and what proportion each figure was of expenditure on the health service research programme;

(2) what research projects his Department has landed to test the effectiveness of community care for people suffering from schizophrenic psychosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish home and health department is at present funding two research projects directly related to schizophrenia. Research into schizophrenia is an integral part of more widely based programmes of research into mental disorder and it is not possible to identify separately the total amount of research into schizophrenia alone.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people with a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis were discharged from mental illness hospitals in Scotland in each of the last five years; and how many of them were taken into local authority residential care in the same year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about the diagnosis of patients discharged from hospitals may be obtained from "Scottish Mental Health In-Patient Statistics", which is available in the library. Statistics are not collected centrally on the number of people suffering from specific mental illnesses who are provided with local authority residential care.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds have been specifically earmarked for the care of the mentally ill following the closure of mental hospitals in Scotland in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No mental illness hospital has been closed in Scotland in the last year.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the provision of community care for patients suffering from schizophrenic psychosis discharged from National Health Service mental illness hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend receives representations from time to time on different aspects of providing community care but none of those made recently have related to persons discharged from hospital care provided for specific forms of mental illness. We have consistently made it clear that we are committed to a policy of care in the community for such groups as the mentally ill where such care is appropriate.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many people discharged from hospital following a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis and subsequently taken by the police under section to hospitals in Scotland have been refused admission in each of the last five years;

(2) if he will list for each of the last five years in Scotland how many people discharged from mental illness hospitals after a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis, having been proved vulnerable, homeless, subsequently became voluntary homeless.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance his Department gives to mental illness hospitals on the retention of patients whose condition is unlikely to improve; and what is the current policy of each hospital in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Decisions about the treatment of patients involve issues of clinical judgment, and central guidance would not be appropriate. Information to answer the second part of the question is not held centrally.

Rating Reform

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in East Lothian in the financial year 1989-90 calculated on the basis of (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection and (vii) 70 per cent. collection;

(2) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in East Lothian.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Redundancies

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all closures that have resulted in 25 or more redundancies which have affected people resident in East Lothian in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information requested cannot be provided since details of closures and redundancies confirmed by individual companies are provided to the Manpower Services Commission in confidence.

Prisons

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the quantity and quality of prison accommodation in Scotland and on the availability of non-custodial sentences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The design capacity of Scottish penal establishments is currently 5,600 places, a number of which—including some provided at Shotts this year—are at present temporarily out of use as a result of damage by inmates in recent incidents. The total includes some 2,300 places which have access to night sanitation or integral sanitation. Some 1,900 places were provided in the last 20 years.

Community service and probation are the two main non-custodial disposals available to the courts. Both schemes are managed by the local authority social work departments who receive in respect of community service a specific grant from central Government towards the running costs. Probation costs are included in the rate support grant.

During 1985, 2,982 probation and 2,733 community service orders were made. The Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1987 reduced the minimum period for which a probation order can be made from 12 to six months and enabled a condition requiring an offender to pay compensation to be included in a probation order.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of the population of Scotland is in prison; how that figure compares with that in other European countries; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 20 October the actual population of penal establishments in Scotland was 5,409 (approximately 106 inmates per 100,000 inhabitants in Scotland).

Statistics for average prison population per 100,000 inhabitants for Scotland, England and Wales and European countries which are members of the Council of Europe are given in an article in "Home Office Research and Planning Unit Bulletin No. 23, 1987", a copy of which is available in the Library. This article explains the difficulties of making direct international comparisons because of differences in the legal and administrative systems from which these statistics are derived.

Housing

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses are (a) below the tolerable standard, (b) require comprehensive modernisation, (c) require major repairs and (d) are affected by dampness in the public and private sectors, respectively, in each district and islands area; and if he will estimate the cost of carrying out the necessary repairs and improvements.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the number of dwellings below tolerable standard as at 31 March is submitted annually to the Department. However, not all authorities provide information by type of tenure, and not all 1987 returns have been received. The latest figures available are given in table 1.

Information on dwellings requiring comprehensive modernisation, requiring major repairs, and affected by dampness or condensation is only held centrally for local authority stock. The latest figures available, obtained from housing plan checklists, are given in table 2.

It is for individual housing authorities to decide what measures to take to deal with problems they identify, and to programme expenditure accordingly within the resources available to them.

Pupils (Statistics)

Mr. Doran asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of pupils on school rolls and the pupil-teacher ratio in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in the Aberdeen South constituency for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Aberdeen, South can be obtained from Grampian regional council.

Education Reform

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he will be taking to ensure that the new proposals for the opting-out of schools from local authority control will not discriminate against the children of hourly paid parents in Easterhouse and other deprived areas of Glasgow because the parents cannot afford to take time off work to become school governors.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have made no proposals to allow schools in Scotland to opt out of local authority control. We have proposed that there should in general be a school board for each school, and that the board would have the opportunity to become fully and closely involved in the running of the school. Parents would form a majority of the members and it is obvious that the boards will have to meet at times convenient to their members.

Monofilament Nets

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many monofilament nets have been seized by geographical area, under the Monofilament Banning Order 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since the Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Carriage of Monofilament Gill Nets) (Scotland) Order 1986 came into operation on 31 March 1986 enforcement officers of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland have uplifted and retained four monofilament gill nets. Of these two were in the Clyde area, one in the Isle of Jura area and one in Luce bay.

Rothesay Castle

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received in respect of the future of Rothesay castle; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department has received three representations from one person over the past two years about the condition of Rothesay castle. Work has recently been carried out to deal with water penetration in the great hall, and it is hoped that the consequent improvement in conditions will pave the way for improvements in visitor facilities as circumstances permit.

Common Good Fund (Aberdeen)

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will give a response to representations made by the city of Aberdeen district council at a meeting with him on 17 July about the future of the city's common good fund and related matters.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend wrote in reply to the city of Aberdeen district council on 28 October 1987.

Workers' Education Association

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he or any of his departmental Ministers intend to meet representatives of the Workers' Education Association Scottish Council to discuss the funding of the association.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the complaints affecting patients on the Clydesdale waiting lists of 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information relating to the conditions from which patients on hospital in-patient waiting lists are suffering is not available centrally on a constituency basis. No complaints about waiting lists have been received by the Secretary of State from patients in Clydesdale.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps substantially to reduce waiting lists in Clydesdale.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regard reduction of the length of time patients have to wait for treatment as one of the most urgent tasks facing the Health Service and I am looking urgently at the steps that can be taken to improve the situation. Health boards are already making considerable efforts to achieve reductions; the recommendations made in the recent report on the management of orthopaedic services in Scotland will assist them with their objective.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School-Police Relations

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received the report from a working party of teachers and police representatives on ways of improving relations between schools and the police; what response he has made; and if he will ensure that the working party's recommendations are made available to schools and local education authorities.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received a copy of the working party's report. He welcomes the co-operation between teachers and police representatives which has led to the report, and is considering his response to it in consultation with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

School Governors

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he will be taking to ensure that the new proposals for the opting out of schools from local authority control will not discriminate against the children of hourly-paid parents in the inner cities and other areas because the parents cannot afford to take time off work to become school governors.

Mr. Dunn: All parents at a school will have the opportunity of voting in a secret postal ballot on a proposal to apply for grant-maintained status. The proposal will have to include information about people willing to stand as governors, and any parent could register an interest. Governing bodies are free to arrange their meetings to suit the convenience of their members. Employers can also provide paid leave for such meetings, and a number already do so.

Parents' Meetings

Mr. Fearn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evaluation he has made of the annual parents' meetings held by schools under the Education Act 1986.

Mr. Dunn: None.

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the average change in cost to the residents of Camden if the borough of Westminster opts out of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: The earliest date from which boroughs will be able to opt out of the ILEA is 1 April 1990. The Government expect that, within the new system of local government finance which will be introduced from that date, the financial effect on Camden residents of any other borough opting out of the ILEA should be broadly neutral. The precise financial effects will depend on a number of factors, including the extent of movement of pupils and students between boroughs, and the pattern of expenditure by the ILEA and the opted-out boroughs in relation to the needs and populations of their areas.

Universities (Access)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to ensure that universities do not deny access by students to their examination results.

Mr. Jackson: The universities are autonomous institutions. Within the context of their legal obligations it is for them to make known their students' examination results at the time and in the manner they see fit.

Political Indoctrination

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science in view of current trends in under-fives and under-sevens education, what measures he proposes to introduce to ban political indoctrination of the very young in the state education system.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 already prohibits political indoctrination in schools in England and Wales. Sections 44 and 45 of the Act impose duties on local education authorities, governing bodies and head teachers to forbid partisan political activities by junior pupils and the promotion of partisan political views in teaching, and to secure balanced treatment of any political issues. Since these provisions came into force, we have received no complaints about any alleged political indoctrination of pupils aged under seven. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind, perhaps he would write to me.

Education Bill

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in respect of each of the consultation documents issued by him in relation to the forthcoming Education Bill, he will publish tables showing the proportion of responses from (i) individuals and (ii) bodies and institutions which are (a) broadly in favour, (b) broadly against and (c) neither in favour or against the principal proposals of each document.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No. Many respondents have commented in considerable detail, and responses could not readily be classified as requested.

GCSE

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a report breaking down by subject the progress which has been made in producing full sample examination papers for each General Certificate of Secondary Education examination, stating in each case the number of questions which have been produced and the date upon which they were made available to the teaching professions for incorporation into their examination preparation work.

Mrs Rumbold: Information about the sample GCSE questions available from the GCSE examining groups is not held centrally. I shall invite the groups to provide this information and write to my hon. Friend when I have their response.

Conductive Education

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether any members of his staff have visited the Peto institute in Budapest to study the system called conductive education which is used there; whether any educational authorities have sent teachers there to train as conductors; and what plans he has to fund pilot schemes based on the Hungarian experience in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dunn: No members of my right hon. Friend's staff have visited the Peto institute. Information about visits by teachers is not collected centrally. The Department is providing £326,000 in order to fund Birmingham university's research evaluation of the Foundation for Conductive Education's pilot project in Birmingham; there are no plans to fund any pilot schemes although LEAs are free to organise such schemes if they wish to do so.

O-Level Examinations

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has considered an independent review of the quality and standard of O-level examinations in England and Wales; and if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all those subjects approved for examination at O-level and the year they were introduced.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such a review of O-level examinations, which from summer 1988 will be replaced by general certificate of secondary education examinations. Records of the O-level syllabuses currently available from the eight GCE boards in England and Wales are not held centrally. I will write to the hon. Member on this matter.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Timber

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of annual United Kingdom timber consumption by value and quantity, respectively, were imported for the latest available year.

Mr. Maude: Timber imports as a percentage of United Kingdom consumption in 1986 were 81 per cent. measured by value and 65 per cent. measured by volume.

European Space Agency

Mr. Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to increase the United Kingdom contribution to the European Space Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No. The European Space Agency's draft proposals, likely to be tabled at the forthcoming ministerial council meeting on 9 and 10 November look over-ambitious and very expensive. My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster will be arguing for a fundamental reappraisal of the agency's plans and for an overhaul of its operating methods.

Mr. Roy Gibson

Mr. Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the resignation of Mr. Roy Gibson as director-general of the British National Space Centre.

Mr. Butcher: No. I regret Mr. Gibson's resignation, but that is essentially a matter for him.

British Space Plan

Mr. Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the British space plan.

Mr. Butcher: No. The Government have decided not to increase public expenditure on civil space above the current level, which is already running at over £100 million a year.

BR and W Industries

Mr. Dalyell asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his investigation into the alleged illegal export of mines and other arms to Iran by Mr. Ben Banerjee and BR and W Industries.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the reply by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade in the Official Report of 21 October, column 811, to his similar question. I am not aware of any breach of United Kingdom Government export control regulations by Mr. Ben Banerjee or BR and W Industries and therefore no investigation is taking place.

Blowpipe Missiles

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether there has been any abuse of end-use on the export licence application in respect of Blowpipe missiles from Short Brothers supplied to (i) Afghanistan rebels, (ii) the South Korean Government, (iii) the Contras in Nicaragua; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: It is not the practice to comment on individual defence equipment export matters.

Weapons (Export Licenses)

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will describe the various elements involved in the verification of export licence applications involving weapons.

Mr. Maude: In considering applications for export licences involving weapons, account is taken of the type of equipment, its proposed destination and the use to which it might be put. Applications must be supported by end-user certificates, international import certificates or evidence of the contract or order as appropriate.

A licence is not issued unless the Government are satisfied that the end user is acceptable and the end use will be as stated on the application.

It is not the practice to disclose the nature of the checks made.

Explosives (Iran)

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representation he has received on the use by Iran of United Kingdom-made explosives; whether explosives exported to Sweden are subject to end-user certification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have received no representations on the use by Iran of explosives manufactured in the United Kingdom.

Export licence applications for explosives for all destinations, including Sweden, are considered on their merits and, depending upon the type of explosive, its end use and destination would normally require an end-user certificate or an international import certificate.

Mrs. H. Braisdell

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consideration he has given to the representations made to him by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshaw, on behalf of Mrs. H. Braisdell of 85 Thorngreen road, Manchester 22, about the allegations that a north-west tour operator showed not only neglect of clients, but also indifference to bereavement; if there is any action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade Industry replied to the right hon. Member's representations on 26 October. He expressed great sadness at the tragedy but commended Mr. and Mrs. Braisdell for their responsible and compassionate attitude. He explained that the Association of British Travel Agents (ABTA), to which the tour operator concerned belongs, was conducting a thorough investigation into the case. ABTA has told the Department that it has received assurances from the tour operator that, on the basis of a full report on the incident, it is fully satisfied that its representative acted correctly. ABTA has written accordingly to Mrs. Braisdell.

Cement

Mr. Henderson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide figures for (a) imports of cement to the United Kingdom in the first, second and third quarter of 1987, by both tonnage and value, (b) imports of Greek cement to the United Kingdom in the first, second and third quarter of 1987, by both tonnage and value, (c) exports of cement from the United Kingdom in the first, second and third quarter of 1987, by both tonnage and value and (d) the estimated total sales of cement, by both tonnage and value, in the first, second and third quarters of 1987.

Mr. Atkins: Information for the third quarter of 1987 and on sales of cement are not available. Details on imports and exports for the first two quarters are given in the following table.

United Kingdom Imports/Exports of Cement 1987

Quantity: metric tonnes
Value: £'000

	Total Imports		Of which Greece		Total Exports
	Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value
First Quarter	162·2	7,428	24·8	499	21·2	2,617
Second Quarter	284·1	10,003	38·7	885	23·5	2,887

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Henderson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what proportion of the European regional development fund the United Kingdom had received by 1 October or the nearest available date in relation to the 1987 total allocation; and if he will provide a breakdown of which regions of the United Kingdom had received what proportion of the United Kingdom allocation at that date;

(2) which projects submitted from the northern region in the United Kingdom had been accepted by the European Commission for European regional development fund assistance; and which projects from those submitted had been rejected by 1 October;

(3) how many applications were submitted per month by local authorities to Her Majesty's Government before 19 May, and of these how many were accepted by the Commission; how many were submitted per month by local authorities to Her Majesty's Government after 19 May; and of these how many were accepted by the Commission.

Mr. Atkins: Following the announcement on 26 October of the fifth round of 1987 European regional development fund allocations, the allocations to the United Kingdom in respect of projects can be summarised as follows:

Region	Allocation (£)	Per cent.
North	0·75	0·7
Yorkshire and Humberside	1·03	0·9
South West	8·81	7·7
West Midlands	22·01	19·3
North West	16·06	14·1
Wales	20·18	17·7
Scotland	18·81	16·5
Northern Ireland	26·11	23·0
Total	113·76	100

The allocations in respect of United Kingdom projects represent approximately 5 per cent. of the 1987 European Community budget for the European regional development fund. To date 53 per cent. of the fund has been allocated on projects, programmes and studies. We have not yet received an analysis of these from the Commission.

Three further allocations in respect of 1987 remain to be announced. A region's position should be judged on the basis of all the allocations in a year. Final decisions rest with the European Commission.

To date, in 1987, six projects to the value of £660,000 in the northern region have been granted European regional development fund support. Eighty-four applications from the northern region have been made to the value of £108 million. Further awards to the region are likely. Seventeen projects from the northern region were rejected or withdrawn.

Information is not collected in such a way as to permit an analysis of local authority projects submitted to Her Majesty's Government before or after 19 May. However, the number of projects submitted to the European Commission so far in 1987 is 352, of which 205 were submitted before 19 May. Of these projects, 15 have so far been approved by the Commission. During the course of 1987 a further 29 projects have been approved which were submitted in 1986 or earlier.

Home Accidents (Statistics)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the consumer safety unit has obtained information from other European countries about the application of circuit breakers in the prevention of accidents in the home; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Information obtained on the experience of other countries with residual current circuit breakers has reinforced my view of the value of these devices in preventing accidents. I hope to announce in the new year a collaborative programme with industry aimed at promoting their wider acceptance and use.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many people were treated at hospitals in the home accident surveillance system during 1986 as a result of an electrical current accident in the home; what is his estimate for the figures for the whole of the United Kingdom in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The most recent 12 months for which detailed information is available from the home accident surveillance system cover the period November 1985 to November 1986. During this time, this system recorded details of 88 people who were treated at its 20 hospitals in England and Wales as a result of an electric current accident.

This number is too small to make a reliable estimate of the annual number of such accidents for the whole of England and Wales, but the total is probably between 1,500 and 2,000. No figures are available for Scotland and Northern Ireland which will be participating in the home accident surveillance system for the first time from November 1987.

The most recent year for which detailed information is available on fatal home accidents is 1984 when 26 deaths from electric current accidents were recorded in England and Wales.

The above information is based on the tenth annual report of the home accident surveillance system, 1986 data; which is to be published on 11 November 1987. This report includes more information on the electric current accidents referred to, as well as details of many other types of accidents in the home.

Small Factory Units (Southport)

Mr. Fearn asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to give Government support for small factory units in the Southport area.

Mr. Atkins: English Estates is currently discussing with Sefton district council and with a local enterprise agency its possible involvement in a development of small managed units in the Southport area.

Steel Imports

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the amounts of hot-rolled steel imported in the United Kingdom, by cash and by tonnes, for each of the years from 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

The figures are as follows:

United Kingdom imports of ECSC treaty products[1]

	Value (£ million) c.i.f.	Quantity (million tonnes)
[2]1980	988	4·00
1981	655	2·80
1982	848	3·30
1983	791	2·91
1984	883	2·95
1985	1,059	3·21
1986	1,140	3·55

[1] Due to changes in statistical definitions for steel products over the period since 1980, information is only readily available for total imports of ECSC treaty products. The amounts shown mainly cover hot-rolled products but also include cold-rolled sheets and plate.

Aircraft (Imports)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will estimate the cost of importing foreign-made (a) military and (b) civil aircraft, with countries of origin, into the United Kingdom for each of the years from 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Country of origin data are not available. Imports of aircraft, by value, for each year since 1979 are given in the following table.

Imports of Aircraft 1979-1986

£ million

	Military	Civil	Total
1979	*	*	364·5
1980	*	*	943·7

1983	16·5	398·5	415·0
1984	171·9	478·5	650·4

Textiles (Imports)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will estimate the cost of importing foreign textiles for each of the years from 1979.

Mr. Atkins: Imports of textiles for each year since 1979, by value, are given in the following table.

Imports of Textiles 1979-1986

£ million

BA/B-Cal Merger

Mr. Colvin asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to report on the British Airways bid for British Caledonian; whether any time will be given for representations to be made by interested parties on the report before he makes his decision on its recommendations; and what criteria he intends to use in deciding whether to vary the basic recommendations.

Mr. Maude: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission is due to report by 5 November. There is scope for my right hon. and noble Friend to take action only if the commission concludes that a merger would operate against the public interest. It would not be appropriate to speculate on what conclusions the commission may reach or what, if any, recommendations it may make. Any representations on the merger should be addressed to the commission.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Michael Delaney

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General if he will explain the reasons for his decision not to prosecute those responsible for the death of Mr. Michael Delaney on 10 January, following the coroner's court verdict of unlawful killing.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service, having studied all the evidence gathered by the police, and the transcript of the inquest into the death of Michael Delaney, concluded that the evidence did not disclose the commission of any criminal offences.

Immigration (DNA Testing)

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General if he will take steps to ensure that legal aid will be available for all poor families seeking to use genetic DNA tests to challenge immigration rulings; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Legal aid is not available for proceedings before tribunals in connection with immigration matters, but may be granted in relation to an application to the High Court for judicial review of a decision of an immigration appeal tribunal or in relation to any appeal from the court's decision on such an application. Advice and assistance on immigration matters is available from a solicitor under the green form scheme to any person of small or moderate means.

The cost of genetic DNA tests may be met under the green form scheme where, in any particular case, the normal financial limits for advice and assistance are extended for that purpose, but the decision whether or not to grant such an extension in any case rests with the legal aid administration of the Law Society.

Mr. John Larsen

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General if he will prosecute Mr. John Larsen for carrying a forged Ministry of Defence police warrant; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The question of prosecution is a matter for the Director of Public Prosecutions. However, I am not aware of any evidence that Mr. John Larsen was ever in possession of such a document. When he was arrested, Mr. Frank Larsen produced a document purporting to be a warrant card, but which was not. The question of his prosecution for so doing was considered by the Director of Public Prosecutions and he decided that the public interest did not require it.

Treasury Solicitor (Costs)

Mr. Gow asked the Attorney-General what changes he proposed to make in the 1987-88 cash limit for class XX, vote 29 Law Charges, England and Wales (Treasury Solicitor's Department) and to the Treasury Solicitor's running costs limits.

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate the cash limit for the Treasury Solicitor's Department will be increased by £287,000 from £9,813,000 to £10,100,000 reflecting an exceptional volume of work partially offset by a higher level of receipts. This increase is being charged to the reserve and will not add to the planning total of public expenditure. There has also been an increase of £912,000 in the gross running costs limit from £10,935,000 to £11,847,000. £287,000 of this increase is related to the cash limit increase, £517,000 is to cover the transfer of legal staff from the Department of Employment and £58,000 is a transfer from the Ministry of Defence for work arising from the repeal of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the progress being made in the European Court of Justice on the case initiated by the Commission alleging that Her Majesty's Government are in breach of their Community obligations by not levying value added tax on housebuilders, gas, electricity and other items; and when he expects a judgment to be made by the court.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply. The oral hearing of the case to which my hon. Friend refers took place at the European Court of Justice on 15 September.

The Advocate General's opinion is to be delivered on 2 December. This will be followed by the court's judgment, which is expected early in the new year.

PRIME MINISTER

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister if she will take steps to ensure that Ministers have adequate contact with the data protection registrar during the design stage of major computer projects which process large volumes of personal data.

The Prime Minister: As I told the hon. Gentleman on 29 April at columns 133-34, under section 38 of the Data Protection Act 1984 each Government Department is treated as separate from any other Government Department. It is accordingly for individual Ministers to decide how much contact they need to make with the data protection registrar at the design stage of major computer projects for their departments. The data protection registrar welcomes close contacts with Departments in these matters at an early stage.

British Nuclear Fuels

Dr. Thomas asked the Prime Minister to which Government Department British Nuclear Fuels is responsible for (a) the military operation cycle and (b) the civil operation cycle of its reactors at Calder hall and Chapel cross.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 2 July, at column 144.

Security and Intelligence Services

Mr. Whitney asked the Prime Minister what proposals she has for the appointment of a staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: In the debate which followed my announcement of the Government's acceptance of the Security Commission's recommendations in their report on the case of Michael John Bettaney, I undertook to consider a suggestion that there would be advantage in designating someone, not himself a member of the security service, to whom a member of the security service could turn if he or she had anxieties relating to the work of the service.

The House will wish to know that Sir Philip Woodfield, KCB, CBE, has been appointed as a staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services. He will be available to be consulted by any member of the security and intelligence services who has anxieties relating to the work of his or her service which it has not been possible to allay through the ordinary processes of management-staff relations. He will have access to all relevant documents and to any level of management in each service. He will be able to make recommendations to the head of the service concerned. He will also have access to the Secretary of the Cabinet if he wishes and will have the right to make recommendations to him. He will report as appropriate to the heads of the services and will report not less frequently than once a year to me and to my right hon. Friends the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary and the Home Secretary as appropriate on his activities and on the working of the system.

New Build Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the new build figures for (a) private, (b) local authority, (c) housing associations and (d) others, in each local authority area, in 1978-79, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87, respectively.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not readily available by financial year, but the following table gives new build completions on a calendar year basis:

Pembrokeshire Health Authority

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales when it is expected that the Pembrokeshire health authority's funding will reach equalisation with other Welsh authorities at the level recommended by the Yates committee.

Mr. Grist: The pace of revenue equalisation between health authorities in Wales cannot be predicted with certainty. It depends upon annual revisions to the revenue formula (developed by the Resource Allocation Working Group) for demographic and other data changes and the availability of resources for equalisation in the light of competing demands on growth funds. If there are no significant changes in the formula in future years and the scale of provision made available for equalisation in 1987-88 is maintained, all authorities in Wales other than Gwynedd should be within plus or minus 1 per cent. of their formula shares by 1990-91. Given that the formula is intended to be only an indicator of relative resource needs, I would regard such a banding as the achievement of a broad measure of equalisation which represents our current policy objective.

Pupil Costs

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the cost per pupil of teaching staff in each Welsh local education authority in 1978-79, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 respectively.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The cost per pupil of teaching staff in maintained primary and secondary schools is given in the following table. Information in respect of 1987-88 is not yet available.

Industrial Support and Development

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the annual expenditure for each year since 1972 on industrial support and development in Wales; how much of it was regional development grant and how much regional selective assistance.

Mr. Peter Walker: Expenditure on regional selective assistance and regional development grants in Wales for the financial years 1972-73 to 1986-87 is as follows:

	RSA £ million	RDG £ million	Total £ million
1972-73	—	0·9	0·9

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will construct for Wales a table in the same form as figure J7 in Cmnd. 9714 "Paying For Local Government", showing numbers of adults living in each of the households gaining and losing with full replacement of domestic rates by the community charge;

(2) if he will reproduce for Wales figure J7 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying For Local Government", showing households gaining and losing with full replacement of domestic rates by the community charge by (a) local authority and (b) parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Peter Walker: Estimates for Wales of the total numbers of households which would have gained or lost had the replacement of domestic rates by the community charge taken place in 1985-86 are given in the following table. These estimates have been derived from a sub-set of the family expenditure survey of about 1,500 Welsh households. It is not possible to derive reliable estimates for individual household types or for individual local authorities or parliamentary constituencies from a sample of this size.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give an estimate of the numbers of staff that a community charge registration officer for Alyn and Deeside will be required to employ in order to complete registration in the community charge register of all adults in Alyn and Deeside.

Mr. Peter Walker: No estimate has been made but an assessment will be considered in discussion with the Welsh Consultative Council on local government finance.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the date when he expects local authorities in Wales to have community charge registration officers in post.

Mr. Peter Walker: A community charge registration officer will be appointed by each local authority and will be responsible for compiling and maintaining the community charge register in readiness for its introduction in April 1990.

TRANSPORT

A6 Bypass (Great Glen)

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he hopes to be able to announce a firm timetable in relation to the construction of the A6 bypass at Great Glen, Leicestershire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Initial investigations are now in hand. We hope to put forward proposals for public consultation in autumn 1988 and announce a preferred route in 1989. Subject to the results of further investigations and the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures, construction could start late in 1992.

National Bus Company

Mr. Morley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total amount paid out in redundancy payments to staff employed by the National Bus Company in 1986.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand from the chairman of the National Bus Company that in 1986 £13·5 million was spent on redundancies in NBC and its various subsidiaries.

A423 (Road Markings)

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to take any action to change the road markings on the A423 trunk road south of Deddington; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am considering whether any changes should be made to the road markings in the interest of road safety. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as I can.

Motorways (Coning)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he is making to ensure that motorways are not restricted needlessly by coning off one or more lanes when there is not a worker or piece of plant along the particular stretch of road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's instructions to its agents emphasise the need to minimise coning off and, once lanes have been coned off, to complete the works and remove the cones as soon as possible. There are times when lane closures may seem unnecessary. Cones are needed to separate workmen from traffic and drivers from potential hazards such as excavated areas or setting concrete. Measures taken to reduce periods of closure include mobile lane closures for some routine maintenance activities and lane rental, a contracts regime under which works are being completed about 30 per cent. faster on average than would be the case under conventional contracts.

BREL (Redundancies)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has met the chairman of British Rail to discuss the programme of redundancies recently announced by British Rail Engineering Limited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The redundancies recently announced by BREL are management matters for the company and the railways board. The British Rail chairman has kept us informed of BREL's plans.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Aitken asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals have been put to him for the construction of a high-speed rail link between London and the planned United Kingdom Channel tunnel terminus at Cheriton.

Mr. David Mitchell: None, British Rail is not due to report to me until June 1988 on the outcome of its study into the options for augmenting route, seating and terminal capacity for commuter and international services in Kent. This study, and the need for it, is referred to in the consultation document "Channel Tunnel: A Strategy for Kent" published by the Channel Tunnel Joint Committee impact study team and placed in the libraries of both Houses of Parliament on 17 August.

Rural Transport (Essex)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to what payments have been made in Essex from the rural transport development fund; for which routes; and for what purposes.

Mr. David Mitchell: No payments have been made from the rural transport development fund for schemes in Essex. Two applications are being considered at present by the Development Commission, for a community bus serving the Ongar area and a rural taxi-sharing scheme in the Rochford area. A further application is expected for a taxibus service in the Manningtree area. I welcome increasing interest in the assistance available from the £1 million fund of Department of Transport finance managed by the Development Commission.

A1

Mr. Jopling asked the Secretary of State for Transport why the surface of the A1 road is especially bumpy in the sections around Eaton Socon and between Markham Moor roundabout and the river Trent; what assessment he has made of the implications for the road construction and maintenance programme of this; and who were the contractors concerned in constructing these surfaces.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The 20km section of A1 between Markham Moor roundabout and the river Trent was constructed in the mid 1960s and the Eaton Socon bypass opened in 1971. They were both built by R. McGregor and Sons, now part of Norwest Holst Civil Engineering Ltd.

The present condition of the carriageways does not require reconstruction or overlay.

A series of small repairs was started in 1984 to the Nottinghamshire section to extend the life of the pavement. They have resulted in some reductions in the riding quality. The repair contracts, which will be completed by 1989, are being carried out by Nottinghamshire county council direct labour organisation, Clugston Construction Ltd., Norwest Holst Civil Engineering Ltd. and Rush and Tompkins Ltd. There are no plans for any substantial maintenance at Eaton Socon.

Mr. Jopling asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many new roundabouts have been interposed on the A1 road in the last 10 years; how many have been improved; and if he will make it his policy that no further new ones will be interposed in the future.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the last 10 years, eight new roundabouts have been interposed on the A1 in England, 13 have been removed and we have proposals in the programme to remove a further five.

We have no plans at present to install additional roundabouts on the A1

Traffic flows vary greatly along the length of the A1. In future improvement, it may be concluded that roundabouts are appropriate for particular junctions in the light of traffic volumes and other aspects of the local situation.

A46-A47 Link Road

Mr. Vaz asked the Secretary of State for Transport if in view of the decision of Leicestershire county council to implement proposals for the A46-A47 link road to pass through the eastern part of Leicester, he will initiate a public inquiry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The A46-A47 link road is the responsibility of Leicestershire county council as highway authority.

I understand that it intends to hold public consultations on the recently adopted preferred route.

A public inquiry would be held into a published compulsory purchase order if objections are received which are not resolved. Local authority orders are subject to the confirmation of the Secretary of State.

Scheduled Air Service (Manchester-New York)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what applications have been or are being considered for a daily scheduled air service between Manchester and New York; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: British Airways applied for and was granted a licence by the Civil Aviation Authority to operate between Manchester and New York some years ago. It inaugurated its service in 1985. No other applications are currently before the CAA or the Department of Transport.

American Airlines and Pan American World Airways have recently applied to the United States Department of Transportation for permission to operate between New York and Manchester. As stated in the Airports Policy White Paper (Cmnd. 9542), we remain willing to negotiate with the United States Government the basis on which United States airlines should have access to Manchester.

British Rail

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will clarify his advice to the British Railways Board on the legal restrictions on trading between it and British Rail Engineering Ltd., with a view to allowing British Rail Engineering Ltd. to tender for new locomotive building.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have given no advice to the Railways Board on any of these matters.

Buses

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those bus services in the Dyfed county council area which have been put out to tender since October 1986.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I have been asked to reply.

Information on individual bus services put out to tender by Dyfed county council, or other local authorities within its area, is not held by the Department.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Written Answers

Mr. John Marshall asked the Lord Privy Seal what is the estimated total cost of answering the questions tabled on Wednesday 21 October for written answer.

Mr. Wakeham: It is not possible to calculate the actual cost of answering these specific questions. However, following an inderdepartmental exercise in 1972, an assessment was made of the average cost of answering a written parliamentary question. This average figure is updated regularly and currently stands at £45.

CIVIL SERVICE

Personnel Management Policy

73. Mr. Cryer asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he proposes to introduce any changes to personnel management policy.

Mr. Luce: The Government will continue to develop new policies and adapt existing ones in order further to improve the effectiveness and professionalism of the Civil Service.

Secondments

76. Mr. Chapman asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many secondments were made between the Civil Service and (a) local authorities and (b) industry and commerce in the last 12 months.

Mr. Luce: In 1986, the last full year for which figures are available, there were 56 secondments between the Civil Service and local authorities and 469 between the Civil Service and industry and commerce. The Government are keen that a higher level of secondments be sustained.

Departmental Costs

Dr. Hampson asked the Minister for the Civil Service if there are any proposals to change the 1987-88 running costs limit for the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the running costs limit for the office of the Minister for the Civil Service (class XX, vote 1) will be reduced by £803,000 from £29,697,000 to £28,894,000. This decrease will be offset by a corresponding increase in the running costs limit for the Economic and Financial Administration (HM Treasury) vote (class XIX, vote 11) and results from the changes in the distribution of functions between the central Departments announced by the Prime Minister on 7 August 1987.

ENERGY

Sizewell B

6. Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the latest time scale for the construction and operation of Sizewell B pressurised water reactor nuclear power station.

Mr. Parkinson: Preliminary work on site started on schedule on 29 June 1987 after consent was given in March. A number of major contracts have now been placed, providing United Kingdom firms with unique opportunities. These totalled nearly £700 million by September. The target construction period to full commissioning is 69 months, and the station is expected to be operational by mid-1994.

24. Mr. Devlin asked the Secretary of State for Energy what effect the construction of the Sizewell B nuclear power station will have on employment opportunities in the energy industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that Sizewell B will provide an average of 10,000 jobs in the power engineering and construction industry and on site over a seven year period. The peak will be about 15,000 jobs in 1990-91.

Electricity Demand

13. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy what estimates he has for the increase in electricity demand over the next decade.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Estimates of electricity demand are the responsibility of the electricity supply industry. The forecasts for England and Wales adopted by the Electricity Council in October last year show a steady growth of about 1·5 per cent. a year in electricity demand over the nine years ahead.

Nuclear Safety

14. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to conduct a comprehensive review of safety at nuclear power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Safety at new nuclear power stations is under continuous review. The operators of nuclear power stations have a statutory responsibility for the safety of their plant. In addition, they must meet the stringent licence requirements of the NII.

22. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to improve the security and safety of nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Parkinson: The security and safety of nuclear power stations are the responsibility of the operators concerned and these are continually reviewed. The independent Nuclear Installations Inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive ensures that operators satisfy its stringent licence terms and conditions.

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Energy what developments there have been between the nuclear installations inspectorate and the Central Electricity Generating Board on the question of the long-term safety review at Bradwell nuclear power station; and if the Central Electricity Generating Board have satisfied the nuclear installations inspectorate on the submissions it has made to them on the issue of the pressure circuit integrity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 29 October.

Alternative Energy Sources

15. Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the projects on the use of alternative energies to oil his Department is sponsoring or funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We have supported several studies of processes for producing synthetic liquid fuels as alternatives to oil. However, results have indicated that liquid fuels produced by such processes would be far more expensive than oil or fuels derived from natural feedstocks, such as natural gas.

Coal Output

16. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest forecast for coal output for 1987.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Forecasts of coal output are a matter for the British Coal Corporation. However, coal production by the corporation and its licensees in the 12 months to 10 October 1987 totalled 102 million tonnes. The figure for the calendar year 1987 is not likely to be greatly different.

21. Mr. Riddick asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give details of the financial support the Government are planning for the coal industry.

Mr. Parkinson: Over the three years to 1989-90, the Government expect to provide finance of over £2 billion to the coal industry.

Electricity Generation

17. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the cost of electricity provided by the latest nuclear power stations compared with that produced by the most modern coal-fired plant.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The latest analysis of comparative generating costs made by the CEGB showed that the average lifetime costs per Kwh, in April 1987 prices, for the most recently commissioned plant at Hinkley Point was 2·82 per Kwh and 3·03 per Kwh for the first stage of the coal fired station at Drax.

20. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Energy what funds his Department is currently providing for research into electricity generation using renewable energy sources.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The current renewables programme includes 94 projects worth over £45 million covering the electricity generating renewable technologies. So far this year 38 projects worth nearly £5 million have been initiated.

Scottish Coalfields

18. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current levels of production and manning in the Scottish coalfields.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised by the British Coal Corporation that during the four weeks up to 24 October the Scottish area produced 205,450 tonnes of coal, and that on 24 October there were 4,274 men on colliery books.

Electricity Supply

19. Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received regarding the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

32. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received regarding his plans for the privatisation of electricity.

Mr. Cecil Parkinson: I have received representations from electricity consumers, unions, other nationalised industries and members of the public and will take these into account when considering the proposals for the privatisation of the industry.

23. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to ensure that, in any future plans for privatisation of the electricity supply industry, the maintenance of a national grid is a statutory requirement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: We are developing our proposals for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry; these do not envisage the breaking up of the national grid.

Electricity (Privatisation)

33. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he proposes to impose any restriction on cross-Channel importation of electricity if the industry is privatised.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The cross-Channel import of electricity will be a commercial matter for the privatised electricity supply industry.

EC Energy Ministers

25. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had, since assuming office, with Energy Ministers from other European Economic Community countries; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend met Mr. Burke, the Irish Energy Minister, on 16 September when they discussed nuclear and gas matters. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State represented the United Kingdom at an informal meeting of Energy Ministers in Denmark on 20 and 21 September. Discussion centred on energy efficiency, new and renewable sources of energy and the interaction between energy and the environment as addressed in the Brundtland report.

Mineworkers (Redundancy Payments)

26. Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the state benefits received by a mineworker or his spouse that are deducted from the mineworkers' weekly redundancy payments under the mineworkers' redundancy payments scheme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A former mineworker eligible for weekly payments under the redundant mineworkers' payments scheme (RMPS) may have these payments reduced by deduction of all or part of the following state benefits received by himself:

(a) reduced earnings allowance;
(b) supplementary allowance;
(c) supplementary pension.

No deductions are made from weekly benefits in respect of state benefits received by a beneficiary's spouse. However, where state benefits received by an RMPS beneficiary or his spouse affect the unemployment benefit to which the beneficiary would have been entitled but for exhaustion of entitlement, payments of unemployment benefit equivalent under the RMPS are affected similarly.

Tidal Power

27. Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to encourage the development of tide-generated electricity in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Tidal power will be encouraged provided it remains economically viable and environmentally acceptable. As a result of present studies, some of which I announced in September, I hope that substantive decisions about the Severn will be taken around the end of next year.

Mining Industry (Flexible Hours)

28. Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to meet the chairman of British Coal in order to discuss flexible working in the mining industry.

29. Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss the situation in the coal industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet the chairman of the British Coal Corporation regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Fawley B Power Station

30. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to receive from the Central Electricity Generating Board a planning application for a proposed new coal-fired power station at Fawley B.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB has informed me that it intends to make an application to my right hon. Friend for consent to construct a coal-fired power station at Fawley B by the end of the year.

Energy Efficiency

31. Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has for improving the energy efficiency of housing and public buildings.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have recently announced a strategic review of the work of the energy efficiency office of the Department, which will include the programmes designed to promote energy efficiency in housing and public buildings.

Sellafield

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) 24 July, at column 520, if he has now received the nuclear installations inspectorate's audit progress report on Sellafield's safety improvements; and if he will now make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand from the Health and Safety Executive that British Nuclear Fuels plc has made good progress in meeting the improvements required in the HSE's Sellafield audit report which cover four main areas:—

(i) plant: short and medium term improvements have been carried out. Those with a longer timescale which involve design and modification proposals, are being agreed between BNF plc and the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate.
(ii) safety cases: BNF plc are on target for the preparation of safety cases which are required by the end of the year and priorities for work in subsequent years have also been agreed.
(iii) training: training procedures for all levels of staff have been improved following a thorough review; and
(iv) operating procedures: these have been completely reviewed and in some cases (such as shift handover) new procedures have been reintroduced. Quality assurance systems are being used to reinforce operating procedures.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport West (Mr. Flynn) of 20 July, at column 19, how many meetings, involving how many staff from his Department, have been held between his Department and the European Commission following the completion of the consultations on Sellafield safeguards to which he made reference.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have nothing to add to my answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 20 July at column 19.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether in the light of the statements submitted on past Central Electricity Generating Board plutonium use by Lord Marshall, chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board, on 15 October, he now has anything to add to the statement made by the then Minister in his Department, the right hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore) on 4 February 1983, at column 206.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) on 19 May 1986 at column 31.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) in what way the plutonium with plutonium-Z40 content less than 15 percent. produced at Trawsfynydd Magnox reactors (a) between 1965 and 31st March 1969 and (b) between 1st April 1969 and the present, has been disposed of;

(2) whether he has any further information on the uses to which Central Electricity Generating Board plutonium has been put further to the statement made by his right hon. Friend, the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore) on 4 February 1983, at column 206; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given by the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 15 and 18 April 1986 at column 330 and 525, respectively.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish tables of (a) the annual amount of spent nuclear fuel dispatched and (b) the annual amount of plutonium created, each by date and quantity, in the Trawsfynydd Magnox nuclear plant in the periods 1965 to March 1969 inclusive, April 1969 to April 1979 inclusive, and May 1979 to the present date.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 12 March 1987 column 278.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy of 10 July, at column 289, on the publication of information on civil plutonium production, whether he is now able to make an announcement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 30 October 1987 to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick).

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether there have been any recent requests from the United States government concerning the availability of British plutonium for export to the United States of America for (a) civil and (b) military uses.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Exports of plutonium to the United States for civil purposes take place from time to time. The destinations and quantities are commercially confidential.

On part (b) of his question, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 15 April 1986 at column 330.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will now make it his policy to publish a weekly input/output table, backdated to 1 January, of spent Magnox fuel arising from civil Magnox reactors, together with the arisings of resulting depleted uranium and plutonium stocks for the throughput at the Windscale B205 reprocessor plant at British Nuclear Fuels Limited plc Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department is considering any requests for permission to sell nuclear waste management technology to the United States of America.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No formal request has been made.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has received any recent request for permission to sell nuclear reprocessing technology to Japan.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Yes. As a result the Government have exchanged notes with the Japanese Government under which we have received assurances as to the use to which this should be put, in line with the policy laid down by the then Foreign Secretary in a parliamentary answer on 31 March 1976 at columns 514-16.

Windscale Piles

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy of 10 July, at column 289, if he has any further information available on the decommissioning of the Windscale piles by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Plans for carrying out decommissioning work on the Windscale piles were announced by the chairman of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority on 5 October. A copy of his statement has been placed in the Library.

Privatisation

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about proposals for privatisation of services within his Department's responsibility.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department currently uses the private sector for a number of services. Some others are being actively considered for possible contracting out and we are searching for more opportunities.

Coal Imports

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the cost and tonnage of importing coal into the United Kingdom, with country of origin, for each of the years from 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Tonnages of coal imported into the United Kingdom in each year since 1979 are shown, by country of origin, in the following table. The total and average costs of the coal imported in each year, as at the United Kingdom port of entry, are shown at the foot of the same table.

EMPLOYMENT

Mining Accidents

78. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he next meets the chairman of British Coal whether he will raise with him the number of accidents underground and what the chairman aims to do to bring about a reduction.

Mr. Cope: I have no immediate plans to meet the chairman of British Coal but the reduction of underground accidents is the subject of continual dialogue between the industry and Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Mines and Quarries, which investigates fatal and major injury accidents in mines.

Herald of Free Enterprise

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Employment if an inspector of the Health and Safety Commission will prosecute Townsend Thoresen Ltd., under sections 2(1), (2)(a), (b), (c), (d), (e), 3(1) and 37 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 arising out of the operation of the ship Herald of Free Enterprise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No. Health and safety matters on board ship are a matter for the Department of Transport. In the wake of the findings of the coroner's inquest, the papers have been forwarded to the Director of Public Prosecutions who is considering whether or not to instigate proceedings.

Closed Shop

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the responses to the Green Paper "Trade Unions and Their Members" were in favour of the proposal that immunity should be removed from all industrial action designed to create or maintain a closed shop; how many were against the proposal; and how many did not express an opinion.

Mr. Nicholls: Responses to the Green Paper "Trade Unions and Their Members" and comments on particular proposals have been treated in confidence by my Department. I can tell the hon. Gentleman, however, that a substantial majority of those who commented on this proposal expressed approval.

YTS

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the current providers of training places on youth training schemes in Coventry; and how many places each are providing.

Mr. Cope: Information is not currently available in the form requested. A national list of YTS managing agents who have the status of approved training organisation is being compiled and will be published in 1988. The list will contain details of the number of places made available by each approved training organisation alongside other information.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people, by sex, work full-time and part-time in (a) the Dundee, East constituency and (b) the Dundee travel-to-work area for the latest available date; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979;

(2) how many people in (a) the Dundee, East constituency and (b) the Dundee travel-to-work area are employed in the service industries on the latest available figures; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979;

(3) how many people in (a) the Dundee, East constituency and (b) the Dundee travel-to-work area are employed in manufacturing industry on the latest available figures; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. John Lee [holding answer 26 October 1987]: This information is available only for dates when censuses of employment are taken. The available information from the September 1984 and the previous September 1981 census of employment is set out. For parliamentary constituencies, a breakdown of employees by industry and by full and part-time status is not available for the earlier year.

Employees in employment[1]

Community Programme

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed by environmental and conservation groups in the United Kingdom under the community programme at the latest available date; what was the number in 1986; and if he is able to forecast numbers for 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 26 October 1987]: On 14 October 1987, there were 62,868 authorised places on the community programme, primarily on environmental and landscaping projects. On 20 November 1986, the nearest comparable date, there were 81,256 such places; it is not possible to forecast the corresponding number of places for 1988. Other places often include an element of environmental and landscape improvement.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment his Department has made of the effect of the proposed changes in eligibility for employment under the community programme on recruitment by conservation and environmental groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The changes in community programme eligibility will focus the programme more closely on long-term unemployed people, a group most in need of the opportunities the programme provides. There are unlikely to be any major effects on recruitment, with over 1 million people eligible for a place under the new eligibility rules.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms

Mr. Illsley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to a requirement that all firearms licence holders hold membership of an approved shooting club throughout the full duration of their licence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Applicants who apply for firearm certificates for target shooting are already required to establish membership of a rifle or pistol club and this is normally checked on renewal every three years. We are not persuaded that more frequent checks on club membership, which would be costly, would significantly improve the present control.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in making his proposals for a reform of firearms law, he will include proposals to (a) subject shotguns to the same control as firearms and (b) ban the sale by mail order of all firearms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has already announced his intention to bring self loading and pump action shotguns under the same controls as rifles and handguns. We also intend to impose a statutory obligation on shotgun certificate holders to store their weapons securely when they are not being used. As he announced in the debate on firearms in the House on 26 October, columns 28 to 69, we are considering suggestions in respect of a number of related issues and hope to announce comprehensive proposals by the end of November.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether in his proposed legislation on firearms he will take power to ban gun shops from displaying for sale hoods and masks.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Prisons

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison inmates were reported as (i) using needles or syringes for the injection of drugs and (ii) involved in sexual activity in contravention of prison rules, (a) in 1986 and (b) in the current year to date.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available in the form requested. The best evidence available by which to assess the level of any form of drug misuse in prison department establishments is the number of finds of substances or implements. In 1986, there were some 2,300 reports of such finds, the great majority of which were of cannabis or of implements for smoking cannabis. Finds of 27 needles and 41 syringes were reported. Some of the finds of needles and syringes were associated. In the first eight months of the current year, 929 reports were received, of which the great majority again concerned finds of cannabis and related implements. During the same period, nine needles and 13 syringes were reported to have been found. Again, some of the finds of needles and syringes were associated.

There is no disciplinary offence under the rules which relate specifically to sexual activity and it is not possible to identify separately charges in relation to such activity.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many accesses there have been to each of the indexes of the Police National Computer over the last year; and how many of these retrieved data from more than one index.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The total number of accesses to each of the indices of the police national computer in the year to October 1987 was as follows:

Index	Number of accesses
1 Stolen and suspect vehicles 2 Vehicle owners	19,397,984
3 Chassis/engine numbers	645,624
4 Fingerprints	217,953
5 Fingerprints—Scenes of crime	13,697
6 Criminal names	[1]0
7 Wanted/missing persons	1,691,799
8 Disqualified drivers	716,259
9 Convictions	357,406
10 Major investigations	134,365

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the implications for Her Majesty's Government's eventual ratification of the European convention covering automated data processing of the universities' code of practice on subject access.

Mr. Renton: None.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy to publish the number of certificates signed under section 27 of the Data Protection Act.

(2) if he will seek powers under the Data Protection Act to enable him to oblige universities to permit subject access to examination marks.

Mr. Renton: No.

Nationality

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will accept as valid all application forms under the provisions of the British Nationality Act 1981 received by his Department by 31 December, thus permitting corrections to be made after the deadline.

Mr. Renton: We will normally be prepared to treat applications received on or before 31 December 1987 as if they had been valid even though the application form was not correctly completed, provided the applicant makes good the defect within a reasonable time of being requested to do so.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are being held in police cells; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Nine hundred and ten on 2 November.

The lifting of industrial action in certain prisons in south east England last week was welcome. The police and prison services are now working hard to clear prisoners from police cells. That involves moving a large number of prisoners around the country and will take about a fortnight to complete.

It is now operationally sensible to hand back Rollestone camp on Salisbury plain for military use. The use of the camp, which was among the package of measures I announced on 16 July, provided a measure of relief until the greater effects of the change in the remission rules were felt in late August. It has made a useful contribution to that end, accommodating more than 400 prisoners since it opened, of which the overwhelming majority were category C sentenced prisoners.

Later industrial action taken by the Prison Officers' Association at certain prisons in the south east created a different situation. It resulted in a rapid build up of remand prisoners in police cells although space existed within the prisons concerned. Although a number of carefully selected prisoners awaiting trial have been accommodated in Rollestone camp it is not suitable for use wholly as a remand establishment. It is a long way from the courts and the dormitory accommodation is not right from the security point of view for most prisoners who have been refused bail and are normally put in category B. Rollestone has had to be staffed entirely by the prison service and the staff concerned could be better deployed elsewhere.

With the suspension of industrial action and with many establishments changing to "fresh start" working, the staff at Rollestone can now play a more effective part by returning to the permanent prison system. It was always the intention that the camp should be returned to military use at about this time. The possibility will remain to re-opening it if the need arises.

This assessment of operational need is not affected by the proposed ballot of POA members.

Forensic Science Tests

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has now taken to develop forensic science testing; and what study he has given to proposals to make available independent forensic science tests to defendants.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Defendants are already able to engage forensic scientists from the private sector if they wish, and we see no need for Government action on this matter.

We will continue to support the work of the forensic science service central research establishment at Aldermaston in developing forensic science techniques.

Life-sentence Prisoners

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to Her Majesty's Government of maintaining those serving life sentences in prisons in 1979, 1983, 1985 and 1987.

Mr. John Patten: It is not possible to distinguish the costs of keeping different types of prisoner in prison. The average net operating cost of keeping an inmate in custody during the financial years quoted below was:

	£
1979-80	7,072
1983-84	12,168
1985-86	12,792
1986-87	[1]—

Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what figures he has on the operation of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The main provisions of the Act have been in force since 12 January 1987. Information about the numbers and value of confiscation orders made under section 1 is being collected centrally, and will be published in the criminal statistics for 1987. In addition, I understand that the High Court, by 27 October, had made 122 restraint or charging orders under sections 8 and 9 of the Act. The precise value of property affected by restraint and charging orders cannot readily be identified: a restraint order may affect the whole of a person's property, and the value of the property may not have been determined at that stage.

Dangerous Weapons

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will take further measures to protect the public from people who use dangerous weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As my right hon. Friend indicated in the debate on firearms in the House on 26 October (columns 35-41), the Government intend to introduce a new Firearms Bill before Christmas to strengthen existing controls. As for other potentially offensive weapons, provisions have been added to the Criminal Justice Bill, currently in another place, which will enable the manufacture, sale and importation of specified weapons (other than firearms and crossbows) to be prohibited and which broadly will make it an offence to carry a bladed or sharply pointed article in public without good reason.

Television Licences

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons in Northern Ireland have been prosecuted for non-payment of television licences in Northern Ireland in each year since 1980.

Mr. Renton: The information available relates to the following financial years:

Year	Prosecutions
1979-80	139
1980-81	8
1981-82	133
1982-83	341
1983-84	575
1984-85	645
1985-86	782
1986-87	838
1987 to date	435

Extradition

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests for the extradition of persons from England and Wales to the Republic of Ireland have been received in each of the last five years; and how many of these requests have been (a) granted and (b) refused.

Mr. John Patten: The return of fugitives to and from the Republic of Ireland takes place on the basis of individual warrants of arrest. The table below provides figures for the number of persons who were the subject of such warrants from the Republic for the years 1982 to 1986.

Requests received in England and Wales from the Republic of Ireland for return of persons under the Backing of Warrants (Republic of Ireland) Act 1965

	Requests received	Requests granted	[1]Requests refused	[2]Requests not acted on for other reasons
1982	9	7	—	2
1983	15	11	—	4
1984	31	24	—	7
1985	29	18	—	11
1986	15	5	3	7

[1] In these cases the warrant was held by a court to be defective.

[2] eg. because the fugitive was at the time serving a prison sentence in this country or could not be traced.

Knives

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether in his legislation to exert greater control over the use of knives in public he will ban the display for sale in gun shops of knives.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to do so. Our proposals to ban the sale of offensive weapons for which there is no legitimate use may bear indirectly on the display of a very limited number of knives.

Fire Services

Mr. Terry Fields asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give national figures, brigade by brigade, on reductions in establishments, for the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, for the British fire service; and how many of these reductions apply to (a) whole-time posts, (b) part-time posts and (c) non-operational posts.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information sought can be derived from the annual reports of HM Chief Inspector of Fire Services for England and Wales and for Scotland for the relevant years, copies of which are in the Library.

Citizenship

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have registered for British citizenship under the British Nationality Act 1981, for each week in September and October in (a) Leeds, West, (b) Leeds metropolitan district council area and (c) England.

Mr. Renton: This information is not available.

Prisoners

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in line with the Swedish model, he will provide facilities for the broadcasting media to phone up convicted prisoners to seek their views on the legitimacy of their convictions and to elicit comment on the state of comfort in which they are being detained.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests have been made by prisoners serving sentences in Britain for transfers to prisons in Northern Ireland since 1968; and how many transfer have been made as a result of these requests.

Mr. John Patten: The information readily available extends back to 1973 and relates to inmates serving sentences in England and Wales. Since the beginning of that year there have been 238 requests from inmates for permanent transfer to establishments in Northern Ireland, and 25 transfers. A number of prisoners made more than one request.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any new appointment has been made to the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Hurd: Air Vice-Marshal David Clark, CBE, who is at present the military deputy to the head of defence export services at the Ministry of Defence, has accepted my invitation to serve as a member of the authority. He will take up his post on 10 November.

Appeals

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take the protect the public from appeals for funds supposedly destined for treatment by unproven medical techniques.

Mr. John Patten: Generally speaking, it is open to anyone to appeal to the public for funds.

Central Government responsibility for medical treatment is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and Social Security.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheepmeat

Mr. Wilson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy that variable premiums will be retained in any reforms of the European Economic Community sheepmeat regime accepted by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I attach considerable importance to the system for paying variable premium to sheep farmers in Great Britain: it generates confidence; encourages orderly marketing and the presentation of good quality lambs; and helps producers' cash flow. In the forthcoming negotiations I shall be stressing these points.

Free Butter

Mr. Foulkes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he received on the 1986 scheme to distribute free European Economic Community butter; and whether he will consult the retail trade and charitable organisations on the administration of any similar scheme in 1987 prior to proposals being finalised.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I received a large number of representations from hon. Members, members of the European Parliament, charitable and other organisations, trade bodies and members of the public on the free food arrangements operated in the United Kingdom in January-March 1987. The European Commission has recently proposed to the Council of Ministers a permanent free food scheme providing for distribution of products held in intervention stores to the most needy. The Council has not yet taken a decision. I am reflecting on what scope there would be for distributions of butter and beef from intervention stores in the United Kingdom under the Commission's proposals if adopted. I am in close touch with the charitable organisations on this point, and will conduct appropriate wider consultations as and when necessary.

Horticulture (Storm Damage)

Mr. Nelson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will provide assistance in addition to existing grant schemes for glass-house growers who have suffered storm damage during the night of 15 and 16 October.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer, 29 October 1987]: While I sympathise with growers whose glass-houses have suffered storm damage, these are insurable structures. Many growers will have insured and, as the Prime Minister has already said, there is no way we can make equal those who are not insured with those who are.

Forestry Schemes (Consultation Procedures)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all grant-aided and non grant-aided forestry schemes operating in the United Kingdom at present, indicating where applicable the nature of consultation procedures involved prior to planting.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer, 26 October 1987]: Grant aid for forestry in Great Britain is provided under the Forestry Commission's forestry grant scheme and broadleaved woodland grant scheme. The consultation procedures are set out in the Forestry Commission booklet "Consultation Procedures", a copy of which is being placed in the Library of the House. Similar grant schemes operate in Northern Ireland, but these are not subject to formal consultation procedures.

I am not aware of any non grant-aided forestry schemes.

Food and Environment Act 1986

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the operation and effectiveness of the terms of the Food and Environment Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer, 26 October 1987]: Yes. The Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 has now been brought into effect. Part I has been useful in controlling the movement and slaughter of sheep from upland areas contaminated by radioactivity resulting from the Chernobyl accident. Part II has introduced improved controls over the disposal of waste at sea. For the Government's progress in implementing the powers in part III I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr), on 15 July (col. 535).

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Petty Officer John Black

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the progress of his diplomatic exchanges with the Foreign Ministry of Spain regarding investigations within Spain by British police relating to the unlawful killing of Petty Officer John Black, Royal Navy, in Sabinillas over Christmas 1983; and what further initiative he intends to take in this matter.

Mr. Eggar: The Spanish authorities have recently given permission for investigations to be undertaken within Spain by British police in connection with the death of Petty Officer Black.

I shall await the outcome of these investigations before deciding what, if any, further initiative is possible.

Under-Secretaries of State

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom-based under-secretaries of state there are in his Department; of what age and length of service; and if he will list their responsibilities.

Mrs. Chalker: In the diplomatic wing, in addition to the permanent under-secretary and deputy permanent under-secretary, there are 19 United Kingdom-based under-secretaries currently working in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Their responsibilities, age and length of service are as follows:

Responsibilities	Age	Length of Service
Deputy Under Secretaries
The Americas, Caribbean and Far East	53	17
The Commonwealth, Africa and the Middle East	52	27
Defence, Arms Control, Nuclear matters, Security, Ireland	51	25
Trade, Energy, Science, Transport, European Community	55	32
Chief Clerk (Administration of the Diplomatic Service)	58	33
Assistant Under Secretaries of State (AUSS)
Africa and Commonwealth Coordination	49	22
Europe	53	32
Far East, South Asia, Pacific	53	29
Latin America, Caribbean and Atlantic	53	26
Middle East, North Africa	50	26
Defence, Arms Control, Nuclear (non-proliferation)	49	25
Energy Science, Transport, United Nations, Narcotics Control	53	28
European Community	45	21
Public Departments (Consular Visa, Nationality etc)	54	32
Trade Relations	53	28
Deputy Chief Clerk and Chief Inspector	49	24
Finance, Audit, Office Services, Overseas Estate	50	27
Protocol, Vice Marshall of the Diplomatic Corps	53	29
Communications	56	34

In the aid wing, in addition to the permanent secretary and deputy secretary, there are seven United Kingdom-based under-secretaries of state as follows:

Responsibilities	Age	Length of Service
Africa	50	24
Asia	54	20
Economist	57	21
Establishments and Overseas Manpower	44	22
Finance	43	20
Internal Division	57	35
Natural Resources	45	7

British Council

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new resources he has given to the British Council following the recommendations of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. Eggar: The hon. Member will appreciate that I cannot anticipate the decisions of the Chancellor's autumn statement.

Persian Gulf

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his reply on 21 October to the hon. Member for The Wrekin, Official Report, column 730, he will list the fundamental differences between British and United States foreign policy in the Gulf.

Mr. Mellor: We share with the Americans a determination to uphold freedom of navigation in the Gulf as part of a policy of bringing the wasteful and destabilising Iran-Iraq conflict to a negotiated end. We each have naval forces in the Gulf for this purpose, but their tasks and methods of operation are fundamentally different. The Armilla patrol exists to provide reassurance to British ships, and to accompany their passage to the best of its limited resources. It provides no guarantee of protection and does not convoy or escort. Nor does it operate beyond the Strait of Hormuz and the southern Gulf.

Arms Control

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of his departmental staff are currently employed on arms control and disarmament verification research.

Mr. Mellor: Fourteen people in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office work either full or part-time on aspects of our arms control and disarmament policy which includes verification research.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has had any discussions with his counterparts in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America about the arrangements for intrusive verification by Soviet nationals at the cruise missile bases at Greenham common and Molesworth as part of the current arms control and disarmament negotiations between the Soviet and the United States Governments on intermediate range nuclear forces.

Mr. Mellor: The details of the INF verification regime are still being discussed. The INF talks are bilateral between the United States and Soviet Governments, but there has been a continual dialogue between the United States and British Governments about all aspects of the negotiations, including the inspection arrangements. Any provision in the treaty relating to access by inspectors to the territory of the United Kingdom will have been agreed in advance by us.

SWAPO

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a representative of Her Majesty's Government last met Mr. Sam Nujoma, President of the South-West Africa People's Organisation; and whether any future discussions are planned.

Mrs. Chalker: I met Mr. Nujoma on 26 October. No future discussions are planned.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters were discussed at the last meeting between a representative of her Majesty's Government and Mr. Sam Nujoma, President of South-West Africa People's Organisation.

Mrs. Chalker: Details of such exchanges must remain confidential. But the points which I put to Mr. Nujoma included our concern at alleged human rights abuses by SWAPO and condemnation of violence from whatever quarter, as well as our support for United Nations Security Council resolution 435.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last made representations to the South-West Africa People's Organisation concerning the detention without trial or legal representation of 100 Namibians by the South-West Africa People's Organisation in camps in Angola and Zambia; and whether he has any further information about these detainees.

Mrs. Chalker: When I saw Mr. Nujoma on 26 October I again expressed our concern at alleged human rights abuses in SWAPO refugee camps in Angola and Zambia. We have no independent information on conditions in the camps.

Hong Kong Financial Futures Exchange

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the Hong Kong Government have provided HK$ 1 billion to guarantee the completion of transactions on the Hong Kong financial futures exchange; and if there will be an official inquiry into the operation of the Hong Kong financial futures exchange.

Mr. Mellor: The Hong Kong Government considered that, in the light of the turbulent conditions affecting stock and foreign exchange markets around the world, and the effect this was having on the financial futures exchange in Hong Kong, use of the exchange fund to provide support to the Hong Kong Futures Guarantee Corporation, in conjunction with matching support from local financial institutions, was fully justified under the terms of the Hong Kong exchange fund ordinance. The Financial Secretary has said in the Legislative Council that the Hong Kong Government will be undertaking a thorough review of the stock and financial futures markets and of the Government's regulatory position. Details of this review and its terms of reference will be announced shortly.

WEU (Ministerial Meeting)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent Western European Union ministerial meeting in The Hague.

Mr. Mellor: The meeting in The Hague marked a step forward in the renaissance of WEU and in the development of a more coherent and effective input by Europeans into their own security and that of the Atlantic Alliance as a whole. A platform on European security interests was agreed that will guide WEU's development for the foreseeable future, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. Ministers also discussed East-West relations; noted with satisfaction the practical co-operation between the naval forces of WEU members in the Gulf; and encouraged the continuing rationalisation and reorganisation of WEU's agencies. I am pleased that following the meeting on 28 October President Reagan publicly welcomed the willingness of the European allies to seek a larger, more closely-co-ordinated role for Western Europe in providing its own defence.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget which is allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets with equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to his departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act, and (f) the action taken to facilitate jobshare, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 28 October 1987, c. 269]: There are two equal opportunity officers in the diplomatic wing and one in the aid wing. The proportion of their time allocated to equal opportunity work is 15, 10 and 10 per cent., respectively. They combine their equal opportunity duties with personnel management, policy and training responsibilities as assistant heads of departments.

There is no budget specifically allocated to equal opportunity work. Costs are borne on many budgets and could be calculated only at disproportionate effort and expense.

The equal opportunity officers meet their counterparts from other departments formally once a year. In addition, they or their representatives meet other departments' representatives regularly to discuss specific equal opportunity matters and participate in seminars and briefings.

Guidance is issued to equal opportunity officers and training officers on all aspects of equal opportunities, including the Sex Discrimination Act.

Following consultation with the trade union side, departmental procedures have been amended to facilitate jobsharing, part-time working and parental leave. A booklet was recently issued to staff explaining these and other equal opportunity initiatives. The aid wing is discussing with the trade union side a formal agreement on jobsharing and part-time working.

SCOTLAND

Prisons

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the numbers of prisoners held in Scottish prisons in each of the last 10 years under the following categories: remand prisoners, fine defaulters, other short term prisoners and long term prisoners.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The figures are as follows:

Average daily prison population 1977-86

Type of inmate	1977	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Remand	706	728	691	705	746	844	863	942	1,092	1,017
Defaulter	286	309	293	386	231	234	228	259	309	330
Other short term	2,282	2,271	1,855	2,050	1,863	2,121	2,268	1,938	1,965	1,951
Long term	1,597	1,754	1,746	1,719	1,678	1,692	1,692	1,614	1,907	2,289
Total	4,871	5,062	4,585	4,860	4,518	4,891	5,052	4,753	5,273	5,588

Notes:

(1) The figures are for all inmates in Scottish penal establishments including under-21's.

(2) "Defaulter" includes fine and compensation order defaulters.

(3) "Short term" includes those serving sentences of less than 18 months, together with those serving borstal sentences.

(4) "Long term" includes those serving fixed sentences of 18 months or longer and indeterminate sentences.

(5) Sub-totals may not add to totals due to rounding.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the objectives of the prison system in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following statement, which remains valid, was issued on 30 October 1985 to all staff in the Scottish prison service.

"The task of the Scottish Prison Service is:—

(i) to keep in custody untried or unsentenced prisoners, and to ensure that they are available to be presented to court for trial or sentence;

(ii) to keep in custody, with such degree of security as is appropriate, having regard to the nature of the individual prisoner and his offence, sentenced prisoners for the duration of their sentence or for such shorter time as the Secretary of State may determine in cases where he has discretion;

(iii) to provide for prisoners as full a life as is consistent with the facts of custody, in particular making available the physical necessities of life; care for physical and mental health; advice and help with personal problems; work, education, skill training, physical exercise and recreation; and opportunity to practice their religion;

(iv) to promote and preserve the self-respect of prisoners;

(v) to enable prisoners to retain links with family and community; and

(vi) to encourage them to respond and contribute positively to society on discharge."

Housing

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing changes in the provision of Government financial support, including tax incentives, to public and private sector housing, respectively, since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information required to produce a table in the form requested is not available within the Scottish Development Department.

Community Charge

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what additional advice is to be given to community charge registration officers as to the sale of names and addresses of people contained in the community charge register, when the sale of the names and addresses takes place without the consent or knowledge of the data subject;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 7 July at column 99, whether he will consult the Data Protection Registrar before he issues orders under section 20(11) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Act which involve the access or disclosure of the personal data from the community charge register.

Mr. Lang: Draft regulations on the registration procedures for the community charge system have recently been issued for consultation and a copy has been sent to the Data Protection Registrar. The draft regulations propose that the copies of the community charges register which are to be sent to the Keeper of the Records of Scotland under section 20(10) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 should be made available for public inspection after 30 years from the end of the year in which they are sent to him. The draft regulations also provide for the fees to be charged when copies of the parts of the register which are available for public inspection are made available for sale under section 20(4) of the Act. My right hon. and learned Friend is considering whether any amendment to section 20(4) of the Act is required to provide for any restriction on the parts of the public register which may be made available for sale.

Monofilament Nets

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions he has given to officials responsible for enforcing the ban on the carriage of monofilament nets following the decision of the Stranraer sheriff court that the relevant order is invalid; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As the procurator fiscal has marked an appeal against the sheriff's decision it is not necessary to issue further instructions to enforcement officers. They will continue to apply the terms of the relevant order pending the matter coming before the High Court of Justiciary. In the circumstances it would not be appropriate to make a statement.

Fokker Aircraft (Delivery)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how late was the delivery of the Fokker aircraft to his Department's protection service, compared with the stipulations in the tender documents; and if any financial penalty has been imposed upon the supplying company.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The tender specification issued by the Department sought delivery by 31 July 1987 at the latest and the supply contract for the Fokker laid down delivery for June 1987. However during the process of acquisition it was agreed that extra fuel tanks originally scheduled for later installation would be more economically installed before delivery. The extra work resulted in the acceptance of the aircraft on 5 August 1987 and as this later date reflected a decision to avoid subsequent downtime no financial penalty was appropriate.

School Management

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the formal requests made by parent-teacher organisations and the schools councils for spokesmen to attend meetings to explain the background to the school management consultation proposals; how many of these requests were met; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Requests have reached me by a variety of means both formal and informal. No comprehensive record exists but as I have already told the hon. Member in correspondence I have received over 100 requests in total, and have accepted those which my diary allowed and successfully arranged for alternative speakers in but a few cases. It would not be appropriate for Scottish Education Department officials to attend such meetings.

School Boards (Strathclyde)

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many school boards would be created under his proposals contained in the consultative paper "School Management and the Rôle of the Parents" in the whole of the Strathclyde regional council area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's proposal is that there should be one board for each primary and secondary school, but that schools with 100 pupils or less might be grouped under single boards. Any grouping arrangements would be for local decision.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Strathclyde regional council representatives would be required in order to take part in the meetings of the school boards proposed by his consultative paper "School Management and the Rôle of Parents".

Mr. Michael Forysyth: We have proposed that the education authority should appoint one representative to each school board. It would be for the education authority itself to decide who should be its representatives.

Sexual Assault

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what responses he has received to his report on prosecuting sexual assault; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the right hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Millan) on 26 November 1987 at column 144.

Coniferious Trees

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy for encouraging the planting of coniferous trees.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The planting of coniferious trees is encouraged under the Forestry Commission's forestry grant scheme.

Extradition (Republic of Ireland)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many requests for the extradition of persons from Scotland to the Republic of Ireland have been received in each of the last five years, and how many of these requests have been (a) granted and (b) refused.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available and cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost. It is likely however that requests for the extradition of persons resident in Scotland from the Republic of Ireland have averaged two or three per annum and that all such requests have been granted.

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will construct for Scotland a table in the same form as figure J7 in Cmnd. 9714, "Paying For Local Government," showing numbers of adults living in each of the households gaining and losing with full replacement of domestic rates by the community charge;

(2) if he will reproduce for Scotland figure J7 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying For Local Government," showing households gaining and losing with full replacement of domestic rates by (a) local authority and (b) parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Lang: The estimated number of households in Scotland gaining and losing from the community charge is given below. The figures are based on 1985-86 data and are derived from a sample survey of approximately 1,800 Scottish households. The actual level of community charge in each area will depend on the spending of the local authority and decisions on grant distribution which are still to be taken. A further disaggregation of these figures by household type, local authority and parliamentary constituency cannot be given because of the size of the sample.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Home-Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's policy for the support of sheep production in Scotland in future.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The outcome of negotiations on the Commission's proposals for reforming the EC sheepmeat regime will have an important bearing on future support arrangements for the Scottish sheep industry. In these negotiations the Government are seeking particularly to protect the interests of traditional sheep producers and to reject any measures which might discriminate against our industry.

Milk

Mr. Home-Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the amount of milk produced in Scotland, the amount sold as liquid milk in Scotland, the amount processed to make cheese and other products, the amount exported, and the amount sold into intervention in each year since 1980.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on milk utilisation in Scotland is set out in the table below. (Figures are in million litres; years run from April to March.)

	Liquid Market	Butter	Cheese	Condensed Milk and Chocolate Crumb	Whole Milk Powder	Cream	Other Products	Total

1986-87	641	137	337	164	—	25	2	1,306

Detailed information in the form requested on the amounts of Scottish milk products exported and sold into intervention is not held centrally. However, exports account for only a very small proportion of Scottish production, as do sales into intervention.

Bus Services

Mr. Home-Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the bus routes in Scotland where services have been reduced or withdrawn since the introduction of deregulation in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: 3,404 changes in services were registered in Scotland during the period October 1986 to October 1987. 499 of those were new services, 416 were withdrawals while 2,489 were amendments to existing services. In view of the number of changes this question cannot be answered except at disproportionate cost.

Cheese Making

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were employed in cheese making and in other creameries in Scotland in each year since 1980.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form requested is not held centrally. However, the employment census of manufacturing industries conducted in 1981 and 1984 discloses that 3,762 and 3,103 persons respectively were employed in the preparation of milk and milk products in Scotland.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on recent trends in the production of cheese in Scotland and in demand for Scottish produced cheese.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In recent years the demand for Scottish cheese has been growing. Production of mature cheddar reached 28,346 tonnes in 1986, but is likely to fall back to around 21,000 tonnes this year. Production of other, higher value cheeses (such as feta and mozzarella) is continuing to grow. This year the availability of milk for cheddar manufacture has been limited by quota reductions, by an exceptionally high spring production peak involving lower production later in the year, and by growth in the output of higher value milk products. My noble Friend the Minister of State is currently pursuing with the cheddar makers ways in which greater supplies of milk might be secured for their markets.

Crime

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing trends in the incidence of each category of crime in each police force area and the percentage of those crimes which have been cleared up by the police in each year since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics of crimes and offences recorded and cleared up in each police force area are published annually in the reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary for Scotland, copies of which are available in the Library.

Roadlands Hospital, Haddington

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of the accident and emergency service at Roadlands hospital, Haddington, East Lothian.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that a local review is being undertaken of the east unit of Lothian health board which includes the hospital. In the first instance this is a matter for the board.

Dornoch Firth (Railway Bridge)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's intentions in relation to the British Railways Order 1986 tabled in November 1985, to provide for the construction of a railway bridge across the Dornoch firth.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: British Rail announced on 23 July 1987 its decision to withdraw its request to Parliament for the authority to bridge the Dornoch firth with a new railway line linking Tain and Golspie.

Oban-Colonsay Ferry Service

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received in respect of the proposed new timetable, due to be introduced by Caledonian MacBrayne in 1989, on the Oban-Colonsay service; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have received representations from the local community council and a number of other island interests about the proposed timetable for Colonsay from 1989 onwards. I understand that the proposed timing of one specific sailing is a matter of concern. It will be for the management of Caledonian MacBrayne to reach a view on the timing of their sailing in the light of their commercial judgment and operational requirements, following their usual consultations with local community interests.

Woodilee Hospital, Glasgow

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals have been put to him by Greater Glasgow health board, concerning the future of Woodilee hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Greater Glasgow health board is currently reviewing its strategy for mental illness services across the whole of its area. The long-term future of Woodilee hospital will be dependent on the outcome of that review. My Department has had discussions with the board about the interim measures it has taken so far at Woodilee following the evacuation of the hospital's main block earlier this year, and is currently considering proposals for further measures.

Random Breath Tests

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce random breath testing for drivers in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to amend the legislation on breath testing.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Deaf People (Telephones)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the possible closure of the London telephone exchange for deaf people; what plans he has to assist its continuance as a facility for deaf people; what discussions he has had with British Telecom about this exchange and the possible provision of similar facilities in other parts of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) on 21 October. We have received representations on this matter from 151 hon. Members and 49 other people. We have also received a petition containing 247 names of people living mainly in the Spalding area.

Social Workers

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the number of social workers qualified to work with the deaf and arrangements for training them; what discussions has he had with the relevant professional bodies; and what advice his Department is giving in this area.

Mr. Scott: Information on the number of social workers qualified to work with deaf people is not collected centrally. We are, however, aware of the difficulties in this area, and officials from the Department have held meetings with the professional and other bodies concerned. Training of social workers is primarily the responsibility of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work which has recently agreed in principle proposals to develop a distance learning package in this specialism.

Hospitals (Infection)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the estimated cost to date to each health region in dealing with outbreaks of the infection of multi-resistant staphylococcus aureus; and whether Her Majesty's Government will provide additional finance to health authorities toward this cost.

Mrs. Currie: Estimates are not available. It is for health authorities to decide how to meet, from within the funds available to them, the cost of infection control in hospitals from whatever source, and the care and treatment of those infected.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current period of waiting for orthopaedic patients (i) nationally and (ii) in the North East Thames region; and what proposals he has to provide additional funds to reduce this waiting time.

Mr. Newton: The table shows the latest available information for cases admitted from the waiting list:

Estimated median interval in weeks between the date an in-patient was placed on the waiting list and the date of admission, for patients discharged from Traumatic and Orthopaedic departments during 1985

Region of treatment	Weeks
North East Thames RHA	13
England	12

The first year's allocation of £25 million from the waiting list fund will enable health authorities to treat over 100,000 additional waiting list cases in 1987-88. These will include several thousand joint replacements and other orthopaedic procedures. The North-East Thames regional health authority is spending £762,500 of its £2·07 million allocations on projects in the trauma and orthopaedic specialty. As a result, its districts plan to treat 1,650 extra cases from orthopaedic waiting lists in 1987-88. By 30 September 1987, 636 of these had already been treated.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of people who received severe weather payments in each month of the winter of 1986-87 for which figures are available; and what proportion of each total were pensioners.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total expenditure on cold weather payments for each of the last five winters for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is as follows:

	£ million
1983	Nil
1984	Nil
1985	1·7
1986	11·6
1987	10·2

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will outline his policy for targeting special winter fuel payments to elderly people and disabled people.

Mr. Scott: Help with heating costs is available each week to supplementary benefit claimants through the weekly scale rates and heating additions. Extra help through the exceptionally cold weather provision has been targeted on groups most at risk from the cold: the elderly, the very young and the sick and disabled.

Ativan

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to limit the availability of the addictive drug Ativan.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 27 October at column 256.

Private Health Care

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each year since 1982-83 the health authorities which have received audit reports critical of their private patient arrangements.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows. The 1986-87 audit is still in progress.

Drugs

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will require all pharmaceutical companies which make payments for adverse reactions from drugs supplied by the National Health Service to inform him of the level and total of payments made, so that his advisers can assess the incidence and severity of the various side effects that have occurred;

(2) if he will ensure that the Committee on Safety of Medicines routinely obtain the scientific evidence that is presented in United States courts when there is a compensation claim following adverse reactions to a drug that also has a British product licence and is, or has been, prescribed for British citizens;

(3) if he will ensure that the Committee on Safety of Medicines routinely obtains any evidence about a pharmaceutical company's integrity that is presented in United States courts when there is a compensation claim following adverse reactions to a drug that also has a British product licence and is or has been prescribed for British citizens;

(4) if, unless there are exceptional circumstances, he will make it a condition of the purchase by the National Health Service of a pharmaceutical company's products that in the event of a company making payments because of adverse reactions from one of its drugs, the company must inform his Department of the nature, scope and cost of the payment scheme;

(5) if, unless there are exceptional circumstances, he will make it a condition of the purchase by the National Health Service of a pharmaceutical company's products that all known medical data or information relating to the company's integrity regarding research findings or adverse reactions reporting should immediately and routinely be reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Mr. Newton: Companies are already required to provide the licensing authority with any evidence that is relevant to their application for a product licence at the time it is submitted. Under the terms of their product licence, they must also report adverse drug reactions and any other evidence which might cast doubt on the validity of the data submitted with their application immediately these are known to them. The licensing authority is concerned with the safety, quality and efficacy of medicinal products. Any question of compensation for adverse drug reactions is a matter for the claimant, the company and the courts. I see no reason to change the current arrangements relating to the purchase of medicinal products by the National Health Service.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will request the Committee on Safety of Medicines to require companies when they warn of uncommon side effects to (a) draw attention to particularly vulnerable groups of people, (b) if the side effects are considered transient, to provide a time scale and (c) give specific descriptions of such side effects rather than use general terms.

Mr. Newton: The data sheets which accompany all medicinal products promoted to doctors must be consistent with the relevant prooduct licences, contain an accurate description of known side effects and, where appropriate, provide warnings about use by particular categories of patient. Appropriate warnings must also appear on produce labels or leaflets accompanying licensed medicinal products. For adverse reactions which are considered transient, a time scale is given where appropriate. I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to him on 9 July 1987 at columns 261-62.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, whenever a drug is withdrawn by the Committee on Safety of Medicines, he will publish the data which led to its withdrawal.

Mr. Newton: Medicinal products are withdrawn either as a result of voluntary action by pharmaceutical companies or the revocation of the product licence by the licensing authorities. In either case, action may be preceded or followed by one or more publications by the Committee on Safety of Medicines, such as "Dear Doctor" letters or "Current Problems", in which the medical profession is informed of data on adverse reactions to the drug. It is the general policy of the Committee on Safety of Medicines, wherever possible, to provide doctors with reasons when medicinal products are withdrawn from the market or are subject to major limitations in their use, providing that to do so would not breach the commercial confidentiality requirements of section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if a product licence is requested for a drug primarily intended for long term use by elderly people; and what are the current criteria laid down by the Committee on Safety of Medicines for the drug trials with respect to (a) the length of the trials and (b) the number and proportion of elderly people involved.

Mr. Newton: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to him on 9 July 1987 at column 261.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how often his Department's statisticians check the validity of significance tests made in drug trials.

Mr. Newton: All data provided in support of any product licence application are rigorously assessed by professional DHSS staff and, when appropriate, by the expert members on the Committee on Safety of Medicines or other appropriate expert committee. Careful consideration of statistical techniques is an important part of this assessment.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what checks are made by the Committee on Safety of Medicines on the data provided by a company applying for a product licence; whether visits are made to the company's premises; whether there is consultation with the United States Food and Drug Administration; and to what extent the reputation of the company is relevant to the acceptance of its data;

(2) if he will appoint Committee on Safety of Medicines investigators with a similar role to the United States Food and Drug investigators to check the validity of pharmaceutical companies research findings and the integrity of their adverse reaction reports;

(3) if he will make it his policy that whenever there is firm evidence that a pharmaceutical company has violated drug regulations either in the United Kingdom or the United States of America, and in particular if it has paid a fine to the United States Food and Drug Administration for doing so, any further applications from such a company will only be accepted after a visit to the research premises and a personal investigation of the relevant records, with the additional cost to be borne by the company.

Mr. Newton: In assessing an application for a product licence, and in monitoring the safety of a medicinal product after marketing, the licensing authority takes into account all relevant factors, including any information provided by other regulatory authorities such as the United States Food and Drug Administration. We have no plans to appoint investigators to check companies' research or their reporting of adverse drug reactions, but if there were any reason to doubt the accuracy of the data supporting a particular licence application, the matter would be rigorously pursued with the company until the issue was resolved to the satisfaction of the licensing authority.

Photosensitivity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information is available on the incidence and severity of photosensitivity; whether the number of sufferers is thought to be increasing or declining; and to what extent the causes are known;

(2) how common is acute long-term photosensitivity; how many and which of the non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs are known to have it as a side effect; and which they are.

Mr. Newton: No specific information is held by the Department on the incidence and severity of photosensitivity or on the number of sufferers. The causes of photosensitivity are well documented as, for example, in "Cutaneous Photobiology" by W. Frain-Bell (Oxford University Press 1985) which can be obtained through the Library of the House. Photosensitivity, in varying degrees and incidence, is acknowledged as a possible side-effect of most of the non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs currently available in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will request the Committee on Safety of Medicines to require companies applying for product licences to investigate photo-toxicity in the toxicity studies; and if he will ensure that all such tests are carried out in the summer months and include vulnerable fair-skinned patients.

Mr. Newton: Although an investigation of phototoxicity is not a general requirement on companies seeking a product licence for a medicinal product, the licensing authority, as advised by the Committee on Safety of Medicines, pays close attention to safety, quality and efficacy whenever an application is considered. If there is doubt about any aspect of safety, including phototoxicity, the company must provide whatever evidence may be needed to reassure the committee and the licensing authority before a licence can be granted.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will initiate discussions with the Association of British Pharmaceutical Industries in order to request the industry to finance research into intractable drug induced disorders, with priority being given to photosensitivity.

Mr. Newton: I have no reason to question the effectiveness of existing arrangements under which pharmaceutical companies already fund a considerable amount of research in academic departments, for a variety of purposes. I will, however, draw the right hon. Member's suggestion to the association's attention.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the research projects supported by his Department that are currently investigating drug-induced photosensitivity.

Mrs. Currie: The Department is not currently supporting any research into drug-induced photosensitivity.

The main Government agency for the promotion of medical and related biological research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science.

Social Fund

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will review the criteria for loans from the social fund.

Mr. Scott: Draft directions and guidance for the award of loans were included in the draft "Social Fund Manual" which was issued to interested parties for comment on 25 March 1987. Careful consideration was given to the views expressed and revised directions and guidance were included in the version of the manual placed in the Library on 9 October, which will be published later this autumn.

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what allocation of money is to be made to the social fund.

Mr. Scott: The national budget for the discretionary part of the social fund in 1988-89, its first year of operation, will be £203 million. £60 million will be allocated for community care grants, £141 million for loans, and £2 million will be held back as a central contingency reserve.

Obstetric Beds

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the percentage occupancy for obstetric beds for each regional health authority for each of the last six years.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

Births

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of (a) low and (b) very low birth weight babies for each district health authority for each of the last six years.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. The recent OPCS Monitor series DH3 87/2, "Infant and Perinatal Mortality 1985: DHAs" gives the percentage of total births weighing less than 2,500 grams for each district health authority for 1985. A copy is in the Library.

Hospital Staffing

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what changes in junior hospital staffing within the National Health Service are envisaged by the Joint Planning Advisory Committee arising from the proposals in the document "Achieving a Balance";

(2) what changes he proposes in junior hospital staffing in the National Health Service as a result of the proposals in the document "Achieving a Balance".

Mr. Newton: The aims of "Achieving a Balance" are to improve patient care by removing the present imbalance in the hospital medical career structure. The package includes various measures to boost the number of consultants and to relate more closely the number of doctors in training grades to expected consultant opportunities. In determining the number of training grade posts needed, the Department will seek advice from the joint planning advisory committee which is already fulfilling this role for senior registrar posts. In most specialties there is likely to be a need to reduce the number of United Kingdom graduates now in the training grades, but their contribution to patient services will be replaced in other ways, for instance by additional consultant posts.

Medical Manpower

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those whom he has consulted on the proposals in the document "Achieving a Balance" in medical manpower.

Mr. Newton: The document was issued for consultation to all regional, district and special health authorities; royal colleges and faculties; family practitioner committees; and community health councils. It was also issued to the main national organisations in the fields of health and medical education, including the British Medical Association, General Medical Council, Medical Research Council, Association of Medical Research Charities, Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals of the Universities of the United Kingdom, Council for Postgraduate Medical Education, University Grants Committee, and a number of associations representing individual medical specialties. In addition, the full text of the consultative document was published in the British Medical Journal.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations his Department has received from social workers specialising in work with kidney patients about changes in social security regulations affecting people on dialysis; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Correspondence was received last year from the renal special interest group of the British Association of Social Workers, and subsequently from the right hon. Member and other hon. Members on behalf of the association and others, about the replacement of the supplementary benefit scheme by the new income support scheme and its effect on kidney patients.

The rates of income support which my right hon. Friend announced on 27 October provide a substantial overall increase for disabled people. Furthermore, those claimants whose income support entitlement is less than their supplementary benefit entitlement at the point of change will have their existing benefit levels maintained. As the right hon. Member is aware, a major survey into the numbers, needs and circumstances of disabled people has been undertaken by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and the first results of this survey will be published next year. The effect of the premium arrangements on the needs of kidney patients will be looked at in the light of these results.

Nurses

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from organisations representing nurses on the proposals for a community charge.

Mr. Portillo: None.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total number of recipients of invalid care allowance at 16 October.

Mr. Scott: At 19 October, the closest date to 16 October for which information is available, there were 88,000 recipients of invalid care allowance.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the cost to public funds of increasing the income disregard in respect of invalid care allowance to (a) £15 per week and (b) £17 per week.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information on which to base an estimate could be extracted only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to shorten the delay in processing claims for invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: Additional resources have recently been devoted to processing claims and the average time taken to clear them is continuing to fall.

Community Charge Rebate Scheme

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he proposes to make a statement on the operation of a community charge rebate scheme.

Mr. Portillo: An announcement will be made in due course. Discussions with the local authority associations on the operation of the community charge rebate scheme are already under way, in the light of which detailed proposals will be put to them as part of the statutory consultation procedure.

Rate Rebates

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the maximum income that would enable the following categories to qualify for rate rebates now: (a) a single person under 24 years; (b) a single person 25 years and over; (c) a married couple with no children; (d) a married couple with two dependent chidren; (e) a pensioner couple; and (f) a single pensioner: and what changes he proposes to make to these limits in the context of community charge rebates.

Mr. Portillo: There is no specified maximum income level at which people cease to qualify for a rate rebate, and in any individual case this will depend partly on the size of the original rates bill. From 1988, the starting point for calculating rate rebates in the majority of cases will be the income support "applicable amounts", which will determine the relative level of rebate for the categories specified at a given level of income and a given domestic rates bill. How far above his applicable amount a person's rebate runs out, for a given rates bill, will be determined by the rate "taper". We expect similar arrangements to apply to community charge rebates but the relevant applicable amounts and taper will not be set until nearer the time.

Mersey Region (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what the waiting lists in the Mersey region were in the each of the years from 1979 to the present.

Mr. Newton: The information requested in given in the table.

Number of cases on in-patient waiting list at 31 March, NHS Hospitals, Mersey Regional Health Authority

Year	Number
1979	41,103
1980	36,547
1981	33,082
1982	33,206
1983	36,187
1984	32,271
1985	30,767
1986	30,779
1987	29,147

Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's consultation with the local authority associations and the voluntary sector on further implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: I cannot yet add to my reply to the hon. Members for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) and for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 27 October at column 254.

Pregnancy Advice Bureaux

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, if he will give a breakdown of the fees of which he is aware which are charged by the pregnancy advice bureaux and abortion clinics.

Mr. Newton: Information on fees charged by individual bureaux and clinics is supplied to the Department on an "in confidence" basis. My hon. Friend may wish to approach these organisations direct for this information.

Abortion

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, what is the percentage of women who are referred for abortions by each abortion agency of which his Department's investigative officers are aware.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, whether the figure of 74 per cent. of abortions after 18 weeks being performed upon single women includes married women who are separated from their husbands.

Mr. Newton: No.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, if he will supply a list of the names and addresses of the proprietors of those abortion agencies and clinics which are linked financially to the knowledge of his Department;

(2) pursuant to his reply of October, at column 175, if he will list the eight abortion agencies which have financial links with abortion clinics, stating in each case the number of places where counselling is undertaken and the number of clinics involved;

(3) pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, if he will describe the scale and precise nature of the financial links between the eight abortion agencies and clinics in such a manner so as not to identify the eight agencies concerned.

Mr. Newton: It is not possible to publish details of the links between abortion counselling agencies and approved nursing homes without releasing details which are provided to the Department in confidence. My hon. Friend may wish to approach abortion counselling agencies direct for this information.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, when he expects the publication of the paper currently being prepared by the Manchester research unit of the Royal College of General Practitioners on post-abortion stress disorder.

Mr. Newton: I understand that the paper is likely to be published early next year.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, whether he has any information concerning the revenue generated by the 99·7 per cent of abortions upon foreign women which were performed in the private clinics in 1986.

Mr. Newton: No.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, whether he has any plans to review his Department's current practice of not recording details of the after-care provided to non-resident patients who have abortions in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, whether he has any plans to introduce a requirement for an information sheet and discharge letter in their native language to be provided to all non-resident women upon whom abortions are performed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: We are satisfied that this is already done as good medical practice, and have no plans to make it a statutory requirement.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those agencies which are currently licensed by his Department to counsel or refer women for abortions stating in each case the total number of women whom they dealt with in the latest year for which figures are available and state the number of those women who were referred for abortions.

Mr. Newton: Pregnancy advisory bureaux currently registered with the Department are listed as follows. Information on the numbers of women dealt with is not available centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, if he will list the abortion agencies and clinics which are run by the 32 individuals of whom his Department is aware who are both directors or trustees of a company or charity providing abortion counselling and also of a clinic providing abortions; and if he will list the names of those individuals.

Mr. Newton: This information, like any commercial information, was supplied to the Department on an "in confidence" basis and is therefore not for publication.

Mr Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, if he will list the names and addresses of each abortion agency or clinic from which a licence has been withdrawn in the last 20 years following the discovery of breaches of the requirement to notify changes in financial arrangements.

Mr. Newton: No approved place has had its approval withdrawn for the reasons stated.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, whether he has any plans to make it a requirement for doctors working on a salaried basis at an abortion agency not also to perform abortions on these patients in a nursing home or clinic.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Nicholas Winteron asked the Secretary of State for Social Services. pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, if he will explain how patient confidentiality would be breached by disclosing the numbers of abortions performed in each year after 18 weeks gestation in emergency to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Newton: Where small numbers are involved, it is possible that disclosure of information in detail would, when compared with figures already published, reveal sensitive information about individuals to persons with other knowledge of them. It is therefore policy to disclose information only in a form which minimises this risk . This policy was followed by giving grouped data in the reply of 26 October.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, why reliable information concerning the number of abortions performed in the case of rape has not been available for the past 20 years; and if he will give the details of the changes which are now being introduced to remedy this.

Mr. Newton: The Abortion Act 1967 does not require a certifying doctor to specifically mention cases of rape on the notification form, but in some cases the information is volunteered. Furthermore, until 1979 only medical conditions directly affecting the foetus were coded and analysed. The information obtained of cases of rape was, therefore, necessarily incomplete.

Between 1979 and 1986 the medical condition of the woman was also coded, but mentions of rape were not always separately identified. From 1987 onwards all mentions of rape will be separately coded and analysed.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, at column 175, if he will give a breakdown of the average cost of £170 of performing an abortion on the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: These detailed costs are not centrally identified.

Census

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is planning to hold a census in Great Britain in 1991.

Mr. Moore: Yes. My predecessor announced on 14 July 1983 (Official Report Vol. 45, col. 452) that planning would proceed on the basis that the next census would be in 1991. The need for information on the population and alternative ways to gather it were subsequently examined, and it has been concluded that a census should be held in England, Wales and Scotland in 1991. The Registrars General have arranged for there to be consultations about the census with a wide range of users of census statistics, and submissions to them from any source are welcome. Proposals for the content of the census will be published as a White Paper next year.

Brain Death

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are estimated to die from brain death in hospital annually; and of these how many could be regarded as potential organ donors.

Mrs. Currie: No recent estimates of the nationwide incidence of brain stem death have been made. However, a study published in 1981 estimated that about 4,000 cases of brain stem death occurred annually in Great Britain.

The proportion of such patients who could be regarded as potential organ donors is not known.

Steroids

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what compensation has been made available for people who have suffered serious side effects from taking steroids, particularly when these drugs were first marketed.

Mr. Newton: Questions of compensation for individuals are matters to be pursued with the companies concerned and where necessary through the courts. Information about individual compensation settlements is not collected centrally.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice has been issued to regional health authorities about safe dosages of steroids; and what warnings about side effects are required to be given by doctors to patients who have been prescribed these drugs.

Mr. Newton: No special advice about safe dosages of steroids has been issued to regional health authorities. The British National Formulary, which is sent to all doctors, contains advice on safe dosages and on appropriate and inappropriate uses of steroids. Guidance on use and details of known side-effects are also contained in the data sheets which are supplied to all doctors for medicinal products, such as steroids, which are available only on prescription. It is for doctors to decide in each case what warnings about side-effects should be given to patients.

Hospital Complaints Procedure Act

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the Hospital Complaints Procedure Act to be implemented in National Health Service hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: Directions to health authorities on non-clinical complaints are being prepared and should be issued by the end of the year.

Discussions on the inclusion of clinical complaints procedures within these directions are continuing with the joint consultants committee.

Human Organs (Transplantation)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what instructions have been sent to regional health authorities about introducing the required request procedure to increase the supply of human organs for transplant.

Mrs. Currie: We have received advice from the medical royal colleges, and are currently considering what action we should ask health authorities to take.

Hospital Waiting Lists (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide figures for each district health authority in London of the numbers currently waiting for hospital treatment.

Mr. Newton: The latest information available centrally is included in a bound volume of the hospital waiting lists for health authorities in England at 31 March 1987, copies of which have been placed in the Library. For current information the hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the four Thames regional health authorities.

Means-Tested Benefits

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what measures he now proposes to introduce to reduce the number of people dependent on means-tested benefits;

(2) what steps he proposes to take to reduce the number of people dependent on means-tested benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: From next September, we will be removing the general eligibility of unemployed young people aged 16 and 17 for income support, guaranteeing a place on the youth training scheme for those who are not in full-time education and do not go into a job. Futhermore the introduction of the reformed structure of income-related benefits will help ensure better targeting of available resources on those facing the greatest needs. Amongst those in least need and entitled to smaller amounts, around 1 million fewer are expected to receive housing benefit. Family credit will extend improved help to over twice as many low income working families with children compared with family income supplement.

Deaf People (Telephones)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what priority for action has been given to funding of the Royal National Institute for the Deaf for funding a telephone exchange for deaf people, following his meeting with myself and representatives of the institute on 5 August; what subsequent meetings have been held, and when he expects to arrive at his decision.

Mr. Scott: We have been actively pursuing the question of the exchange's future funding. I understand that there was a meeting between the Royal National Institute for the Deaf and British Telecom last month. Officials from the Department will be meeting representatives of British Telecom and the other Government Departments concerned on 3 November. I shall make an announcement as soon as a decision has been reached.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many haemophiliacs have been infected by AIDS during the past 12 months following blood transfusions at National Health Service hospitals; and if compensation will be paid.

Mr. Newton: No haemophiliac patients are known to have been infected with the AIDS virus following the use of blood transfusions or blood products in the past 12 months.

AIDS

Mr. Simon Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from organisations or individuals on the plight of those infected with the AIDS virus as a result of treatment under the NHS, and what plans he has to respond to requests for assistance with the cost of treatment, including travel expenses.

Mr. Newton: We have received approximately 200 written representations from individuals and organisations on this issue. All the facilities of the NHS are available to those who have been infected with HIV. Help with fares to hospital is available for those who are eligible under the provisions of the National Health Service (Expenses in Attending Hospital) Regulations, 1950.

Single Payments (Scotland)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total amount of single payments paid to claimants in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde region and (c) Scotland in the financial years 1979-80 to 1986-87.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 October]: The amount of single payments paid to claimants in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde region and (c) Scotland in the financial years 1979-80 to 1986-87 is shown in the table. The figures include both full and partial awards.

Year (April to April)	Scotland £	Strathclyde £	Greenock £	Port Glasgow £
1979-80	10,019,290	6,626,140	103,447	90,184
1980-81	14,123,563	9,847,098	289,568	199,653

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Servants (Merit Awards)

79. Mr. Dalyell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further proposals he has for merit awards to civil servants.

Mr. Brooke: Performance-related pay arrangements for grades 2 and 3 and an interim scheme for grades 4 to 7 are now in place. The new flexible pay system for scientific, professional and technical grades includes performance-related pay provisions which come into effect on 1 April 1988.

It remains our intention to extend performance pay in the Civil Service and we shall be bringing forward further proposals for the inclusion of other groups of staff.

Civil Servants (Departmental Regional Offices)

80. Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the change in the proportion of civil servants working in departmental regional offices since 1980.

Mr. Major: The proportion of all non-industrial home civil servants working in Birmingham has risen from 1·6 per cent. in January 1980 to 1·7 per cent. in January 1987.

VAT (Spectacles)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has yet received the decision of the European Court of Justice on the issue of the levying of value added tax on spectacles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The judgment of the European Court has not yet been received; it is expected before Christmas.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate, for each of the last three financial years and in estimate form for the current financial year, the reduction in the public sector borrowing requirement which has accrued from the removal of the capital borrowing requirements of privatised industries into the private sector; and if he will break this down on an enterprise by enterprise basis.

Mr. Major: The nationalised industries' contribution to the public sector borrowing requirement is defined as the sum of their external financing requirements. The Government cannot provide estimates, which would be purely hypothetical, of what the financing requirements of privatised companies might have been had they been still in the public sector. Details of the industries' external finance up to the point of privatisation are published in the public expenditure White Paper for the following year; provisional outturns are first published in the cash limits provisional outturn White Paper.

Civil Servants (Computer Training)

Mr. Warren asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the survey conducted by the CCTA on the training of civil servants in the use of computer systems; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library when it is published.

Mr. Brooke: I am not aware of a specific survey on this subject, but, if my hon. Friend cares to write to me with further details, I will seek to assist him.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mrs. Gorman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he intends to take to rectify the anomaly whereby two or more people can each obtain tax relief on the same property while married couples are limited to a single amount of relief.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 29 October to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin).

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Fraser asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to propose to his fellow Ministers in the European Community that the Community encourages the conversion of loans to the poor countries of sub-Saharan Africa to grants; and if he will propose to them other steps to relieve the burden of that part of the world.

Mr. Lilley: Most of our European Community partners have already converted their old aid loans to grants for the poorest and most heavily indebted countries in sub-Saharan Africa as the United Kingdom has done. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will continue to press for further support from all Paris Club creditors for this proposal and also for his proposal to reduce the interest rate charged on rescheduled officially guaranteed debt. The Paris Club has already implemented the third part of my right hon. Friend's plan to help sub-Saharan Africa. To date, five African countries have been granted longer repayment periods when rescheduling through the Paris Club.

Charities

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each of the last three years, with an estimate for 1987-88, (a) the number of charitable organisations which have had applications for refund of tax on renewal covenants refused by the Inland Revenue, (b) the income lost to these charities by these refusals and (c) the number of individuals who thereby find the value of their payments to the charities reduces.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that the information requested is not available.

BP Share Offer

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will make a statement as to whether the Government intend to indemnify financial institutions in the United States and the United Kingdom involved in the protection of BP agent cases arising from their underwriting commitments;

(2) whether he will place in the Library a copy of the contract terms entered into by Her Majesty's Government with Goldman Sachs, Morgan Stanley, Sheerson Lehman and Salomon Brothers for the underwriting of the BP share flotation.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 October 1987]: A copy of the United Kingdom underwriting agreement and the international offer agreement for the BP sale have been placed in the Library.

Women

39. Ms. Primarolo asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to the proportion of orchestral players in orchestras receiving financial support from the Arts Council that are women.

Mr. Luce: The proportion varies widely between orchestras. The average is about 20 per cent.

40. Ms. Walley asked the Minister for the Arts when he last met (a) the Woman's Playhouse trust, (b) the standing conference of woman theatre directors and administrators and (c) the Campaign for Real Equality in Equity to discuss the position of women in the theatre.

Mr. Luce: I have not met any of these organisations, but I support equality of opportunity in the arts.

41. Ms. Abbott asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has to the proportion of the total number of plays produced at theatres receiving financial support from the Arts Council that were by women writers, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Luce: This information is not held centrally. An alternative indicator is the premieres of new plays by women authors, as a percentage of all premiers:

	Per cent.
1982-83	11·8
1983-84	11·0
1984-85	10·6
1985-86	14·0
1986-87	18·0

42. Mrs. Golding asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many members of the board of the National Theatre, the Royal Shakespeare Company and the Royal Opera House are women.

Mr. Luce: Three, nine and one, respectively.

43. Ms. Short asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he will take to help implement the Arts Council's equal opportunities policy statement in relation to the employment of women.

Mr. Luce: The council has my warm support in its policy of equal opportunities for women.

I have taken direct action by asking all those responsible for making submissions on appointments, or nominations for appointment, to the boards of arts bodies I sponsor to ensure that the names of suitable women are included in future short lists.

45. Mrs. Ann Taylor asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he will take to help implement the recommendations of the Cork report, "Theatre is for All", that there should be equal opportunity for women in all aspects of theatre.

54. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he will take to help implement the recommendations of the Cork report, "Theatre is for All", that a higher priority should be given to women in new writing and project schemes.

Mr. Luce: I agree with the objectives of these recommendations, but action on them is a matter for the bodies concerned.

46. Miss Lestor asked the Minister for the Arts how many members of the boards of (a) the Arts Council, (b) the Crafts Council and (c) the Museum and Galleries Commission are women.

Mr. Luce: Three women are members of the Arts Council, six women are members of the Crafts Council and there is one women commissioner in the Museums and Galleries Commission.

47. Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many chief librarians of public library authorities in England and Wales are women.

Mr. Luce: Since it is the responsibility of local authorities to appoint staff to their public libraries, no records are kept centrally.

48. Mrs. Fyfe asked the Minister for the Arts how many women are on the Scottish Arts Council or the Scottish Film Council.

Mr. Luce: Three and four, respectively.

50. Ms. Harman asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many exhibitions by women artists have been mounted at the Hayward gallery in each of the last five years.

Mr. Luce: Exhibitions which included work of women artists in each of the last five years are as follows:

	Number
1982	2
1983	2
1984	—
1985	2
1986	4

52. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many women film directors received financial support from the British Film Institute in each of the last five years.

Mr. Luce: Between the period 1982-86 a total of 40 films were produced by the British Film Institute; women directors benefited from funding in each year, as follows:

	Number
1982	2
1983	3
1984	1
1985	2
	9

53. Mr. Boyes asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to the number of women photographers who received financial support from the Arts Council or from regional arts associations in each of the last five years.

Mr. Luce: The information requested is as follows:

Number of women photographers receiving financial support

	Arts Council	Regional Arts Associations
1982-83	1	2
1983-84	1	—
1984-85	1	—
1985-86	—	2
1986-87	4	3

56. Miss Mowlam asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many building-based theatre companies have women artistic directors or general managers.

Mr. Luce: Five building-based theatre companies funded by the Arts Council or by regional arts associations have women artistic directors and 10 have women administrators.

57. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Minister for the Arts how many women are on (a) the Welsh Arts Council, (b) the board of the National Museum of Wales and (c) the board of the Welsh National Opera Company.

Mr. Luce: Three women are members of the Welsh Arts Council, two women are on the board of the National Museum of Wales and one woman is on the board of the Welsh National Opera Company.

59. Ms. Quin asked the Minister for the Arts how many directors of national museums are women.

Mr. Luce: Currently none, but Mrs. Esteve-Coll, director-designate of the Victoria and Albert museum will be taking up her post shortly.

60. Ms. Armstrong asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many women are either directors or deputy directors of regional arts associations.

Mr. Luce: There are no female directors of regional arts associations at present, but seven assistant directors, one deputy director and one head of administration are women.

61. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the number of women writers and producers who have been financially supported by the British Film Institute in the last five years.

Mr. Luce: During this period 21 women have produced or co-produced films for the British Film Institute and nine women writers have received funding.

62. Mrs. Wise asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many technicians are women in performing arts companies receiving financial support from the Arts Council and regional arts associations.

Mr. Luce: This information is not held centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

63. Mrs. Beckett asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many slides of work by women artists are on sale to the general public at the Tate gallery and the National gallery.

Mr. Luce: Twenty-one at the Tate gallery and four at the National gallery.

Women

64. Mr. Fatchett asked the Minister for the Arts how many heads of department at the Arts Council are women.

Mr. Luce: Three.

Visits

65. Mr. Robert G. Hughes asked the Minister for the Arts if he will list, by region, the arts bodies he has visited in the last 12 months.

Mr. Luce: I have visited the following arts bodies and functions:

Touring Exhibitions

66. Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Minister for the Arts whether he supports the objective of touring exhibitions from the great London collections to other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Luce: I do. The Government are committed to encouraging our great national museums and galleries to make the treasures in their care more widely accessible. The Government indemnity scheme has done much to encourage the lending of objects from the nationals, and between museums generally. I hope that the unit to be set up by the Museums and Galleries Commission in the course of this financial year will be similarly successful in stimulating the creation and use of touring exhibitions.

Theatre Touring

67. Mr. Key asked the Minister for the Arts what action is being taken to encourage theatre touring.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council is giving priority to the expansion and encouragement of theatre touring. Besides its day-to-day encouragement of touring opera, dance and drama at all levels, the council is planning to establish an independent production company, for which it will provide one third of the investment required. The remainder of the money, which will come from private sources, will thus be new money available to promote up to six new touring productions annually. The return earned by the productions will be available for reinvestment in future events.

I am greatly encouraged by the practical steps being taken by the Arts Council to enlarge its touring base, and I look forward to the development of similar schemes in other fields.

Payroll Giving

68. Mr. Page asked the Minister for the Arts whether arts bodies have taken full advantage of the payroll giving scheme.

Mr. Luce: The payroll giving scheme was introduced only on 6 April this year, and it is too early to say to what extent arts bodies have been able to benefit from it. I shall keep the position under review.

Museums and Galleries

69. Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Minister for the Arts what is the latest number of museums and galleries in the United Kingdom; and what is his estimate of the annual number of visits to them.

Mr. Luce: A survey by the Museums Association in May 1985 recorded 2,131 museums and galleries in the United Kingdom. The information held on the Museums Association database suggests that some 73 million visits were made to museums and galleries in 1986 — an increase of 5 million over 1985.

Royal Opera House

70. Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Minister for the Arts what is the present position on the development scheme of the Royal Opera House.

Mr. Luce: I am still considering the revised proposals for the development of the Covent Garden site, in so far as they affect my responsibilities under the development land trust deed. However, I understand that the Covent Garden Community Association has been granted a right of appeal against the development in the High Court, and it would be inappropriate for me to comment further at this time.

Theatre (Training Schemes)

Mr. Blair asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he will take to help implement the recommendations of the Cole report "Theatre is for All" that there should be a 50:50 ratio of men and women in training schemes.

Mr. Luce: The report was commissioned by the Arts Council, and it is for it to implement the recommendations it has endorsed.

In 1986-87, 42 awards for training schemes were made, of which 25 were to women and 17 to men, a ratio of about 60:40.

Women's Theatre Companies

44. Ms. Ruddock asked the Minister for the Arts what support women's theatre companies received from the Arts Council in the last financial year; and what proportion of the total funding of theatre companies this represents.

Mr. Luce: In 1986-87 two women's theatre companies (Monstrous Regiment and Women's Theatre Group) received joint funding of £140,000, which represents 1·2 per cent. of the Arts Council's allocation for drama, excluding the national companies. In addition, the Arts Council funded three women's theatre projects:

Theatre of Black Women
Blood Group
Women's Comedy Workshop.

Funding for these projects totalled £36,270 or 4·6 per cent. of the Arts Council's projects allocation.

Regional Arts

58. Mr. Matthew Taylor asked the Minister for the Arts if he will outline his plans to encourage the arts in the regions.

Mr. Luce: I welcome the shift of resources from London to the regions which has taken place as a result of the "Glory of the Garden" report.

As I outlined in my speech to the Council of Regional Arts Associations' conference at Newcastle, I intend to place increasing emphasis on the plural funding of the arts, in the regions as in London.

Arts Marketing Scheme

49. Mr. Butler asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the progress of his arts marketing scheme.

Mr. Luce: I was pleased to announce on 30 July 22 awards to arts organisations under the scheme, reflecting a variety of innovative marketing techniques. I shall be interested to follow their progress and see how successful they are.

There was a good response, with over 200 applications, but some showed a need to improve marketing expertise. I have therefore offered a one-day professional consultancy to the unsuccessful applicants.

The scheme was experimental for one year. I do not believe it should be continued in its present form in 1988-89. I am now actively considering how I can follow it up to encourage arts bodies to market themselves more effectively in other ways.

Funding

51. Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister for the Arts what studies his Department has conducted into the effect on the arts in Britain of the present level of funding for the current year.

Mr. Luce: I do not believe that my Department should attempt to duplicate research carried out by independent bodies. I am currently helping to fund two projects by the Policy Studies Institute. One is a research study into the economic impact of the arts, the results of which are to be published early in 1988. The other project is the third in the series "Facts about the Arts", the aim of which is to present a comprehensive picture, in tables and narrative, of the arts scene, at a particular date, but also to give an indication of general trends.

Museums

55. Mr. Beith asked the Minister for the Arts what recent discussions he has had with representatives of museums in the public and private sectors.

Mr. Luce: I meet representatives of all sectors of the museums world both in London and during my regional visits. Most recently I attended the opening of the Winterhalter exhibition at the national portrait gallery. During November I look forward to visiting the national history museum's geological museum, and to seeing a number of museum developments outside London.

ENVIRONMENT

Nuclear Waste

77. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy on the question of the elimination of radioactive discharges from nuclear plants.

Mr. Moynihan: The total elimination of radioactivity in discharges from nuclear plants is impossible. Government policy is to ensure that discharges are reduced to levels which are as low as reasonably achievable. The authorising Departments are currently engaged on a programme of reviewing the liquid and gaseous authorisations for all nuclear installations in the United Kingdom, but operators are required to ensure the best practicable means to improve performance within the discharge limits set.

Privatisation

Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have invited tenders for the following services (a) street cleansing, (b) refuse collection, (c) the provision of school meals; and what information he has on the outside tenders compared with those from in house direct labour organisations.

Mr. Chope: The Department does not collect systematic data on these matters but much useful information can be found in the annual surveys of contracting out which have appeared in "Local Government Chronicle"; and in the newsletter "Public Service Review" published by the Public Service Research Centre.

Planning Applications

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the discussions between his Department's planning inspectorate and local planning authorities regarding delays in dealing with planning applications.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend's view is that authorities should normally be able to decide at least 80 per cent. of applications made to them within the statutory eight-week period. The latest figures show that approximately 65 per cent. of applications are decided within that period. We publish quarterly statistics of performance and encourage authorities with the poorest levels of performance to improve their handling of applications. The National Development Control Forum is shortly to publish guidelines on the handling of planning applications.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Blunkett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that tenants of local authority housing will not be transferred to housing action trusts without their own or the local authority's consent.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend will consult the relevant local authorities and inform local residents when he decides to seek parliamentary approval for the designation of an area as a housing action trust, but the final decision on whether to seek designation of a particular area must remain his.

Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978

Mr. Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect the community charge proposals will have on the provisions of the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978.

Mr. Howard: Under the domestic rating system, rateable values are increased to take account of extensions and alterations to property. Rate relief is granted to disabled people to ensure that they do not have to pay higher bills as a result of modifications needed to their homes as a result of their disability. A similar provision will not be needed with the community charge, because improvements to people's homes will not affect the level of the charge.

Disabled relief will continue in respect on non-domestic hereditaments.

Pollution

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimate of future British sulphur emissions for the years 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990 through to 1995; and how this compares with all other Western European countries.

Mr. Moynihan: The level of future sulphur emissions will depend on factors such as future economic growth and energy demand, and estimates are therefore subject to considerable uncertainty. Official United Kingdom estimates, expressed, as a range, are available only for the years 1990 and 2000, as follows:

	(000 tonnes SO_2)
1990	3,400-4,200
2000	2,600-3,500

In 1986 the executive body of the convention on long-range transboundary air pollution completed a major review of national strategies and policies for air pollution abatement, in the course of which estimates of future SO_2 emissions were provided by most European countries. I am arranging to place a copy of the report[1] in the Library.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the proposed National Rivers Authority will be freed from public sector borrowing requirement restrictions.

Mr. Moynihan: No; the National Rivers Authority will be subject to financial controls equivalent to those applying to similar public bodies.

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has proposals for establishing criteria for a charging policy by the proposed National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Moynihan: This is one of the issues being considered in the light of comments received on the consultation paper on the National Rivers Authority issued by the Government in July.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount and type from 1983 to 1986 of hazardous waste imported into the United Kingdom for each year and the total amount of hazardous waste imported, and the categories, for 1979.

Mr. Moynihan: There are no details held centrally of types of hazardous waste imported into the United Kingdom, or of total amounts imported before 1981. The following are the amounts of special waste imported each year between 1983 and 1986:

	Tonnes
1983	14,824
1984	5,000
1985	24,548
1986	53,000

Broadwater Farm

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list all moneys paid either to Haringey council for use on projects on the Broadwater Farm estate, or to the Broadwater Farm youth association, by his Department in the last three years, giving revenue and capital expenditures and the amounts and projects in each case.

Mr. Trippier: Over the past three years the following urban programme funding approvals have been given, by my Department for projects at Broadwater Farm estate. Those projects involving direct funding for the youth association are asterisked. The remainder are those of Haringey borough council.

	£	1985-86	£	1986-87	£	1987-88
Willan Road Nursery	50,000	Revenue	50,000	Revenue	55,000	Revenue
Broadwater Farm Youth Association*	47,852	Revenue	48,852	Revenue	49,852	Revenue
Broadwater Farm Tenants Association		—	19,050	Revenue	18,050	Revenue
			7,150	Capital
Broadwater Farm Nursery Classes	39,600	Revenue		—		—
Broadwater Farm Skills Survey	12,000	Revenue		—		—
Broadwater Farm Holiday Projects*	9,500	Revenue		—	2,500	Revenue
Broadwater Farm Enterprise Workshops		—		—	400,000	Capital

Estate Action resources have also been allocated to Haringey borough council over the past two years in support of a range of capital housing works on Broadwater Farm.

1986-87

£646,989 supporting works including
- Anti-graffiti painting
- Security Works
- New Lighting
- Improvements to tower block
- Landscaping for children's day centre
- Improvements to tenants room
- Alarm systems for the elderly

1987-88

£359,533 allocated to date and supporting works including
- Improvements to the estates management office
- Landscaping and community gardens
- Anti-graffiti painting

Irish in Britain Representation Group

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how much each of the London boroughs, of Haringey, Camden, Islington and Hackney has paid in grants to the Irish in Britain Representation Group, stating capital and revenue grants; and if he will make a statement.

---

[1] "National Strategies and Policies for Air Pollution Abatement" (annex, Table 1). Convention on long-range Transboundary Air Pollution, United Nations, New York, 1987.

Mr. Chope: None, since the Department does not collect systematic information about discretionary grants by local authorities.

Gipsies

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what notifications have been received from Calderdale and Kirklees regarding the provision of gipsy sites in each local authority area; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: I am informed that Calderdale and Kirklees are currently considering the provision of gipsy sites in their areas.

Station Site (Bradford)

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, South on 26 October, what reasons were given for the rejection by the Property Services Agency of a rail link sharing the former Bradford Exchange station site with a courthouse; whether at any stage a threat was made expressly or by implication that the courthouse project would be moved to Kirklees if the Property Service Agency's views were not accepted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The advice that the Property Services Agency gave to the City of Bradford metropolitan district council was that, in its professional judgment, the site could not accommodate both a rail link and a courthouse to meet the requirements of the Lord Chancellor's Department. The decision on the appropriate use of the site was a matter for the council.

Defective Housing

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what further consultations have taken place between officials of his Department and Walsall metropolitan borough council regarding the state of the Wimpey no fines properties in the Blakenall area of the borough.

Mr. Waldegrave: There have been no further discussions since the Department's officers met Walsall metropolitan borough council on 16 September to discuss its overall housing programme; the matters discussed there, including the condition of Wimpey no fines properties, will be taken into account when we decide the HIP allocations for 1988-89.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is intended for the Minister for Housing or another Minister in his Department to visit the Wimpey no fines properties in Walsall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no current plans to do so; however, as my reply to the hon. Member of 21 October explained (Vol. 120, Cols. 829-830), the Department's officials are keeping Ministers fully informed of the position.

Rating Reform

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received from local authorities (a) supporting and (b) opposing the introduction of the community charge as a replacement for domestic rates.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) on 24 July (Vol. 120, col.722).

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he proposes to specify the terms and conditions of appointment of community charge registration officers;

(2) whether he will permit authorities to nominate existing officers appointed under section 151 of the Local Government Act 1972 as community charge registration officers.

Mr. Ridley: I intend to provide that the community charge registration officer for a local authority will be the person who has responsibility for administering the authority's financial affairs under section 151 of the Local Government Act 1972.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the proposed duties of the community charge registration officer.

Mr. Ridley: The registration officer will be under a duty to compile and maintain an accurate and up-to-date register of all those who are liable to pay community charges in the area of his authority.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it will be a matter for the community charge registration officer or the local authority to decide matters of policy and resourcing relating to the task of community charge registration.

Mr. Ridley: Registration officers will be responsible for compiling and maintaining community charge registers. Local authorities will be required to provide registration officers with sufficient resources to carry out those functions.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters he has received on his proposals to reform local government finance since June 1987; what percentage of these letters he estimates to be in favour of his proposals; and what percentage of these letters he estimates to be opposed to his proposals.

Mr. Ridley: Since June 1987 my Department has received more than 3,000 letters about specific aspects of our proposals and requests for further information. Those who have written were neither invited to, nor on the whole did they, express a view on the proposals as a whole.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each local authority (a) the number of persons he estimates would be liable to pay the community charge and (b) the number of community charge payers whom he expects to receive assistance with the community charge by a rebate system.

Mr. Ridley: I have today placed in the Library the adult population figures underlying the community charge exemplifications which I published on 29 June (Vol. 118, c. 44). It is not possible to make reliable estimates of the numbers of people likely to be eligible for community charge rebates in each area.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to make a statement on the proposed treatment of the Corporation of the City of London for the purposes of community charge and non-domestic rates.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. The City of London is unique among local authorities in its very small resident population combined with its need to provide services for a large daytime inflow of commuters. It is also unique in that the city retains a "business vote". In the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) it was accepted that special arrangements would be required for the City of London. My officials have therefore discussed with the corporation and with the local authority associations proposals to allow the corporation to levy a small variable non-domestic rate provided a pre-determined proportion of expenditure is met by community charge payers. There will be arrangements to offset the contribution from city non-domestic ratepayers to city expenditure from their contribution to the national non-domestic rate pool.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each local authority (a) the number of electors, (b) the number of domestic ratepayers who (i) now pay full rates, (ii) now pay part rates because of assistance by rate rebates and (iii) now pay no rates because of assistance by rate rebates and (c) the number of spouses or partners of domestic ratepayers who would be jointly and severally liable for the rates bill had the provisions he proposes for joint and several liability of community charge applied to rates.

Mr. Ridley: I have today placed in the Library the available information for each local authority on the numbers of domestic properties liable for rates and the numbers of ratepayers receiving full and partial rebates.

The number of electors in each local authority area is published in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys monitor EL/87/1, available from the Library.

Precise information on the number of ratepayers' spouses or partners who would be jointly and severally liable for the rates bill is not available. However the 1981 census county reports, available from the Library, show in table 39 numbers of people living with spouses in each local authority area.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the estimated costs incurred since June on promoting his proposals for local government finance reform, itemising separately (a) publications, (b) videos and similar material and (c) promotional tours by Ministers.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 29 October to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett).

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the latest figures he has for poll taxes, expressed both as total revenue and the charge per adult in £ sterling, in (a) Japan, (b) the Canadian provinces and (c) any other countries;

(2) what information he has as to how many Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries do not have a tax on residential or domestic property.

Mr. Ridley: The most recent data we have are contained in annex K to the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd 9714).

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans to monitor the current year's electoral registration process to discern whether the prospect of a community charge is resulting in a change in the numbers of electors registered.

Mr. Ridley: No.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report the numbers of staff, their grades and duties working on the implementation of his proposals to reform local government finance.

Mr. Ridley: The following staff in my Department are engaged on all aspects of the reform of local government finance.

Grade	Full time	Part time
Grade 3	—	2
Grade 4	—	1
Grade 5	3	3
Grade 6	1	—
Grade 7	5	5
SEO	1	2
HEO	7	3
EO	5	2
AO	3	2
AA	2	—
PS	3	1
Typist	2	—
Total	32	21

A number of staff in other Government Departments are also involved, as part of their other duties, in this area of work.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether estimates of the adult population used for revenue support grant and distribution of the proceeds of the national non-domestic rate pool will include students and persons who are exempt from paying community charge.

Mr. Ridley: I have yet to make proposals on the estimates of adult population to be used for the purposes of distributing revenue support grant and the proceeds of the national non-domestic rate pool. I intend, however, that these estimates should take account of the fact that students will pay a reduced community charge and that other categories will be exempt from paying the community charge.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the full-time equivalent of the numbers of staff of his Department employed on dealing with correspondence from the general public in relation to his proposals to reform local government finance.

Mr. Ridley: There are approximately 13½ staff (fte) involved in answering correspondence on rate reform. This includes both correspondence from Members of Parliament and the general public. Answering the inordinate number of parliamentary questions from the hon. Gentleman of course imposes considerable additional burden on my Department's resources.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the sources of the estimates of adult population by local authorities for the purposes of (a) revenue support grant and (b) distribution of the proceeds from the national non-domestic rate pool.

Mr. Ridley: No decision has yet been made as to the sources from which esimates of adult population should be drawn.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to deal with the rating of new domestic property during the period of phasing out rates.

Mr. Ridley: I must ask the hon. Gentleman to await the publication of the legislation.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to give any assistance to local authorities whose areas contain large numbers of students to meet the cost of expenditure above that which would be financed by the basic community charge.

Mr. Ridley: The revenue support grant system will compensate fully for differences between authorities up to the level of their assessed need to spend; the full cost of expenditure above that level will fall on local charge payers.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to discuss with local government and in what forum the proposals for a community charge rebate scheme.

Mr. Ridley: We are considering, with the local authority associations, the most appropriate forum for future discussions on the community charge rebate system.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Commission for Racial Equality on the effect of his community charge proposals on families from the ethnic minorities.

Mr. Ridley: None.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the average community charge to be paid by student nurses living in hospitals attached to teaching hospitals in inner London.

Mr. Ridley: I placed illustrative community charge figures for all local authorities, including inner London boroughs, in the Library on 29 June.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to change the financial limits measured in terms of a penny rate product if his proposals to change the system of local government finance are carried through.

Mr. Ridley: No decisions have yet been taken on this matter, but appropriate arrangements will be proposed.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for reviewing rateable value limits in the Leasehold Reform Act when domestic rates are replaced by the poll tax.

Mr. Waldegrave: I propose to issue shortly a consultation paper on the implications for the Leasehold Reform Act 1967 and other landlord and tenant legislation of the proposed abolition of domestic rates.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, Official Report, columns 39-40, giving figures of gainers and losers by households in England on the introduction of the full community charge, he will make a statement showing why the single pensioner and other single adult losers are greater than the same categories for Great Britain given in table J7 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying For Local Government".

Mr. Howard: The figures are on different bases. Those I gave to the hon. Member on 26 October (Vol. 121, columns 39-40) showed the estimated position without any transitional grant provisions. Table J7 of "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) showed the estimated effect with the continuation of the transitional grant provisions proposed in the Green Paper.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report any information he has on a parish-by-parish basis on the effects of his proposals to reform local government finance on the finances of parish councils, showing (a) the amount of parish precept per household and (b) the amount of community charge per adult in respect of parish services, calculated on the same basis as the figures referred to in his answer on 29 June, Official Report, column 44.

Mr. Ridley: There are about 8,000 parish councils. Information about parish precepts is available but could only be expressed as an amount per household at disproportionate cost.

Information about parish expenditure is not collected centrally. As a result of our proposals for the payment of grant and non-domestic rates published on 23 September, parish council expenditure will be supported by grant and non-domestic rates in the same way as other local government expenditure. The illustrative community charges published on 29 June include parish precepts.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the 1987-88 community charge for the City of London on the same basis as that for all other authorities referred to in his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 44.

Mr. Ridley: No. We have always made it clear that separate arrangements would be necessary for the City of London.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 22 October, Official Report, column 862-3, he will place in the Library the comments he has received from the Audit Commission on the effect of his proposals for the reform of local government finance on the economy, efficiency and effectiveness of local authorities.

Mr. Ridley: No. I do not have permission from the commission to publish its comments.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the effect on the level of community charge in each local authority of a 5 per cent. evasion rate, based on the figures referred to in his answer on 29 June, Official Report, column 44.

Mr. Ridley: No. There is no basis for assuming a uniform 5 per cent. rate of evasion.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to define great personal sensitivity in the context of information which will not be available to community charge registration officers, pursuant to his answer of 21 October, column 825.

Mr. Ridley: As I indicated in my answer of 21 October (Vol. 120, col. 825), such material will be prescribed in regulations.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to omit any members of Her Majesty's Forces from the community charge register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: It would be impractical to register individually the most mobile service personnel for the personal community charge. It would also be undesirable, for security reasons, for certain details to be included in community charges registers.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give his latest estimates of the likely evasion rate of community charge.

Mr. Ridley: I have made no such estimate.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information local authorities will be permitted to provide on total revenue and spending when sending out poll tax demands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 29 October]: This is a matter for further discussion with the local authority associations. It is not obvious that any specific prohibitions will be required. In line with our proposals for the operation of the grant system and the local collection fund, however, we shall be taking powers to prescribe the minimum information to be provided and the format of the community charge bill.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what instructions or codes of practice he laid down in respect of the appointment of consultants by the London Docklands development corporation, and what action he proposes to take consequently on the report of auditors to the corporation, Robson Rhodes Corporation, on future procedure for appointing consultants adopted by the London Docklands development corporation;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter from Messrs. Robson Rhodes to the London Docklands development corporation concerning its annual accounts together with any reply or statements it made in response.

Mr. Trippier: The corporation is required by the terms of its grant memorandum to award consultancy contracts on a competitive basis.

The corporation has not yet completed its internal consideration of the management letter. It will do so at the next meeting of its audit committee. My Department will then consider the letter and the adequacy of the LDDC's response.

I will consider what statement should be made for the Official Report.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the names of consultants appointed by the London Docklands development corporation within its expenditure on consultancies of £7·9 million in the last financial year, together with the nature of the contract, and indicating those cases where the auditors have found no evidence of formal competition.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. I shall do so as soon as the information has been brought together.

Planning Zones

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made towards the introduction of simplified planning zones.

Mr. Waldegrave: A commencement order and regulations enabling local planning authorities in England and Wales to make simplified planning zone schemes (SPZ's) come into force today. The regulations provide the detailed procedures and were the subject of consultation earlier this year.

SPZ's are based on the planning regime successfully pioneered in enterprise zones and will provide local authorities with an important new means of facilitating development, particularly in the older urban areas. They enable local planning authorities to give advance planning permission for specified types of development in defined areas. Schemes will provide developers with certainty about the acceptability of projects, and remove the need for them to make individual planning applications in the area concerned.

I hope that authorities will take full advantage of this new opportunity and prepare schemes as soon as practicable.

Certain types of development are excluded from the scope of SPZ's, and the Act provides that SPZ's cannot be designated in certain protected areas such as national parks and green belts.

New, simplified procedures for the preparation of local plans also come into operation today.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a timetable for the implementation of competitive tendering procedures for individual local government services in the phasing programme.

Mr. Howard: The Department is issuing a consultation paper today which sets out proposals for implementation of part I of the Local Government Bill in England. I am sending my hon. Friend and members of Standing Committee A copies of the paper, and I have also placed a copy in the Library.

The paper proposes a phased introduction of competition by local authorities, with authorities split into groups and each group taking the activities covered by the Bill in a different order. Each group will have to expose activities to competition at six-monthly intervals, starting by 1 April 1989. All authorities will have to expose at least 10 per cent. of their ground maintenance work to competition by that date, and that percentage figure will be increased to 100 per cent. over a five-year period.

The paper also proposes a de minimis exemption so that authorities would not have to expose any activity to competition if they spend less than £100,000 per annum on carrying it out.

Comments on the proposals are to be sent to the Department by 31 January 1988.

Whale Products

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the importation of whale products according to product and ultimate use.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 29 October 1987]: Applicants to the Department to import whale products under EC regulation 3626/82 which implements the convention on international trade and endangered species within the European Community must specify the product concerned and the purpose of import. Import permits are normally granted only for personal or scientific purposes. During the last eight years various products have been imported for these purposes including teeth, bone, tusk, blood, powder, sperm, sperm oil and spermaceti wax.

Rates

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish a report giving his latest assessment of the effect of a revaluation of non-domestic property, showing separately the effects on a regional basis and by type of property.

Mr. Ridley: The Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd 9714), paragraph D15-23, indicated the expected broad effects of revaluation. Since then, several leading firms of surveyors have published more detailed forecasts which generally confirm those contained in the Green Paper.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from (a) the Confederation of British Industry and (b) the Institute of Directors on his proposals for a national non-domestic rate.

Mr. Ridley: The CBI response to the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" supported the Government's proposals in broad terms, subject to certain conditions. It has since expressed strong support for the Government's manifesto commitments, while making it clear that they have views about how those commitments should be achieved. Exchanges of view are continuing.

The IOD in its response to the Green Paper welcomed the community charge, but opposed the proposals for a national non-domestic rate, although noting that

> "By strength of feeling, however, there was probably a majority in favour of a uniform business rate because members in a minority of areas saw the proposal as literally their last hope."

Local Government Finance

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the figures from form ACCR 86/87, showing for each local authority (a) total accumulated capital receipts and (b) cash-backed accumulated receipts at 31 March.

Mr. Ridley: Returns from local authorities for 1986-87 are currently being received and analysed. When the information is complete, I will place the figures in the Library of the House.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what jurisdiction the proposed National Rivers Authority will have in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: It is not possible to go beyond what was said in the Government's consultation paper on the National Rivers Authority, published in July, until we have considered all the comments received on that paper. Specific questions about the jurisdiction of the National Rivers Authority in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

DEFENCE

Meteorological Office (Storm Warnings)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what public warnings were issued on the night of 15 and 16 October by the Meteorological Office when the hurricane arrived at the coastline of the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will publish the precise time at which the Meteorological Office recorded the existence of the hurricane in the vicinity of the United Kingdom on the night of Thursday 15 and 16 October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 29 October to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor).

British Petroleum

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to public funds of the use of the Royal Marines and Commandos in the British Petroleum share launch.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence who authorised the use of Royal Marines to help launch the BP offer price announcement on 15 October; how much was paid for their services; and who paid.

Mr. Freeman: The use of the Royal Marines on this occasion was authorised by the Directorate of Naval Recruiting in accordance with standard procedures. The precise costs to be recovered from BP are still being assessed.

Royal Yacht Britannia

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the date on which the Royal Yacht Britannia was last tested operationally in her role as a Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve auxiliary hospital ship.

Mr. Freeman: Her Majesty's Yacht Britannia's declared wartime role is as a naval hospital ship: she has no formal connection with the Royal Naval Reserve. Although Britannia has not been involved in operations as a hospital ship, she has exercised this role on a number of occasions and, in January 1986, she provided valuable medical facilities during the evacuation of civilian refugees from Aden.

British Nuclear Tests Veterans' Association

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received recent representations from the British Nuclear Tests Veterans' Association regarding compensation for their members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes, we have received such representations. Under present arrangements claims for compensation will be considered by the Department of Health and Social Security.

RNAD Coulport

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he will invite tenders for the construction of a floating jetty at RNAD Coulport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my predecessor gave on 3 March 1987. In matters of design and construction, the Property Services Agency of the Department of the Environment acts on behalf of the Secretary of State for Defence. The floating jetty at RNAD Coulport is a unique and complex structure, and the design work and associated hydraulic model tests are well advanced. The Property Services Agency now expects to invite tenders in the next few weeks.

Gulf War

Mr. Terry Fields asked the Secretary of State for Defence what preparations have been made for specialist British troops to be used in a supportive capacity for a possible United States land operation in the Gulf region; what specialist training such British forces have received; in what circumstances their troops will be used; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No preparations have been made for participation by specialist British troops in any such operation.

Theatre Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any decision affecting the modernisation of theatre nuclear weapons in service with British forces has been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) on 24 March 1987 at column 162.

Nuclear Weapons (Underground Storage)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government have concluded their discussions with the United States Government or North Atlantic Treaty Organisation officials about the construction of underground storage facilities for nuclear weapons in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My Department is involved in continuing discussions with the United States Government on this matter.

Armed Forces (Bullying)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what action he proposes to take to combat bullying and brutality in the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Feeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 28 October 1987 at column 341.

NATO (Main Battle Tank)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy upon the statement of NATO's Secretary-General that one country, or consortium of countries, should be asked to design and build NATO's next generation of main battle tank.

Mr. Sainsbury: In accordance with our policy of seeking international collaboration in weapons procurement wherever this is practicable and advantageous, we are exploring with our allies the prospects for harmonising operational characteristics and time scales for potential requirements for a next generation of main battle tank. It is too early, however, to prescribe an appropriate procurement method for such a project.

Nuclear Arms Links

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his recent discussions with Mr. Andre Giraud, France's Defence Secretary, particularly in respect of nuclear arms links.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend last met M. Giraud on 26 October in the course of the WEU ministerial meeting at The Hague. They discussed a range of defence matters of mutual interest.

Modular Stand-Off Weapon

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what the likely cost would be to Her Majesty's Government of the development of a modular stand-off weapon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is too early to say.

Lance Missile

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has had any discussions about the development of an improved Lance battlefield nuclear missile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State regularly reviews with his ministerial colleagues in NATO the need for the modernisation of NATO's nuclear systems. This is an essential element in the Alliance's policy of maintaining only the minimum forces necessary for deterrence. No decisions on modernisation as it affects British forces have yet been taken.

Conscription

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether staff in his Department undertook any press briefings during the summer recess in respect of the issue of conscription; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No press briefings on the issue of conscription have been undertaken by staff in my Department during and since the summer recess. The Government's view on the issue was given by the Prime Minister on 20 March 1986: conscription would mean an enormous change in the whole of our defence policy which is founded on professional armed services, and which has served our country well.

Cruise Missile Components

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is aware in advance of each occasion when cruise missile components are flown into the USAF Alconbury airbase in Huntingdonshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The United States Air force has kept my Department informed of the progress being made towards achieving a ground-launched cruise missile operating capability at RAF Molesworth. This includes its programme of deliveries of GLCM components.

British Telecom Research

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost to his Department of use of the British Telecom research centre near Brightwell.

Mr. Sainsbury: The cost to the Department of the use of the British Telecom research laboratory at Martlesham heath, near Brightwell, was approximately £800,000 for the financial year 1986-87.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether nuclear materials have been kept at the Frates ammunition dump, Gosport, or Collingwood naval base, Fareham;

(2) what is the estimated number of miles travelled per annum on Britain's roads by vehicles carrying military nuclear weapons material.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to comment on the location or movement of nuclear weapons or their component materials.

NFR90 Frigate

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the expenditure (i) incurred and (ii) committed by Her Majesty's Government on the development of the NFR90 frigate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The expenditure incurred to date by Her Majesty's Government on the collaborative NFR90 project is £1·7 million, this being the United Kingdom share of the cost of the feasibility study. No other monies are currently committed to this project. A decision on whether the United Kingdom will enter the project's next phase, project definition, is expected to be made soon.

Arms Control (Inspection)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is proposed that all cruise missile bases in the United Kingdom will be subject to Soviet inspection under the proposed arms control agreement and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We are in close consultation with the United States on the form which a verification regime associated with the proposed INF agreement might take, including the question of inspections. Under such a regime, we would expect all ground-launched missile operating bases to be subject to inspection, including those in the United Kingdom.

Exercise Certain Strike

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost to Her Majesty's Government of participation in Exercise Certain Strike.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The total cost of United Kingdom participation in Exercise Certain Strike is not identified in the Estimates separately from the total provision for training. Our assessment of the extra costs involved has not yet been completed.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will declassify the information as to the number of nuclear weapons (a) possessed and (b) operated under dual-key arrangements by the United Kingdom which fall within the terms of the proposed arms control agreement, and as to the percentage, within a band of 10 per cent., that this number of nuclear weapons related to the total number of nuclear weapons in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No British owned or operated nuclear weapons fall within the terms of the proposed INF agreement.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of nuclear weapons in Britain which are (a) land-based, (b) sea-based and (c) air-based systems.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I cannot add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 13 July 1987 at column 345.

Battlefield Artillery Engagement System

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the original estimated cost, and what is the current estimated cost, of the battlefield artillery engagement system and associated software; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Current cost estimates are commercially sensitive. Estimated costs at the start of full development were some £175 million when revalued to average outturn prices.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many years late on the original time scale the battlefield artillery engagement system is currently running; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Between the start of full development in 1980 and subsequent conversion to incentivised contractual arrangements in 1985, there was a slip of approximately two years. Subsequently there has been a slippage in the development programme of a number of weeks. The extent to which this may affect dates for introducing equipment into service will depend on progress from now on.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the likely reduction in provision to the Army of the current proposals for the battlefield artillery engagement system as against the original plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Army will receive sufficient equipments to meet essential operational requirements. Exact numbers of equipments to be deployed are classified.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures his Department has adopted to monitor the efficiency, management and cost in the development of the battlefield artillery engagement system; what assessment he has made of the efficacy of these procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since 1985 the contract for development and the first phase of BATES production has been on a maximum price-target cost basis. This offers the contractor financial incentives and includes agreed levels of achievement against which progress is closely monitored. Regular progress reports are formally reviewed between the MOD and the contractor. These arrangements can be amended should this be considered appropriate.

Marconi

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what action is being taken upon the findings of his Department's investigations into the allegations that Marconi, or its four subsidiaries in Portsmouth, made excessive profits on Ministry of Defence contracts; how much public money is involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Investigations by the Ministry of Defence police into allegations of irregularities over contracts with Marconi Defence Systems began in October 1986 and are continuing. Responsibility for the direction of the investigations and the prosecution of any cases which arise from them was referred to the Director of Public Prosecution's fraud investigation group on 19 August 1987. As this is now a matter for the Law Officers of the Crown I am unable to comment further about these investigations.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many registered entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the Data Protection Act 1984 is that there will be no charge for current, past and potential MOD employees but for other data subjects the statutory fee of £10 will be charged. The MOD has six register entries covering a total of 16 purposes. The total cost to a data subject, who is not a current, past or potential MOD employee, seeking access to personal data held under all registrations would be £60.

Jeffrey Singh

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what action he proposes to take on the evidence of bullying and racism arising from the death of Jeffrey Singh, found hanged at Shorncliffe barracks, Kent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The death of junior soldier Jeffrey Singh was fully investigated by a coroner's court. No evidence of bullying or racism was found.

Nuclear Missiles

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the number of nuclear (i) missiles, (ii) warheads and (iii) throw-weight for NATO forces (a) worldwide, (b) in Europe and (c) in the United Kingdom: (A) in June 1979, (B) now and (C) after implementation of the provisions of the current intermediate nuclear force negotiations.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Information on the number and location of nuclear missiles deployed with NATO forces has been published annually in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates" since 1980.

The information which the hon. Member is seeking on warheads and throw-weight is classified.

Under the currently proposed INF agreement, all NATO's ground-launched cruise missiles and Pershing II missiles would be eliminated.

Following an INF agreement, it will remain NATO's policy to maintian the minimum level of forces consistent with credible deterrence.

Members of Parliament (Classified Information)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department takes to access eligibility for access to classified material of right hon. and hon. Members (a) appointed to, or (b) candidates for, parliamentary positions associated with defence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: None.

Committee of Public Accounts (Project Notification)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the operation of the system of notification of his Department to the Public Accounts Committee of projects costing over a certain sum; whether that threshold refers to eventual total anticipated cost; and when the system is next due for renewal

Mr. Sainsbury: The system of notification to which the hon. Member refers was described by my predecessor on 2 February 1987, columns 516-17. The threshold of £250 million related to the total expected cost of development and production combined. The Government have no plans to review the system, but this does not exclude the possibility that changes of detail may be agreed between the Committee and my Department from time to time.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's Government will take steps to ensure that overall control of events following an accident involving United States nuclear weapons on British soil rest with the British authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There is very close co-operation between the United Kingdom and the United States on contingency planning for the highly unlikely event of an accident involving a United States nuclear weapon in this country. The roles and responsibilities of both Governments are governed by special arrangements between the two nations. It is clearly understood in these arrangements that the United Kingdom has sovereign rights over its territory and territorial waters. In addition, as in all circumstances, United States military units in the United Kingdom would be required to comply with the relevant laws of the United Kingdom.

Nuclear Accident Exercises

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations he has received about the use of thorium 232 in nuclear accident training exercises on British soil; if he was consulted about its use in advance; what assessment he has made of the implications for the environment and for the safety of the civilian population of the use of thorium 232; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what arrangements he has made to ensure the safety of all civilians living or camping in the vicinity of Royal Air Force bases on which United States nuclear accident teams carry out their exercises involving the use of radioactive material.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My Department has received two representations specifically regarding the alleged use of thorium 232 during nuclear accident training exercises in the United Kingdom. Thorium 232 has not been used during nuclear accident training exercises in the United Kingdom by the British armed forces. In addition, I have been assured by the United States authorities that their military units based in this country do not use radioactive contaminants of any kind during United States nuclear accident response training exercises in the United Kingdom.

Trident

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the proportion of (a) development and (b) the production costs of the warhead element of the Trident programme which will be attributable to (i) the United States of America and (ii) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to release information of this nature for reasons of security.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what factors he attributes the fall since 1981 in the cost estimate for the Trident warhead procurement programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: The fall is attributable to the fact that after six years it has been possible to estimate the costs to completion with greater precision.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what factor he attributes the rise since 1981 in the proportion of total Trident programme expenditure attributable to warhead, miscellaneous and unallocated contingency expenditure.

Mr. Sainsbury: Approximately one third of the increase in the proportion of the Trident budget attributable to "Warhead, miscellaneous and unallocated contingency etc." is due to net cost increases in the areas of support and contingency within this element of the budget. The remainder is due to net cost reductions in other elements of the Trident budget.

Army Exercise, Angus

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the purpose of tests at an army camp at Angus, Scotland, in which troops were sprayed with CS gas from an Army aircraft; what arrangements were made to ensure the safety of the troops involved; how many similar exercises have been conducted.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No Army exercises involving the spraying of CS gas from the air are conducted.

RAF Stations

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current and proposed military uses of RAF Bawdsey, RAF Woodbridge and RAF Bentwaters.

Mr. Ian Stewart: RAF Bawdsey is, and will remain, a United Kingdom air defence station. RAF Bentwaters and RAF Woodbridge are, and will remain, operational flying stations used by the United States Air Force.

Projects

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many current defence projects not separately notified to Parliament are estimated to exceed on completion (a) £50 million and (b) £250 million; and what is the total estimated cost of these projects.

Mr. Sainsbury: The 1987 major project statement for equipment now in preparation will include all the 38 current defence projects with approved expenditure in excess of £250 million — £200 million for certain projects; the estimated total value of approved work shown is expected to be some £42 billion at average 1987-88 outturn prices. The information in respect of projects exceeding £50 million is not readily available in the form sought. But the first defence equipment project report which will be submitted to the House of Commons Defence Committee next year and which will list projects estimated to cost £25 million or more for development or £50 million or more for production, is expected to add approximately 60 projects to those which feature in the major project statement.

Nuclear Attack

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of current military defence arrangements against nuclear attack; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Government's whole defence strategy is designed to deter a potential aggressor from any form of attack. Many of our military defence arrangements are designed to counter more than one form of attack and it is therefore not possible separately to identify the cost of the arrangements against one particular form of attack.

Harrier Aircraft

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Harrier aircraft have crashed since 1979; and what is the total cost involved.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1 January 1979, 26 Royal Air Force and 12 Royal Navy Harriers have suffered irreparable damage in accidents. The cost of this number of aircraft, in current prices, would be approximately £304 million.

Frigates and Destroyers

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Defence, in pursuance of the reply he gave in paragraph 11 of Cm. 228, "Implementing the Lessons of the Falklands Campaign", if he will name the 50 frigates and destroyers of the surface escort force which are either (a) operational or engaged in preparing for service, trials or training or (b) undergoing refit or on standby; and if he will distinguish into which category each falls.

Mr. Sainsbury: Paragraph 11 of Cmnd. 228 refers to the Government's continuing commitment to maintain a surface escort force of about 50 destroyers and frigates. I refer the hon. Member to annex B of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987". Since that document was published HMS Naid, HMS Fife and HMS Aurora have paid off; HMS Jupiter and HMS Alacrity have left refit and HMS Brilliant and HMS Hermione have entered refit.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the number of frigates ordered each year since 1979, giving the yards at which the orders are now being built.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information required is:

Vessel	Date ordered	Shipyard
Type 22s
HMS Boxer*	April 1979	Yarrow Shipbuilders
HMS Beaver*	April 1979	Yarrow Shipbuilders
HMS Brave*	April 1981	Yarrow Shipbuilders
HMS London*	February 1982	Yarrow Shipbuilders
HMS Sheffield	December 1982	Swan Hunter Shipbuilders
HMS Coventry	December 1982	Swan Hunter Shipbuilders
HMS Cornwall	December 1982	Yarrow Shipbuilders
HMS Cumberland	December 1982	Yarrow Shipbuilders
HMS Campbeltown	January 1985	Cammell Laird Shipbuilders
HMS Chatham	January 1985	Swan Hunter Shipbuilders
Type 23s
HMS Norfolk	October 1984	Yarrow Shipbuilders
HMS Marlborough	August 1986	Swan Hunter Shipbuilders
HMS Argyll	September 1986	Yarrow Shipbuilders
HMS Lancaster	September 1986	Yarrow Shipbuilders
The following Type 42 destroyers were also ordered in this period:
HMS Gloucester*	March 1979	Vosper Thornycroft (UK) Ltd.
HMS Edinburgh*	April 1979	Cammell Laird Shipbuilders
HMS York*	April 1979	Swan Hunter Shipbuilders

* Denotes vessel accepted from the shipbuilder.

Defence Installations, Uist

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence what implications the development of the simulated combat trainer for ground-launched low-level air defence by British Aerospace and others at Letchworth will have for his Department's installations in the Uists, particularly as regards the numbers of both civilian and military personnel either stationed or employed there.

Mr. Sainsbury: Rapier simulators are used to improve the realism and effectiveness of training, and thus help to maximise the benefit obtained from the firing of live missiles which will continue to take place at the Royal Artillery range, Hebrides. Thus there are currently no plans to alter the number of personnel employed at the range as a result of the development of new simulators.

Bullying

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many armed forces personnel have been discharged in the last three years after being found responsible for bullying; and if he will give details of the services concerned and the ranks of those so discharged.

Mr. Freeman: Bullying is not specifically defined as an offence under the Service Discipline Acts. Charges would be framed under those sections of the Acts appropriate to the circumstances. Since January 1986 instances of bullying in the Army have been recorded separately from other disciplinary cases involving assault. In the period since then, two Army corporals and one private soldier have been dismissed following courts martial for offences involving bullying, all in the current year. One Royal Marine corporal has also been dismissed from the service following his court martial for assault on another Royal Marine.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has recently received regarding bullying and initiation ceremonies in the armed forces.

Mr. Freeman: My Department keeps me informed of all allegations of bullying and so-called initiation ceremonies which are investigated by the SIB. I routinely receive periodic reports on this subject, and I am informed of any new cases of bullying which arise.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the circular sent recently to units of the armed forces regarding the need to prevent bullying against recruits.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my comments in the recent defence debate on 28 October, at column 393.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Southern Health and Social Services Area Board

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total possible membership of the Southern health and social services area board; how many members presently serve on this board; how many members voted (a) for and (b) against the proposed new £2 million area board health headquarters at the board meeting this month; and how many of those who voted for this new headquarters are (i) elected councillors and (ii) non-elected persons nominated by him for board membership.

Mr. Needham: There are currently 24 places on the Southern health and social services board, one of which is vacant. At the October meeting of the board a proposal to rescind the decision taken in January to provide a new headquarters building pending further information and discussion was defeated by five votes to seven. The votes of individual members were not recorded.

Police Advisory Board

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what dates in 1985, 1986 and 1987, respectively, the Police Federation of Northern Ireland requested that a meeting be held of the Police Advisory Board; what response he gave to those requests; and why no meeting of the board has taken place.

Mr. Stanley: The Police Federation for Northern Ireland requested meetings of the Police Advisory Board on 9 September 1985, 16 May 1986, and 11 May 1987. After the 9 September 1985 request, the Police Federation itself sought a delay to enable further topics to be tabled. On 16 May 1986 it asked for two further items to be added to the agenda. The federation was informed that a meeting of the board would be called to discuss only the first subject raised and it was asked if it would be prepared to proceed on that basis. I am not aware of any reply being received. The latest request is being considered in consultation with all the interested parties; and the federation has been informed accordingly.

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Police Advisory Board last met; and if he will provide a list of the meetings that have taken place during each of the past five years of the Police Advisory Boards of England and Wales, of Scotland and of Northern Ireland, respectively.

Mr. Stanley: The Police Advisory Board for Northern Ireland last met on 22 March 1982. Meetings of the Police Advisory Boards in England and Wales, and Scotland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Edmund-Davies Report

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to give effect to recommendation 41 of the Edmund-Davies report as accepted by the Government of the day; what machinery he has established through the Police Advisory Board to give effect to this recommendation; and when the Police Advisory Board for Northern Ireland last discussed this matter.

Mr. Stanley: The intention of recommendation 42 was to ensure that the police receive all the relevant benefits of industrial legislation. The Police Federation for Northern Ireland first raised recommendation 41 as a potential point for discussion by the Police Advisory Board on 11 May 1987 and the request is still receiving consideration.

ACE Scheme

Mr. Jim Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which organisations have been informed of the possible loss of Government funding for ACE workers or other projects because of their present or proposed uses of the Conway mill buildings in West Belfast; and what changes such organisations were advised to take if they wished to retain such funding.

Mr. Stanley: Three organisations were informed of the possible loss of Government funding because of their use of the Conway mill facilities. To name them might place individuals involved with them at risk. The organisations concerned were advised to relocate.

Mr. Jim Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the reasons for withdrawing ACE funding from the Twinbrooke tenants and community association; and what arrangements will be made for provision of a comparable service to the local community in the future.

Mr. Stanley: ACE funding was withheld in accordance with the Government's policy as stated in the reply given by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on 27 June 1985, at column 451. Discussions have taken place with two other groups about the provision of similar services in this area.

Payment of Debt Act

Mr. Jim Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are subject to deductions from (a) wages and (b) welfare benefits under the Payment of Debt Act in the years 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86, and 1986-87; and what is the number of representations he has received urging repeal or amendments to the Act.

Mr. Stanley: The number of people from whom deductions from salaries have been made since 1983 under the Payments for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1971 is approximately as follows:

	Numbers
1983-84	2,267
1984-85	2,025
1985-86	2,135
1986-87	1,608

These figures are the aggregate of the numbers of people from whom deductions from wages or salaries have been made on behalf of Northern Ireland Electricity, the Northern Ireland gas undertakings, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the rating division of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland.

Similar information in relation to deductions from welfare payments is not available.

There have been five requests calling for the repeal or amendment of the Act since 1983.

Mental Health

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of those convicted of crimes in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years have ever been admitted to National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units with a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychoses.

Mr. Stanley: The information sought is not available. However, in Northern Ireland the number of offenders ordered by the courts to be detained in hospital for treatment, on the grounds that they were suffering from mental illness, in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Number
1982	—
1983	—

	Number
1984	—
1985	1
1986	3

All were detained by restriction orders made under article 47 of the Mental Health (NI) Order 1986 and the previous similar provisions of the Mental Health Act (Northern Ireland) 1961. In this context mental illness covers any suffering from schizophrenic psychoses but not exclusively so.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many current occupants of Her Majesty's prisons in Northern Ireland have ever been admitted to National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units with a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis;

(2) how many people were admitted to her Majesty's prisons in Northern Ireland who had previously been discharged from mental illness hospitals and units after a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis in each of the last five years; and how many were recidivists.

Mr. Stanley: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many occupants of National Health Service hospital and unit beds in Northern Ireland have a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis; what those figures are as percentages of (a) mental and (b) all hospital beds in Northern Ireland; and how those figures compare with each of the past five years.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Year Ending	Number of beds occupied by patients with diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis	Percentage of mental illness beds occupied by patients with diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis	Percentage of all hospital beds occupied by patients with diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis
30 June 1986[2]	1,237	35·1	9·1
30 June 1985	1,422	39·2	10·9
30 June 1984	1,407	39·8	10·9
30 June 1983	1,396	36·7	10·6
30 June 1982	1,356	[1]	[1]

[1] Not available due to industrial action in the health service.

[2] Latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funds have been specifically earmarked for the care of the mentally ill following the closure of mental hospitals in Northern Ireland in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: No psychiatric hospitals have been closed in Northern Ireland during the last year.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the admissions by diagnosis and order of admissions, including percentage change in numbers and rates per 100,000 population, of patients suffering from schizophrenic psychosis in Northern Ireland for the years 1984-86 inclusive.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

	First Admissions			Total Admissions
	Number	Per cent. change since 1984	Rate per 100,000 population	Number	Per cent. change since 1984	Rate per 100,000 population

1985	121	−9·7	8	1,089	−1·4	70
1986	108	−19·4	7	917	−17·0	59

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the discharges and deaths by length of stay, including percentage change in numbers and percentage distribution, of patients suffering from schizophrenic psychosis in Northern Ireland for the years 1984-86 inclusive.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Length of stay of patients suffering from schizophrenic psychosis

	Less than one month		One and less than three months		Three and less than six months		Six and less than 12 months		12 months or over		Total discharged/died	Per cent. change over 1984

1986	423	43	361	37	78	8	35	4	84	9	981	−10·5

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received on the provision of community care for patients suffering from schizophrenic pyschosis discharged from National Health Service mental illness hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The chairman of the National Schizophrenia Fellowship (Northern Ireland) wrote to me in general terms seeking assurances that adequate provision will be made for sufferers of schizophrenia moving out to live within the community in future.

In my reply I gave the chairman the assurances sought.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of those convicted of crimes in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years had ever previously been admitted to National Health Service mental illness hospitals with a main diagnosis of schizophrenia psychosis.

Mr. Stanley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave him today.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many community psychiatric nurses there have been in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Community Psychiatric Nurses employed in the Health an Personal Social Services

Year	Number
1983	62
1984	64
1985	75
1986	79

AIDS

The Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland have been diagnosed as HIV positive over the last three years; how many of these were haemophiliacs; what plans he has for counselling and support for HIV positive patients within the health service; how many patients in Northern Ireland have contracted acquired immune deficiency syndrome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Forty individuals have been diagnosed as HIV antibody positive in Northern Ireland in the last three years, of whom 16 were haemophiliacs. Of the total identified as being HIV antibody positive, three have gone on to develop AIDS, all of whom have died.

The provision of care for HIV antibody positive patients is a matter for each health and social service boards in light of local circumstances. Anyone wishing to be tested for the HIV virus can make arrangements through their own general medical practitioner or themselves attend the department of genito-urinary medicine at the Royal Victoria hospital or any of the sexually transmitted disease clinics in the province.

Each individual attending for testing is offered counselling before the test is undertaken and if found HIV antibody positive, again after the tests have been carried out. In addition testing and counselling has been offered to all haemophiliacs in the Province.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his Department's policy towards fees for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act; how many register entries his Department has; and what would be the total cost to a data subject seeking access to personal data held under all register entries.

Mr. Stanley: The Northern Ireland Office and each of the Northern Ireland Departments are setting subject access fees, within the prescribed maximum fee of £10, which are intended to recover the full costs of the subject access service except where circumstances justify a free or subsidised service.

A total of 55 part A, coupled with 125 part B registrations, have been made.

The total subject access cost from any one data subject would depend on the number of register entries holding personal data on that individual excluding those accesses which are being supplied free. Fees already set are in the range of £5-£8.

Social Fund

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response he has made to the Social Security Advisory Committee's statement that his decision to proceed with the social fund as planned does not have its support; and what estimates he has as to the number of claimants in Northern Ireland who will lose as a result of the social fund.

Mr. Needham: No response has been made and no such estimates are available.

Speech Therapists

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of efforts to upgrade speech therapists' pay.

Mr. Needham: The pay of speech therapists in Northern Ireland follows the rates negotiated in Great Britain. I understand that negotiations on a new grading package are in progress in Great Britain. In recognition of the fact that these negotiations are likely to take some time to conclude an interim lump sum of £250 has been agreed for speech therapists in partial compensation for the increase due for the period 1 April 1987 to 30 November 1987.

Housing Benefit

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are in receipt of housing benefit in each of the following areas covered by district offices: Downpatrick, Banbridge, Kilkeel, Newry District 1 and Newry District 2.

Mr. Needham: The following information has been supplied by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Numbers of tenants in receipt of housing benefit (October 1987)

NIHE district office
Downpatrick	3,635
Banbridge	2,302
Kilkeel	1,095
Newry District 1	3,050
Newry District 2	2,956

The numbers relate to NIHE tenants and tenants of private landlords.

Chiropody

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the chiropody service in (a) the Down unit of management, (b) the Newry and Mourne unit of management and (c) the Banbridge unit of management; and if the Department of Health and Social Services has held any discussions about increasing the work force to deal with the elderly and infirm in the community.

Mr. Needham: Chiropody services are provided by health and social services boards for the elderly, handicapped persons, expectant mothers, schoolchildren and diabetics. Access to and frequency of treatment depends on the manpower available to meet demands from patients in these priority groups. Down unit of management has three chiropodists in post, to serve a population of 55,800, Newry and Mourne has six staff for a population of 76,600 and Craigavon and Banbridge 5·4 whole-time equivalent chiropodists for 103,400 people.

The Department has not been involved in discussions about increases in the work force. Decisions on such matters are taken by boards in the light of local needs and priorities.

Home Helps

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many home helps are employed in the Down unit of management (all), the Newry and Mourne unit of management (County Down only) and the Banbridge unit of management (in the electoral wards of Bannside, Katesbridge, Dromore North, Dromore South, Quilly, Garran and Croob); and how this compares with 1980-81.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Number of Home helps at 30 September

Unit of Management	1980	1987
Down	474	519
Newry and Mourne[1]	982	1,066
Craigavon/Banbridge[1]	815	985

[1] A breakdown in the form requested is not readily available.

Local Government Reform

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he proposes to reform local government finance in Ulster; and what proposals he has to introduce a community charge in the Province.

Mr. Stanley: The Green Paper of January 1986, "Paying for Local Government", which forms the basis of the Great Britain reforms, made it clear that the proposals did not apply to Northern Ireland. This reflects the fact that local government arrangements in Northern Ireland are significantly different from those in the rest of the United Kingdom.

My right hon. Friend has therefore decided to monitor the development of the proposals in England and Wales before deciding whether, or to what extent, they should be applied in Northern Ireland.

Local Government Elections

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes in legislation are planned to enable "I" voters to vote in the next local government election in Northern Ireland; and when he expects such changes to be in operation.

Mr. Stanley: The Government intend to introduce a Bill enabling "I" voters to vote in local government elections in Northern Ireland as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Health Boards

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what bonus or efficiency payments are payable to managers of health boards; and what are the criteria used in deciding whether or not to grant such payments.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 October 1987]: A performance-related pay scheme for general managers of health and social services boards was introduced in December 1986. The scheme allows for annual additions to pay of up to 4 per cent. subject to a maximum of 20 per cent. cumulatively.

The criteria for deciding how much, if any, performance-related pay will be awarded are based on a system of individual performance reviews. This system provides for the setting of a number of key objectives for the year ahead against which the performance of the general manager will be assessed by the chairman on behalf of the board.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those health boards which (a) provide all acute medical services to their populations; (b) provide such services to populations outside their area and (c) expect other health boards to provide such services for them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 October 1987]: All four health and social services boards provide a full range of acute medical services with the exception of a small number of regional services for example cardiac surgery, renal services, plastic surgery, which by their nature can best be provided primarily at the main teaching hospitals in the Eastern board area.

In addition certain services because of their highly specialist nature and because of the small numbers involved—for example heart and liver transplants—are provided elsewhere in the United Kingdom. All four boards provide services to population outside their area. The boundaries of areas and units of management are of course for administrative purposes only and are not clinical boundaries; patients and staff can cross them as necessary.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of places on each area health board is held by elected representatives.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The information is as follows:

Health and Social Services Board	Number of places	Number of places held by District Councillors	Per cent.
Eastern	34	4	12
Northern	29	8	28
Southern	24	6	25
Western	24	8	33

Approximately 30 per cent. of the places on each board are reserved for nominees of district councils. At present there are nine vacancies in this category.

THE ARTS

William Morris Gallery and Museum

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister for the Arts if he will take steps to provide central funding to the William Morris gallery and museum in Waltham Forest.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 2 November 1987]: I am aware that the William Morris gallery and museum contains an interesting and important collection. Primary responsibility for its funding, as a local authority museum, lies with the borough of Waltham Forest, although the museum is eligible also to apply for assistance under grant schemes run by the Museum and Galleries Commission and the Area Museum Service for South-Eastern England.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

David Baveghens

Mr. Hayes asked the Attorney-General why the Crown prosecution service dropped the case against David Baveghens who was subsequently convicted in a private prosecution; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have read an article in The Times of 28 October 1987 and have noted the remarks attributed therein to the Police Federation and to Sergeant Michael Bennett. I am anxious to respond to those remarks at the earliest available opportunity. Sentence on Mr. Baveghens has been postponed pending the preparation of social inquiry reports. It would not be appropriate for me to make any further comment until sentence has been passed and the case has been concluded.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Child Abuse

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions of child sex abuse there have been in Leeds for the years 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available information held centrally is given in the following table. For other sexual offences it is not possible from the records held centrally, to distinguish the age of the victim.

Persons found guilty of certain sexual offences where the victim is known to be aged under 16 by court and offence

[2] The figures are those held centrally and are approximate: detailed checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the standard waiting time for payment by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board between the crime being committed and payment to the victim.

Mr. John Patten: The statistics kept by the board use the date of application as the baseline rather than the date of the crime.

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many payments by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board have been made in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Cleveland and (c) Langbaurgh constituency in each of the past five years.

Mr. John Patten: The board's jurisdiction covers England, Wales and Scotland. The number of compensation awards paid by the board in the last five years is as follows:

	Number of awards
1982-83	19,733
1983-84	21,133
1984-85	19,771
1985-86	22,534
1986-87	[1]21,925

[1] Provisional.

The information required to answer parts (b) and (c) of the question is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mr. Hurd: The amounts spent by the Home Office on press advertising in each of the past five financial years is as follows:

	£
1982-83	696,000
1983-84	524,000

	£
1984-85	677,000
1985-86	398,000
1986-87	1,366,000

Information is not readily available to distinguish between expenditure on advertising in national newspapers and that in the press generally: the same is true for individual titles.

Young Prisoners (Statistics)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) females and (b) males under the age of 18 years were in penal custody at the last date for which figures are available; and what information he has about the types of institution in which each were placed.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 28 October 1987]: The information is given in the following table:

Estimated population aged under 18 years in prison department establishments in England and Wales on 31 August 1987: by type of establishment, type of prisoner and sex.

Number of Prisoners

Type of establishment	Untried or convicted unsentenced		Sentenced		Non-criminal		Total

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid (Group of Seven)

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which member of the Group of Seven leading industrial countries provided the greatest amount of aid as a percentage of gross national product in 1979; and what was the rank aid-donor order by that measure of all members of the Group of Seven in 1986.

Mr. Eggar: According to development assistance committee calculations, France provided the greatest amount of aid as a percentage of gross national product in 1979.

In 1986 the rank order was: France, Canada, Germany, Italy, United Kingdom, Japan, United States.

Zimbabwe National Railways

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the grants to the Government of Zimbabwe which relate to the provisions of support for the Zimbabwe national railways for the following years: 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Eggar: British aid for the national railways of Zimbabwe has been provided under aid and trade provision arrangements and an aid loan, both agreed in 1981, and from our technical cooperation programme for Zimbabwe. Expenditure in the three years in question was as follows:

	1985-86 £	1986-87 £	1987-88 £
Aid and Trade Provision Funds for Railway Electrification	7,000	—	—
Aid Loan for Rehabilitating Locomotives	—	47,000	90,000
Technical Cooperation	90,000	—	—

Job Dispersal

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to proposals for the further dispersal of Overseas Development Administration jobs to the Glasgow-East Kilbride area.

Mr. Eggar: My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has considered representations from the local trade union sides in East Kilbride and London about further dispersal of Overseas Development Administration jobs to the Glasgow/East Kilbride area. While the location of jobs between London and East Kilbride is kept under review, my right hon. Friend has no plans for a further major dispersal programme.

Food Aid

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain from the EEC Commission details of the amount of foodstuffs which have been sent from Germany to Third-world countries under the EEC food aid programme since the Chernobyl nuclear accident; and if he will further inquire what part of the total consisted of food imported to Germany from the German Democratic Republic under the inner German trade agreement.

Mr. Eggar: I have nothing to add to the answers given by my hon. Friends the Minister for Overseas Development on 26 October, at column 12; and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 29 October, at column 409.

PRIME MINISTER

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister what are the implications for Britain of the contingency plan for the deployment of United States chemical weapons in Europe in time of crisis.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces on 24 July 1986, at column 490. The United States contingency deployment plan does not designate any specific country as a destination for receiving binary munitions, and the United Kingdom has not been approached about possible contingency deployment to this country. If such a request were ever to be received, it would be a matter for decision by the Government of the day in the light of all the circumstances prevailing at the time. Any deployment to the United Kingdom at any time would require the consent of Her Majesty's Government.

Nuclear Disarmament

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister why Her Majesty's Government refuse to enter into direct negotiations towards achieving a comprehensive test ban treaty.

The Prime Minister: It would be premature to open negotiations on a comprehensive test ban treaty until progress is made on outstanding problems, notably verification. We welcome the stage-by-stage approach adopted by the United States and the Soviet Union which aims as a first step at agreement upon effective verification measures which will make possible the ratification of the bilateral 1974 threshold test ban and 1976 peaceful nuclear explosions treaties.

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister what change is envisaged in the role of the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons toward the conventional forces of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republic in the event of substantial measures of nuclear disarmament.

The Prime Minister: For as long as the security of this country and our allies continues to depend on nuclear deterrence, I envisage no significant change in the role of United Kingdom nuclear weapons.

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister at what stage Her Majesty's Government will enter the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons into the strategic arms reduction process.

The Prime Minister: The conditions that must be met before we could consider associating our independent deterrent with the arms control process are well known. They were set out by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at the United Nations in 1983:

> "If Soviet and US strategic arsenals were to be very substantially reduced, and if no significant changes had occurred in Soviet defensive capabilities, Britain would want to review her position and to consider how best she could contribute to arms control in the light of the reduced threat."

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to withdraw battlefield nuclear weapons from West Germany; if she has received any representations from the Federal Republic of Germany to this effect; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Under long-standing Alliance arrangements, British forces in Germany operate battlefield weapons systems capable of firing nuclear warheads supplied by the United States. I have no plans to withdraw from these arrangements, nor have I received any representations from the German Government asking me to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Colvin asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 3 November.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister to list her official engagements for Tuesday 3 November.

Mr. Stern asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 3 November.

Mr. Fearn asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 3 November.

Mr. Alton asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 3 November.

Mr. Yeo asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 3 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 3 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty The Queen.

African National Congress

Mr. Galloway asked the Prime Minister what status the British Government accord to the African National Congress mission in London; and, in the light of recent events, what steps she will take to ensure its protection from terrorist attack.

The Prime Minister: The African National Congress is accorded no official status in this country. I understand that leading members of the congress have been given advice about their personal security by the police. On security matters, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 27 October, at column 204.

South Africa

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the progress made in respect of the voluntary ban on the promotion of tourism to South Africa.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies given by my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment on 22 April this year, at columns 560-61.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the progress made with regard to imposing a voluntary ban on new direct investment in South Africa.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade on 23 July 1987, at columns 305-7.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the progress made in respect of the ban on importing gold coins, iron and steel from South Africa.

The Prime Minister: With effect from 5 November 1986 the United Kingdom ban on imports of South African gold coins was modified to include gold coins whether or not consigned from South Africa and to exclude gold coins minted before 1961. On 27 September 1986 the import of certain iron and steel was banned. Subject to satisfactory evidence, imports of iron and steel under contracts concluded before 19 September 1986 are allowed to go ahead. These interpretations are consistent with decisions taken in the European Community.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the progress made in respect of the cessation of oil exports and exports of sensitive equipment destined for the security services in South Africa.

The Prime Minister: We continue to abide by our international commitments in South Africa, including those on oil exports and exports of sensitive equipment for the security services.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will seek to make an official visit to the European Court of Justice.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

British Broadcasting Corporation

Q10. Mr. Temple-Morris asked the Prime Minister what representations she has received concerning Government funding for the British Broadcasting Corporation to operate a satellite television news service.

The Prime Minister: The BBC external services put forward a new proposal to establish a satellite television news service to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 6 August. Examination of the complex issues raised is not yet completed.

European Community (Copenhagen Meeting)

Q15. Mr. Spearing asked the Prime Minister what consultations she expects to arrange in respect of the items on the agenda of the Heads of Government of member states of the European Community to be held in Copenhagen in December.

The Prime Minister: The agenda for the December European Council is being prepared by the Foreign Affairs Council in the usual way. I continue to take opportunities to discuss the various issues with other European Community Heads of Government in the course of bilateral meetings.

Science

Q42. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister how many meetings she has chaired of committees in relation to her responsibilities for science.

The Prime Minister: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to disclose such information.

Dorset

Q48. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Prime Minister if she will visit Blandford Forum, Corfe Mullen and Wimborne Minster.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Liverpool

Q57. Mr. Loyden asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Liverpool.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Storehouse Group

Mr. Hoyle asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission any bid by Benlox holdings for the Storehouse group.

Mr. Maude: The current offer by Benlox Holdings plc. for Storehouse plc. is being considered by the Director General of Fair Trading. My right hon. and noble Friend will make his decision whether to refer the proposed acquisition to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in the light of the director general's advice.

Anti-Dumping and Import Legislation

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what legislative provisions are used by the EEC Commission in operating its anti-dumping powers; and if he will list each of the relevant provisions in the Official Report;

(2) if he will give guidance to United Kingdom importers on the legislative provisions operated by the EEC Commission in applying its powers to curb imports on the basis that these are used for what are described as screwdriver production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Community's anti-dumping powers are contained in Council regulation (EEC) No. 2176/84 of 23 July 1984. This regulation was amended by regulation No. 1761/87 of 22 June 1987 to introduce new rules whereby products assembled within the European Community could in certain circumstances be subject to anti-dumping duties where assembly operations with little added value are being used to circumvent existing anti-dumping duties on imports of the complete product. Advice and guidance are given to United Kingdom companies and other interested parties by officials in the Department's unfair trade unit. Information on these provisions has also been published in British Business. Companies which are not dumping have nothing to fear from this legislation.

Regional Grants

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what rules of confidentiality apply to the revelation of offers of grant-aid to companies whilst their choice of location is still being negotiated.

Mr. Atkins: Details of regional grants are published in British Business when a payment has been made. Levels of potential support under some of the Government's schemes of assistance are publicly available. Local authorities may also indicate the nature and level of assistance they can offer to specific projects.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper title.

Mr. Butcher: Information is not readily available to distinguish between expenditure on advertising in national newspapers and that in the press generally. Nor is it readily available for amounts spent other than centrally by my Department.

The figures which are readily available are:

	£
1982-83	1,340,523
1983-84	1,198,443
1984-85	2,810,883
1985-86	1,216,424
1986-87	986,798

It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to publish the sums paid to individual contractors.

Office of Fair Trading

Mr. Sackville asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any changes will be made to the Office of Fair Trading's cash limit or running costs for 1987-88.

Mr. Maude: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates the cash limit on class XX, vote 16 will be increased by £444,000 from £9·585 million to £10·029 million. This increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planning total of public expenditure. The running cost limit is increased by £416,000 from £9·065 million to £9·481 million. The additional expenditure is required in connection with the installation and development of the consumer credit licensing branch computerisation project.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Consulate, Bangkok

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the sterling charge made by Her Majesty's consulate in Bangkok for a British visa; what percentage this represents of the average weekly wage of a Thai employee, such as a chauffeur or gardener employed at Her Majesty's embassy; and how the total revenue received from the issue of visas in Bangkok in the financial year 1986-87 compares with the cost of maintaining British diplomatic and consular representation there.

Mr. Eggar: The fee charged by all British missions for single-entry visit visas for the United Kingdom is the local currency equivalent of £20. This represents approximately 90 per cent. of the average weekly wage of a Thai chauffeur or gardener employed at Her Majesty's embassy in Bangkok.

The total revenue received from the issue of visas in Bangkok in the financial year 1986-87 was £583,000. The cost of maintaining British diplomatic and consular representation there in the same year was £2 million.

British Council

Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what profit the British Council's direct teaching of English earns annually, taking into account the overheads incurred in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The British Council has 51 direct teaching operations in 32 countries. Their global operations are not always in surplus. In 1986-87, for example, there was a deficit of £0·2 million on a total turnover of £21·3 million after overseas running and investment costs and London overheads were taken into account. But for 1987-88, the council forsees a surplus of £0·3 million for re-investment in its teaching operation itself and to finance more cultural activities in the countries where the surplus is earned.

Gross National Product

Sir Peter Emery asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what particular or special action the Government are taking to assist the seven members of the Commonwealth who have had a negative gross national product per capita growth rate from 1973 to 1985; and whether he will call a conference of the other Commonwealth nations to see if some new joint action could be organised to try to rectify this problem.

Mrs. Chalker: We give high priority within the aid programme to Commonwealth countries, including those 12 whose per capita GNP has fallen, but taking into account the economic policies being pursued. We have no plans at present to call a special conference.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mr. Eggar: Foreign and Commonwealth Office expenditure on advertising and other forms of promotional literature for the financial years 1982-83 to 1986-87 was (all figures pounds sterling):

	FCO (Diplomatic Wing)	FCO (ODA Wing)
1982-83	229,711	135,506
1983-84	205,247	252,691
1984-85	149,932	234,050
1985-86	160,535	271,084
1986-87	335,754	228,347

This relates to advertising in national and local newspapers, and in specialised periodicals. No separate breakdown is available for advertising in national newspapers.

Some £162,633 of the diplomatic wing expenditure in 1986-87 related to the advertising under the Anglo/Soviet agreement for the settlement of claims, which has since been recovered from the Russian fund.

WALES

A-class Roads

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by each Welsh county, the number of miles and the cost of construction of all A-class roads completed in each year since 1974.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not readily available.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each year since 1974-75 the total public expenditure of his Department, together with the percentage increase or decrease over the preceding year in real terms.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is estimated to be as given in the table:

	1974-75	1975-76	1976-77	1977-78	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Total Welsh Office Public Expenditure—Cash Prices	845	1,076	1,248	1,291	1,489	1,769	2,105	2,216	2,389	2,609	2,640	2,780	3,028
Total Welsh Office Public Expenditure—Real Terms (1985-86 Prices)	2,862	2,900	2,972	2,699	2,812	2,859	2,869	2,751	2,766	2,888	2,799	2,780	2,939
Percentage change (year on year)	—	1·33	2·48	−9·19	4·19	1·67	0·35	−4·11	0·55	4·41	−3·08	−0·68	5·72

The amounts shown at 1985-86 prices have been derived by the application of the GDP market price deflators

The series of figures shown in the table are not directly comparable year on year because over the period there have been revisions to the classification of public expenditure and in the responsibility for certain new services.

Further Education

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of pupils in each Welsh local education authority remaining in full-time education after (a) 16 years of age and (b) 17 years of age; and what these figures represent as a percentage of the total age group in each county.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The numbers of pupils and students aged 16 and 17 attending schools or colleges of further education in each local authority on a full-time basis in 1985-86, are given in the table. These numbers have also been expressed as a percentage of the total population aged 16 and 17 respectively in each authority.

	Numbers attending schools or colleges of further education		Numbers as a percentage of total population aged
	16 years old	17 years old	16 years old	17 years old
Clwyd	3,299	2,326	50·8	36·9
Dyfed	2,633	1,910	49·7	37·5
Gwent	3,598	2,229	50·0	31·8
Gwynedd	1,778	1,120	46·8	30·3
Mid Glamorgan	4,301	2,414	50·6	29·4
Powys	1,072	617	63·1	36·3
South Glamorgan	3,049	2,048	46·2	32·0
West Glamorgan	2,836	1,882	49·8	34·2

Motorways

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by Welsh county the number of miles of motorway in each county.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is given in the table.

Length of motorway (M4) in Wales, by county, as at 1 April 1987

	Miles
Clwyd	Nil
Dyfed	3
Gwent	25
Gwynedd	Nil
Mid Glamorgan	17
Powys	Nil
South Glamorgan	13
West Glamorgan	17

Domestic Rates

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the average domestic rates bill in the Alyn and Deeside constituency for each year since 1979 in real terms, showing the percentage change between the years in each case.

Mr. Peter Walker: Rating information is only collected on a district basis. The figures for Alyn and Deeside DC are shown in the table:

	Average domestic rates bill (£)	1987-88 prices	Percentage change
1979-80	123	214
1980-81	167	245	14·5
1981-82	203	271	10·7
1982-83	226	282	3·9
1983-84	226	269	−4·4
1984-85	261	298	10·6

	Average domestic rates bill (£)	1987-88 prices	Percentage change
1985-86	284	306	2·6
1986-87	315	329	7·7
1987-88	329	329	−0·1

School Rolls

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total number of pupils on rolls in each of (a) primary schools and (b) high schools in the Alyn and Deeside constituency.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of full-time and part-time pupils on roll at January 1987 in maintained schools identified as being in the Alyn and Deeside constituency was:

	Number
In primary schools	6,491
In secondary schools	5,245

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Schizophrenic Psychosis

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Wales what research projects his Department has funded to test the effectiveness of community care for people suffering from schizophrenic psychosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 30 October 1987]: The Department of Health and Social Security's directly managed research covers Wales and I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Conductive Education

12. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has now decided to meet the grant application of the Foundation for Conductive Education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I am pleased to inform the hon. Member that my right hon. Friend announced on 14 Octover that he had agreed to provide grant assistance of £326,000 to enable Birmingham university to carry out a research evaluation of the conductive education product being established in Birmingham by the Foundation for Conductive Education.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions)

16. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will place in the Library a copy of those representations he has received in relation to his proposals for the future arrangements for determining teachers' pay and conditions; and if he will make a statement.

49. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will place in the Library a copy of those representations he has received in relation to his proposals for the future arrangements for determining teachers' pay and conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have not yet received any detailed submissions on the proposals set out in the Green Paper which I laid before Parliament on 27 October.

64. Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the work of the interim advisory committee on teachers' pay and conditions.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Saffron Walden (Mr. Haselhurst) on 27 October at columns 220-21.

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the Government intend releasing information on teachers' pay and conditions of service to the European Trade Union Committee on Education.

Mrs. Rumbold: The publication entitled "School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1987" sets out provisions covering the pay and conditions of service of teachers in England and Wales. The Green Paper "Teachers' Pay and Conditions: A Consultative Document" sets out proposals for future arrangements for the pay and conditions of school teachers in England and Wales. Both these documents cost £4·50 and can be purchased through Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Mature Students

17. Mr. Harry Barnes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to provide additional places in higher education for mature students; and if he will make a statement.

34. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to provide additional places in higher education for mature students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government's plans, as published in the higher education White Paper, envisage a further substantial increase in the recruitment of mature students to higher education. In the case of full-time students this increase is expected to be about 18 per cent. over the decade to 1995. As a result of additional funding announced last year the number of registered undergraduates at the Open University will rise to approximately 73,000 in 1990, an increase of some 5,500 compared with 1985. The Government are currently reviewing demand in the light of the latest figures.

School Governing Bodies

18. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has had discussions with church leaders about the role of church appointees on school governing bodies.

Mr. Dunn: Ministers and officials regularly talk to representatives of the churches on a range of issues concerning schools, including the role of governing bodies.

Nursery Education

19. Mrs. Mahon asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to extend the provision of pre-five education; and if he will make a statement.

24. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the number of nursery school places.

65. Mr. Rathbone asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to encourage greater provision for nursery school education.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for the City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg).

23. Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the current national shortage of trained nursery school teachers; and what action he has taken to meet current demands.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is not possible to estimate precisely to what extent there is a shortage of trained teachers for the early years, ages three to eight, which includes teachers in nursery schools. But information available to my Department suggests that some authorities, particularly in London, are experiencing local difficulties often exacerbated by external factors such as housing costs. To meet present and immediate future demands, the target allocation of initial teacher training places for the primary sector has been expanded by nearly 20 per cent. from 1986 to 1989. Within their allocations, institutions have been asked to give greater emphasis to early years training. This measure, together with local authorities' own recruitment campaigns, should ensure a sufficient supply of teachers for the early years.

51. Mr. McCartney asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in relation to pre-five education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in relation to pre-five education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: On behalf of my right hon. Friend I had a most useful discussion on 9 September with representatives of the British Association for Early Childhood Education on a range of areas of concern to the association relevant to under-fives education. The association has since forwarded to my right hon. Friend a memorandum which is currently being studied.

English Teaching

20. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to improve the standards of English teaching in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: English will be one of the core subjects in the national curriculum. We intend to establish a working group to advise on attainment targets and programmes of study for pupils. It will draw upon the conclusions of the Kingman committee which my right hon. Friend set up to recommend what teachers and pupils should know specifically about the workings of the English language. We are also providing education support grants to develop oral work in schools; and we are funding the school curriculum development committee's national projects to improve pupils' writing and oral skills.

Teachers (Training)

21. Mr. Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to expand the provision of in-service training for teachers; and if he will make a statement.

28. Mr. McAvoy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to expand the provision of in-service training for teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A new local education authority training grant scheme was introduced with effect from 1 April this year to support in-service training. Under this scheme LEAs in England are planning to spend £265 million in 1987-88 compared with £225 million in 1986-87 under the previous arrangements for funding LEAs' in-service training. For 1988-89 the Government are increasing the total of expenditure on which specific grant is available under the scheme to £207 million, compared to £200 million this year.

Non-teaching Staff

22. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number per 1,000 population in each of the education authorities within the Greater Manchester area of non-teaching staff employed.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number in June 1987 of non-teaching staff employed on education, expressed per 1,000 of population in each of the authorities requested was as follows:

	Number
Bolton	15·6
Bury	13·3
Manchester	24·8
Oldham	13·3
Rochdale	15·4
Salford	15·4
Stockport	11·4
Tameside	13·5
Trafford	10·9
Wigan	13·6

Education Reform

25. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much interest has been shown by secondary schools concerning the suggestion that they will be able to opt out of local government control.

42. Mrs. Maureen Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many secondary schools have shown an interest in wanting to opt out of local government control.

Mr. Dunn: A significant number of requests for further information about the grant-maintained schools policy has been received within the Department. It is not possible at present to deduce how many secondary schools might be seriously interested in opting out.

27. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding his consultative document on the national curriculum.

50. Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has received to his consultative document on the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's consultative document on the national curriculum was published on 24 July, with a formal closing date for comments of 30 September. So far we have received over 7,000 responses, from national and regional organisations, individual members of the public, and others.

29. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimates his Department has made as to the number of additional civil servants that will be required to help administer schools that opt for direct funding from his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: No more than a modest addition to the Department's staffing should be required to administer the grant arrangements for schools which opt out of local authority control. Funding of the former direct grant schools, for example, was administered by a team of eight officials.

31. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the impact of his proposals on opting out of local education authorities capacity to reorganise education.

Mr. Dunn: Grant-maintained status will not be a refuge for weak or failing schools which LEAs wish to close as part of a sensible strategy for rationalising their provision. Where an application for grant-maintained status coincides with an LEA's proposals involving the applicant school, my right hon. Friend will take the respective merits of both sets of proposals into account before reaching his decision.

38. Ms. Armstrong asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will place in the Library those representations he has received in relation to his consultative proposals to devolve financial management to schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien).

45. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he will take to ensure that schools that have indicated a wish to opt out of local authority control will not be placed at a disadvantage while the legislation is going through Parliament.

62. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that those schools which have indicated an interest to opt out of local government control will not be at a disadvantage pending the Education Bill reaching the statute book.

Mr. Dunn: Schools will not be able to apply for grant-maintained status until the legislation has reached the statute book. Any proposals made by local authorities in the meantime in respect of particular schools will be judged by my right hon. Friend on their merits. Local authorities will remain under a duty adequately to maintain all those schools for which they have responsibility.

46. Mr. Win Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will place in the Library a copy of those representations he has received in relation to his consultative paper, "Admission of Pupils to Maintained Schools", and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen).

48. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what decisions have been made on the Essex education authority's proposals for the reorganisation of secondary education in Epping Forest.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has approved Essex education authority's proposals for the reorganisation of secondary education in Epping Forest.

53. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he now has a definite date for the publication of the Education Bill.

57. Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he can now give the publication date of the Education Bill.

63. Mr. Jack asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects the new Education Bill to be published.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government hope to publish an Education Bill within the next few weeks.

68. Mr. Nelson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the time allowed for consultation on the five papers on reform of the education system published in July and September of this year.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government have received over 14,000 responses to the various consultation documents issued in recent months. Some of these have commented on the time allowed, but my right hon. Friend has made it clear that the process of consultation will continue during the passage of Education Bill and beyond.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he expects to publish a White Paper on his plans for educational change consequent on receipt of replies to his consultative papers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. The responses to our consultation papers will inform the preparation of legislation which we hope to introduce within the next few weeks.

Research Councils

26. Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about the funding of research councils; and if he will make a statement.

32. Mr. McLeish asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about the funding of research councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Following the publication on 20 July 1987 of the ABRC discussion document "A Strategy for the Science Base" and the publication on 23 July 1987 of the ABRC's advice "Science and Public Expenditure 1987" my right hon. Friend and I have received 155 representations about the funding of research councils.

Irish Nationals

30. Mr. John Townend asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the latest figures available for the cost to maintain public funds of nationals of the Irish Republic studying at British educational institutions.

Mr. Jackson: Information is only available to allow a calculation to be made in respect of full-time and sandwich students from the Irish Republic attending United Kingdom universities, polytechnics and colleges. Such students, along with students from other EC member states, are charged fees at the home rate, the cost of implied subsidy for the 1,000 students from the Irish Republic in 1985-86 being estimated at £3·5 million.

In addition, since 1986-87 full-time and sandwich students from EC member states on first degree and diploma courses are eligible for reimbursement of the tuition fee otherwise payable if they meet broadly similar residence requirements to those which United Kingdom students on the same courses have to satisfy to have tuition fees paid as part of their mandatory award. In 1986-87 680 Irish students were reimbursed fees at a total cost of £390,000.

Irish students are also eligible for support under two Government awards schemes operated by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the British Council, respectively. In 1986-87 these two schemes together supported 15 students at a total cost, including maintenance, of £80,000.

HMI (Report)

33. Mr. Morley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library a copy of any representations he has received on Her Majesty's inspectors' 1987 report; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones).

Student Grants

35. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to complete his review of student financial support; and if he will make a statement.

37. Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to complete his review of student financial support; and if he will make a statement.

52. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to receive the report of the review of student support; and what consultations will be held on its proposals.

Mr. Jackson: The Government hope to publish proposals for consideration in the first half of 1988.

40. Mr. Hinchliffe asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take to protect the real value of student grants after the introduction of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

41. Mr. Callaghan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take to protect the real value of student grants after the introduction of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Decisions on the level of student grants in future years have not yet been taken.

City Technical Colleges

36. Miss Mowlam asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will indicate what city technology colleges have so far received financial support and from which organisations.

47. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will indicate what city technology colleges have so far received financial support and from what organisations.

Mrs. Rumbold: Financial support has been pledged by Hanson Trust for the city technology college, Kingshurst; by Dixons Group plc for a South Yorkshire CTC; by Mr. Harry Djanogly, for the Nottingham CTC; and by the Philip and Pauline Harris Trust for a Wandsworth CTC. Support from other sources has been promised or is being negotiated for CTCs in other locations. The trustees for the Kingshurst and Nottingham CTCs have begun to receive grant from the Department to cover the transitional running costs of these projects.

66. Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in relation to the proposed city technology colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) and the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers).

Textbooks

39. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about the provision of textbooks in maintained secondary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buckley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about the provision of textbooks in maintained secondary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Responses to the Government's consultation exercises have included comments on certain aspects of textbook provision in secondary schools. The provision of books was also discussed when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science met the Educational Publishers Council on 28 October.

Teachers (Industrial Action)

43. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current level of industrial action by teachers in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: No action is taking place on a national basis. We are aware of a few local disputes which have involved some industrial action.

Universities (Funding)

44. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to meet the chairman of the University Grants Committee to discuss the future funding of universities.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend frequently discusses matters of university funding with the chairman of the University Grants Committee in the course of normal business, most recently on 27 October.

Borough of Barnet

54. Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many pupils from outside the London borough of Barnet have opted to be educated within that borough.

Mr. Dunn: Returns to my Department show that in January 1987 there were 3,980 pupils aged 5 years or more belonging to other authorities being educated in schools maintained by the London borough of Barnet. Over half of these came from the London boroughs of Brent and Haringey.

Teachers (Shortage Subjects)

55. Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what latest figures he has for the recruitment of teachers in shortage subjects; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Firm recruitment figures for entry to initial teacher training are not yet to hand but applications for courses in 1987 are up 15 per cent. overall and in mathematics, physics and craft design and technology they have increased by 39, 60 and 60 per cent. respectively.

The high rate of applications, which has been encouragingly consistent throughout 1987, suggests that the package of measures taken by the Government to improve supply is showing signs of success. A further statement will be made as soon as more up-to-date figures are available.

Assisted Places Scheme

56. Mr. Riddick asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied with the current take-up of places in the assisted places scheme; and if he has any plans to expand the scheme.

Mr. Dunn: Yes. In the academic year 1986-87 nearly 98 per cent. of places available for entry to the assisted places scheme at ages 11, 12 or 13 were filled.

This Government have committed themselves to an eventual target of 35,000 assisted places in England and Wales. Independent secondary schools in England have been invited to say whether they would wish to join the scheme at some future date or to take up additional places if they are already participants. New schools wishing to join the scheme will be expected to satisfy the same criteria as existing participants.

Higher Education

58. Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about the funding of higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr. Michie).

Education Budgets

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the question of education budgets of authorities in the northern region.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has received no recent representations on overall education budgets of local authorities in the northern region. There has been some correspondence on particular aspects of education finance and my right hon. Friend and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State have discussed capital expenditure allocations this year with representatives of Bradford, Calderdale and Rotherham local education authorities.

Inner London Education Authority

61. Mr. Bowis asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps his Department takes to monitor examination results in the schools of the Inner London education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department's current source of information on the examination achievements of pupils in English schools is the annual school leavers survey which includes, for a 10 per cent. sample of pupils, details of their CSE and GCE achievements.

Information from this survey is published in the Department's statistical bulletins and, more extensively, in "Statistics of Education Volume 2 (School Leavers CSE and GCE)", copies of which are available in the Library.

Grammar Schools

67. Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will be issuing guidance to local education authorities following Mr. Justice McCullough's ruling of 14 October 1987 that the provision of fewer grammar school places for girls than boys is unlawful under the Sex Discrimination Act 1975.

Mr. Dunn: It is for individual local education authorities in the first instance to consider the implications of this ruling for their own school provision.

Core Curriculum

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how soon the implementation of the core curriculum will apply in the private educational sector.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government do not believe that it would be right to impose the national curriculum on independent schools, which are outside the national system of maintained education, but they believe that many will wish to adopt it; my right hon. Friend will urge them to do so. He will also take his national curriculum policies into account in considering new applications for registration, and Her Majesty's Inspector's reports on existing independent schools.

City technology colleges will be independent schools, but my right hon. Friend intends to make it a condition of grant that they keep to the substance of the national curriculum, within their own distinctive ethos.

Polytechnics (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the total bids for capital spending in polytechnics submitted by local education authorities in England and Wales for the years 1984-85, 1985-86, 1987-89 and 1988-89.

Mr. Jackson: Bids are not submitted in England in a form that would enable this information to be given. Local education authority capital spending in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Parents' Meetings

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will obtain from local education authorities and publish the number of annual parents' meetings held in maintained schools in England and Wales in accordance with section 31 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, the number of meetings attended by the required number of parents, and the number of meetings passing resolutions in respect of sub-paragraph 4*(b)* of that section.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Celtic Studies

Mrs. Margaret Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to receive a final report from the University Grants Committee on its current review of the teaching and research in Celtic studies at Scottish universities.

Mr. Jackson: The University Grants Committee expects to complete its review within the current academic year. It is for the committee itself to determine the distribution of resources to individual universities.

Sign Language Interpreters

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any proposals for the provision of professional training for sign language interpreters for people who are deaf, leading to a professional qualification as a basis for a national network of interpreters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has no such proposals. He would see any developments of this kind as the outcome of collaboration between employers and providers of training in the local authority and voluntary sectors.

GCSE

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much Government grant has been paid to each general certificate of secondary education examination board in order to develop the new exam; and what percentage of the exam fees being charged by each board is to cover development costs.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government have provided substantial resources to ensure the successful implementation of the new GCSE examination including the following assistance to the GCSE examining groups in the financial years 1984-85 to 1987-88, mainly to help provide training for teachers and examiners.

	£
London and East Anglian Group	213,644
Midland Examining Group	244,234
Northern Examining Association	251,912
Southern Examining Group	227,024
Welsh Joint Education Committee	191,203

Information about costs covered by GCSE examination fees is not held centrally. The examining groups are responsible for setting the fees, taking into account the various costs incurred by them including the costs of developing syllabuses.

Conductive Education

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the meeting with representatives of Rapid Action for Conductive Education on 29 October.

Mr. Dunn: The meeting with the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) and representatives of the Rapid Action for Conductive Education (RACE) provided a useful opportunity for me to hear more about conductive education. The representatives of RACE set out certain proposals for consideration. I explained that the Department is providing £326,000 to fund the evaluation project by Birmingham university and I expressed my readiness to have further meetings with RACE.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mrs. Rumbold: The figures for advertising in national newspapers are as follows:

	£
1982-83	5,988
1983-84	9,570
1984-85	18,544
1985-86	14,804
1986-87	532,000

The breakdown by individual newspaper is a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Schools (Control)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make available to the general public in booklet form details of his proposals to enable schools to apply to be released from local authority control and management; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department will be publishing in various forms information for parents, governors and others on the policies for schools which will form part of the forthcoming legislation.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the Government's plans for expenditure on education and science from 1988-89 to 1990-91.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The following are the Government's plans.

Public spending on education and science

1. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his statement today, provision for education and science in 1988-89 will be £17,962 million. This total is £1,303 million or 7·8 per cent. higher than provision for 1987-88.

2. Subject to Parliament's approval of the necessary legislation, additional resources are being provided to enable the Government to implement their proposals for education reform. About £65 million over three years will be provided to fund work in support of the Government's proposals for a national curriculum, particularly that of the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council. Nine million pounds is being made available in 1988-89 to enable polytechnics and colleges to assume responsibility for managing their own affairs. In higher education the resources available should be sufficient to provide for at least the numbers of students projected in the Government's White Paper "Meeting the Challenge" (Cmnd. 114)—projection Q. In addition, I am making provision for a substantial programme for the improvement of school buildings. Further details of my plans are as follows.

Buildings and equipment for schools and colleges

3. Gross provision for capital spending on schools and colleges has been increased by £100 million a year—or 22 per cent. — over the survey period. Within this provision I shall be allocating about £50 million in 1988-89 specifically for a programme of school improvements to help LEAs tackle the accumulated deficiencies identified in my Department's survey of school buildings and to allow voluntary school governors to continue the programme of replacement and improvement begun last year. This programme will be in addition to allocations for new school places in areas of growing school population and for the implementation of approved projects to remove surplus places. There will also be a small increase in allocations for further and higher education. LEAs already have plans for substantial expenditure from existing provision on projects which contribute to the improvement of the school building stock.

4. The additions announced today will mean that LEAs and voluntary bodies should be able to spend a total of more than £750 million over the next three years on projects to improve school buildings; and authorities will no doubt make use of the flexibilities open to them—for example, through the use of capital receipts—to increase spending on improvements still further where they consider it appropriate to do so. Provision for local authority current expenditure on repairs and maintenance is also being increased and in 1988-89 will be about £120 million or some 40 per cent. higher than spending in 1985-86.

5. Finally I am taking immediate steps to deal with the most serious problems. I am issuing special capital allocations totalling £9·4 million to provide for small school improvement projects and equipment purchases for schools and colleges which can be completed in the current financial year. The Government will also be considering the case for further special capital allocations to deal with storm damage to educational buildings.

Local authority current expenditure

6. The total provided for local authority current spending on education in 1988-89 in the Government's plans is £13,870 million a cash increase of 7·9 per cent. over the 1987-88 plans as set out in Cm. 56. It represents the likely level of spending by local education authorities collectively, on the basis that they constrain their costs within the level of cost increases in the economy as a whole. In addition, the education service will receive income from the MSC in respect of TVEI and work-related NAFE of some £185 million in 1988-89.

7. In the Government's view, there are areas of the service where authorities need not spend as much as provided for in the plans. The total used for determining the education component of the grant-related expenditure (GRE) has therefore been set at £615 million lower than the total for expenditure provision.

8. The Government's plans for local authority current spending on education provide for it to be held broadly constant in real terms in 1989-90 and 1990-91. Within the totals planned for local authority expenditure as a whole in both years the Government will review next year the distribution of provision between services, including education, in the light of local authorities' budgets, Government priorities and other factors. Appropriate transfers will be made from 1989-90 onwards for the polytechnics and colleges and for grant-maintained schools which will be funded from vote expenditure.

Schools

9. The plans assume that local authorities collectively will not increase teacher numbers as long as pupil numbers continue to fall. They allow for some further fall in the overall pupil: teacher ratio, which is currently at its lowest level ever of 17.3:1.

10. In addition to the provision for improving the conditions of school buildings, the plans allow for real increases in spending per pupil on books and equipment. As last year, the plans allow in full for the implications of equipping schools for the new GCSE courses, and an additional sum has been provided for secondary school libraries. As a step towards securing greater efficiency in the service, the Government expect local authorities to continue to rationalise school provision and remove surplus accommodation, and to cut the net costs of school meals provision.

Non-advanced further education

11. The overall student: staff ratio (SSR) for NAFE tightened a little in 1986 from 8.7:1 to 8.8:1, about 1 per cent. In reaching a view on the number of lecturers, I have taken into account the report of the joint efficiency study with local authority representatives which concluded that there should be a national target SSR for NAFE of 10.2:1 by 1991-92. The plans assume a further tightening in the SSR to 9.2:1 in 1988-89 as authorities progress towards that target. The plans will also enable LEAs to improve levels of provision per student across the full range of non-teaching costs.

Advanced further education

12. Following consultation with the local authority associations, I intend to determine the AFE quantum in 1988-89 at £781 million. This represents an increase of £64·5 million or 9 per cent. over the 1987-88 quantum. I have proposed that up to £25 million should be distributed selectively in support of selected initiatives of high priority. The plans assume that polytechnics and other institutions will continue to increase efficiency and make full use of available capacity.

13. The National Advisory Body is considering how the basic quantum should be distributed between authorities and how up to £25 million might be allocated selectively. I shall decide on the allocation of both elements later in the year in the light of the NAB's advice.

Specific grants

14. Within the total of £13,870 million, education expenditure supported by specific grants is expected to amount to some £500 million in 1988-89. This figure includes £207 million which I have already announced will be supported under the in-service training grants scheme; a proposed £115·5 million of expenditure to be assisted by education support grants; section 11 grants for Commonwealth immigrants; and the urban programme.

VOTE EXPENDITURE

Universities

15. Last year I agreed with the University Grants Committee and the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals a programme of improvements in the management of universities including selective funding, the rationalisation of small departments, better financial management and improved standards of teaching. I made it clear that the future funding of the universities would depend significantly upon the implementation of that programme.

16. Good progress has since been made. The 1987 academic pay settlement is another important development. The £56 million extra grant for 1988-89 already announced to help universities to meet the cost of that settlement will be released as soon as the Government are satisfied that the universities have sufficiently improved their arrangements for staff appraisal, probation and promotion. As I have already made clear, the Government will not provide funds for any further academic pay increase in 1988.

17. The Government have decided to provide the universities with an additional £61 million in 1988-89 and similar sums in later years. I shall be asking the University Grants Committee to allocate some £155 million of these extra funds to a targeted programme of restructuring including additional finance for early retirements, some "new blood" appointments, and the rationalisation of provision for a number of disciplines. In each case, I shall expect the UGC to authorise payments only where the expenditure is in accordance with the approved academic plans of the institutions concerned.

18. In 1988-89 the Open University will receive an extra £1·55 million and the Computer Board an extra £2 million.

19. Provision is also being made in 1988-89 and in later years for the extra cost to universities of the 1987 clinical academic pay settlement, and for an initiative in manufacturing systems engineering.

Science

20. The science budget for 1988-89 will be £696 million, an increase of £47 million over the plans published in Cm. 56. The planning figure for each of the following two years is now £729 million, providing for an 11 per cent. cash increase compared with the science budget this year. Within these figures special provision is being made for research in Antarctica, including a new research ship. There should also be scope for a worthwhile start in 1988-89 on the establishment of inter-disciplinary research centres, as recommended by the ABRC and to which I attach great importance. The Government will be giving further consideration in the next few months to policies for the strategic reshaping of the science base, taking account of restructuring within the universities, the ABRC's strategy advice and of our consultations on the board's recommendations. The totals I have announced for the science budget in 1988-89 and 1989-90 include provision for the MRC's special programme of research on AIDS; additional provision for this in later years will depend on the agreed evaluation of the programme but would not have to be found within the science budget baseline.

Voluntary Colleges

21. Following consultations with the Voluntary Sector Consultative Council I have determined the quantum of AFE expenditure at voluntary colleges grant-aided solely by my Department at £56·7 million. This recognises the special difficulties which these colleges have faced. It is expected to allow for some increases in student numbers; to contribute towards the maintenance of quality; and to enable the colleges to participate in selected initiatives of high priority.

Student Awards

22. Provision for student awards allows for a small increase in the number of mandatory award-holders. Details of the new rates of award and revised contribution scales will be announced later. Provision is also made for the basic tuition fee for courses eligible for mandatory awards to increase from £556 to £578. The review, chaired by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson), of all aspects of financial support for students studying at first degree or equivalent level will complete its work next year, when a consultation document on future arrangements for student finance will be published.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The expenditure on press advertising over the past five years has been:

	£
1982-83	2,562
1983-84	27,208
1984-85	26,225
1985-86	28,569
1986-87	53,982

Prices include production costs and VAT.

Note:

(1) Information is not readily available to distinguish between expenditure on advertising in national newspapers and that in the press generally.

(2) Information about expenditure in individual newspapers is commercially confidential and cannot be given in the form requested.

Management Information

Sir John Farr asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is now able to make available the 1987 returns of his top management information systems.

Mr. MacGregor: A copy of the 1987 MINIM returns which cover the objectives and resources used by the Ministry's programmes, has been placed today in the Library of the House.

Storm Damage

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider the provision of financial assistance to those farmers, horticulturists, owners of private woodlands and others who suffered loss and damage to their property as a consequence of the hurricane in the early hours of 16 October which is uninsurable and whose costs are not being met by local authority funds.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer, 2 November 1987]: I have every sympathy with those who have suffered as a result of the storm but see no reason to depart from the longstanding position that the Government do not pay compensation for the effects of bad weather, particularly where risks are insurable. I am, however, consulting the European Commission about the possibility of increasing the rates of some grants under the agriculture improvement scheme to help with work needed on shelterbelts, hedges and traditional walls. I am also assessing the losses suffered by fruit farmers in consultation with the NFU and others. I will consider the position when this assessment is complete.

As regards woodlands, the Forestry Commission has set up a forest wind blow action committee which will, amongst other things, assess the scale and nature of the damage, provide a service to promote the orderly marketing of fallen timber and issue both general and individual advice to owners of woodlands through its wind blow task force at Alice Holt, near Farnham, in Surrey. Financial help is available from the Countryside Commission for replanting small areas of woodland under arrangements announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 21 October. For the restocking of larger areas the Forestry Commission's forestry grant scheme and broadleaved woodland grant scheme provide assistance.

When we have made a considered assessment of the damage and of the work that has to be done, I will decide whether further financial assistance is needed.

CORRIGENDUM

Official Report, 29 June 1987:

The following question and answer should have been printed at c. 19:

Benefits

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in the Leeds, West constituency are currently in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit, (b) invalidity benefit, (c) housing benefit, (d) sickness benefit, (e) mobility allowance and (f) maternity benefit and how many people have received single payments in the current financial year.

Mr. Scott: The Leeds, West constituency is covered by two of the Department's local offices at Leeds, West and Leeds, North West, but their boundaries are not conterminous. The table shows the number of people receiving benefit from those offices on the latest date for which information is available:

	At 5 May 1987	At 2 June 1987
Supplementary Benefit	[1]727,739	—
Invalidity and Sickness Benefit	—	5,549
Maternity Benefit	—	379

[1] Source 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

In the period from 8 April 1987 to 2 June 1987 there have been 22,209 awards of single payments.

I regret that information about mobility allowance is not available and that the only available information on housing benefit relates to the entire Leeds city council area, and cannot be disaggregated by constituency.

DEFENCE

Royal Yacht Britannia

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the recent refit of the Royal Yacht Britannia; what proportion of the expenditure was met from public funds; and under what vote the expenditure from public funds was incurred.

Mr. Sainsbury: Subject to final negotiation, the cost of the current refit of HMY Britannia, due to complete today, will be in the order of £19 million. The cost will be wholly met from the Defence vote.

Zimbabwe and Mozambique Forces (Training)

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the percentage change for each year in the number of (a) Zimbabwe and (b) Mozambique armed forces trained in the United Kingdom since 1980, showing the 1980 figure as 100.

Mr. Freeman: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 28 October 1987, at column 241.

Armed Forces Houses (Newcastle upon Tyne)

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the last date of occupation by members of the armed forces of each of the 16 houses owned by his Department at Mansfield place, Moorside, Newcastle upon Tyne; and if he will give the date on which a written offer of sale was made to Newcastle upon Tyne city council.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence occupied 15 houses at Douglas terrace and Mansfield place, Moorside, on a ground lease from the Newcastle upon Tyne city council. these properties were formally offered to the council for sale on 1 October 1987.

The last date of occupation of each of the premises is as follows:

Numbers	Date
Douglas Terrace
1	15 May 1987
3	28 July 1987
5	7 November 1986
7	29 June 1987

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mr. Freeman: The total amount spent on national press advertising in each of the past five financial years is as follows:

	£ million
1982-83	3·5
1983-84	4·5
1984-85	5·65
1985-86	6·8
1986-87	6·7

It is not the Government's policy to disclose the sums paid to individual organisations.

TRANSPORT

M1 (Accident Statistics)

Mr. Janner asked the Minister for Transport how many collisions have occurred on the M1 in areas affected by roadworks during each of the last five years for which records are available; how many drivers and how many passengers have as a result been killed and injured, respectively; and how many and what percentage of such injuries and deaths were at or near areas where contraflow traffic systems were in operation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information readily available is as follows:

Number of injury accidents and casualties on the M1 at roadworks: 1982 to 1986

Year	Accidents	Casualties
		Drivers/Riders			Passengers
		Killed	Injured	Total	Killed	Injured	Total
1982	179	5	139	144	2	137	139
1983	148	3	119	122	5	160	165
1984	129	4	98	102	6	119	125
1985	82	3	60	63	4	87	91
1986	146	0	99	99	0	131	131
TOTAL	684	15	515	530	17	630	647

The accident report form records only whether roadworks "were present" where the accident occurred. Accidents occurring near to roadworks (eg in tailbacks) would not be recorded as "roadworks present".

The number of casualties at or near contraflow systems is not available due to disproportionate cost. The presence of contraflow systems is not recorded on the accident report form STATS19. The regional office of the regions through which the M1 passes were unable to supply directly the locations and times that contraflow systems were in operation on the M1 over the last five years. It would be costly, if possible, to obtain this information from the agent authorities.

Public Transport (Operators' Mileage)

Mr. Morley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total of public transport operators' route mileage in (a) 1985 and (b) 1986.

Mr. David Mitchell: Data for railways are published in table 3.9 of "Transport Statistics Great Britain: 1976-1986", copies of which are available in the Library. Information is not available on route mileage of road transport but my Department is aware that local bus mileage increased by 12 per cent. between November 1986 and November 1987.

Shipping Regulations

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for Transport what mechanism is available for shipowners whereby certain minor exceptions to the new regulations, the Merchant Shipping (Closing and Opening in Hulls and Watertight Bulkheads) Regulations 1987, could be given, taking into account the type of operation, its geographical area of employment and the quality of its on-board training.

Mr. David Mitchell: Applications for exemption from any of these particular regulations should be made in writing directly to the chief surveyor at the nearest marine office of the Department of Transport. Such applications should always include a reasoned case for seeking exemption.

Petrol Tankers (Braking Systems)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider making anti-lock braking systems mandatory for petrol tanker road vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are working to get the relevant European Community directives amended so that we can require anti-lock braking systems on all new heavy vehicles with trailers. That will include articulated petrol tanker vehicles.

M6-M61 Junction

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take urgent steps to seek to improve motorway vehicle flow in the vicinity of the M6/M61 junction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Vehicle flow at this point can only be improved by increasing the capacity of the junction. A scheme to deal with this problem and to widen and improve the M6 between this junction and junction 32 (Broughton) was added to the national trunk road programme by "Policy for Roads in England: 1987" (Cm. 125). Consultant engineers have been appointed and this scheme will be progressed as quickly as possible.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will urgently consider installing additional motorway hazard warning lights in the vicinity of the M6/M61 junction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. We are considering the installation of signals on the sign gantries on the approaches to the junction.

Stimulants

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been conducted by his Department into the use of stimulants and their affect on the performance of drivers; and if he will seek to ban the sale of stimulants at motorway service stations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Limited research suggests that fewer than 1 per cent. of road accidents are attributable to drugs or medicines. Further work is needed. The transport and road research laboratory is carrying out further studies in this field. I have no plans to ban the sale of stimulants at motorway service areas. The sale of alcohol is banned.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secreatary of State for Transport how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mr. Channon: Expenditure on press advertising[1] by my Department in each of the past five years was as follows:

	£
1982-83	816,000
1983-84	334,000
1984-85	475,788
1985-86	1,034,441
1986-87	4,367,555

[1] Including production costs and VAT.

The information is not readily available to distinguish between expenditure on advertising in national newspapers and that in the press generally.

It is not the policy of Her Majesty's Government to publicise the sums paid to individual organisations.

Southampton and Bristol (Road Links)

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to improve existing road links between Southampton and Bristol.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. Our comprehensive programme of schemes for the improvement of the A36/A46 trunk road between Southampton and Bristol is set out in the White Paper "Policy for Roads in England: 1987" published in April this year. (Cm. 125-II).

ENVIRONMENT

Docklands

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the progress of the London Docklands development corporation in developing London's docklands.

Mr. Trippier: Since its creation in 1981 the London Docklands development corporation has achieved notable success in securing the regeneration of its 2,065 hectare area. In the six years to 31 March 1987, the corporation reclaimed 370 hectares of land for new purposes and carried out extensive infrastructure works throughout its area. In the same period private sector development commitments of over £2·2 billion were secured, giving a gearing ratio of private investment to public capital investment of 9:1.

About 660 companies, many of them new enterprises, have moved into docklands premises. About 10 million sq ft of non-residential floor space is being developed or is already completed; an estimated 10,000 jobs had been attracted to the area by 1986; and about 12,000 new homes had been completed or were under construction. In addition, the more recent commitments to build the Canary wharf scheme represent a major new success for the corporation.

The LDDC has part funded the docklands light railway which opened earlier this year and which is being extended westwards to Bank. It is now funding a major extension of the railway eastwards into the Royal docks area, using the increase in the value of their disposable land as the source of finance. Major road schemes have been constructed and further ones are planned.

The growing momentum of development continues. This is being complemented by initiatives which aim to improve community facilities or help local residents take advantage of the new opportunities available to them. For example the Corporation is funding the provision of community centres and is sponsoring training initiatives to help the unemployed.

Loft Insulation

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of (a) owner-occupied homes, (b) private rented homes and (c) local authority rented homes have not been brought up to the standard of loft insulation recommended by his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following are estimates from a sample survey conducted by Audits of Great Britain Ltd.

Loft insulation, England: December 1986
Percentage of households

	Owner occupiers	Council tenants	[1]Other tenures
Some insulation	92	89	65
Four inches or more of insulation	50	34	32

[1] Private tenants, housing association tenants, housing provided with job, etc.

Note: Percentages are of those households with access to loft spaces.

There is no general recommendation on loft insulation. Homes insulation scheme grants provide assistance where lofts are not already insulated to a depth of 30 mm or more.

Hyde Park (Stables)

Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to permit the construction of stables in Hyde park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I am currently considering a proposal by the Rotten Row tercentenary committee to be allowed to build a civilian riding school near the White Horse Gate in Hyde Park. I will write to my hon. Friend when I have reached a decision on the policy implications for the management of the park.

Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the total number of people employed by authorities to which the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 applied in their direct labour organisations at the time at which that Act became law; how many are now so employed; and how many people are currently employed by contractors contracted by those authorities under the provisions of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act to do work won through tendering under the provisions of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act;

(2) if he will list by local authority the number of full-time equivalent jobs that have been lost in each local authority subject to the provisions of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, and if he will give a total figure for each financial year since the Act became law;

(3) how many people have been made redundant by authorities subject to the provisions of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980; and if he will give this figure both as a total since the Act became law and as a figure for each financial year since that time.

Mr. Chope: In October 1980 local authorities and new towns in Great Britain are estimated to have directly employed 156,606 people on construction and maintenance work covered by part III of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. By October 1986 the number had fallen to 116,806. It is not possible to estimate the extent to which the change resulted from the operation of the Act.

The other information requested is not available.

Local Labour Clauses

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what legal advice his Department has received from outside Her Majesty's Government on the implications of EC public works directive 71/305/EEC and public contracts directive 77/602/EEC for local labour clauses; if he will place a copy of this advice in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: It is not normal Government practice to publish details or sources of legal advice offered to Ministers. Nevertheless, I am advised that EC public works and supplies directives set out the criteria on which the contracting authority shall base the award of contracts. These criteria do not include the area of residence of the work force, and any such criteria would constitute an obstacle to equality of treatment of contractors tendering from other parts of the Community.

Easington District Council

Mr. Cummings asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by what percentage the housing investment programme for Easington district council has been reduced since 1979.

Mr. Waldegrave: The latest estimate of housing capital investment for 1987-88 by Easington district council is 94 per cent. in cash terms of the authority's 1979-80 expenditure.

Peterlee

Mr. Cummings asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the total investment in industrial development in the new town of Peterlee during the period 1970 to 1987.

Mrs. Roe: This information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Sewerage

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of significant sewer collapses in 1985-86 for each water authority; whether this represents an increase or a decrease over the previous year for each authority; and if he will indicate the difference between the two figures for each authority as a percentage for the total figure for each authority for the previous year.

Mr. Moynihan: The numbers I can give the hon. Member relate to sewer failures from all causes, not only from collapses. These numbers can change considerably from year to year for any one authority, and may in part be due to changes in the extent and quality of reporting.

The number of significant sewer failures for each regional water authority in 1985-86, and the percentage change from 1984-85 are:

	Number	per cent.
Anglian	286	+4
Northumbrian	232	+43
North West	1,136	+14
Severn Trent	423	−12
Southern	515	+101
South West	220	−4
Thames	649	+18
Wessex	285	−19
Yorkshire	1,340	−1

Nature Conservation

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current position as regards his Department's circular "Nature Conservation and Planning".

Mr. Moynihan: Consultations with interested bodies and other Departments have taken longer than expected. The circular is however now in the final stages of preparation, and I expect to issue it soon.

Sport (Schools)

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what liaison there is between his Department, local educational authorities and the Sports Council over the promotion of team sport in schools; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what inquiries are currently being undertaken by his Department concerning the promotion of sports in school.

Mr. Moynihan: In November 1986 the Department of the Environment and the Department of Education and Science convened a seminar to exchange views about sport in schools, including team sports, to inform Government, sporting bodies and educational interests. Since the seminar, a new forum led by the Sports Council with representatives from local authorities, sports governing bodies and educational bodies has been set up to study issues, recommend courses of action and report by 1 January 1988. The DOE and DES jointly funded a review of research and information on school sport which was completed in May last.

Departmental Land (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount of land in the Chelmsford borough council area that belongs to Government Departments and is surplus to requirements; and if he will break down the total acreage by each Department.

Mr. Chope: There is no land over 1 acre in area in the Chelmsford borough council area belonging to Government Departments which is surplus to requirements. Some 91 acres (37 hectares) of such land is owned by the local authorities, nationalised industries and statutory undertakers, most of which is awaiting disposal.

Sport (Drugs)

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made in the inquiry he has conducted into the problems of drug taking in British sport; in how many sports he found evidence of drug taking; in which sports he found such evidence; what action he intends to take to disclose the identities of sportsmen or women who take drugs in order to enhance their performance and what action he has taken to ensure that disciplinary procedures or police investigation will follow in each of these cases.

Mr. Moynihan: I undertook with Sebastian Coe, vice-chairman of the Sports Council, a review of drug abuse in sport this summer. We published our report in September, copies are available in the Library. Investigations and discussions held during the review were confidential. We were concerned to assess the effectiveness of present controls, not to pursue individual cases of drug abuse. The report identified the need for a revised, independent testing regime and invited the Sports Council to submit detailed proposals. The report was endorsed by the ministerial group on the misuse of drugs and by the Sports Council.

The Sports Council agreed detailed proposals at its meeting on 2 November. These involve:

(1) all testing to be undertaken by independent officials

(2) the selection of competitors for testing to be on a random basis

(3) testing out-of-competition to be introduced
(4) adverse findings and follow-up action by governing bodies to be publicised.

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many sports he has found no evidence of drug taking; and what action he proposes to take publicly to exonerate all those sports which were found to be clean of any malpractice.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave him today. In the course of the review into the misuse of drugs in sport we sought the views of 213 governing bodies about their current policies and programmes. I was pleased at the welcome extended to the review and grateful to the governing bodies for their co-operation and contributions. The issue of exonerations for those sports where drug abuse is not a problem does not arise. I have not received any representations on this matter from the governing bodies.

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been achieved as a result of the Sports Council's inquiry into drug taking in sport; what has been the cost of this investigation; and why the Minister for Sport has established his own further inquiry into this subject.

Mr. Moynihan: The Sports Council has not undertaken an inquiry into drug-taking in sport. I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave him today.

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken in the light of recent evidence concerning the incidence of drug taking by British sports competitors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the right hon. Member to the answers I gave him today.

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money is to be allocated for drug testing purposes in British sport; what percentage of the Sports Council budget this represents; and upon what evidence concerning the extent of the problem the present trend of this expenditure is based.

Mr. Moynihan: The Sports Council's 1987-88 budget provision for combatting the misuse of drugs in sport is £365,000 representing ·08 per cent. of the total budget. The council's planned provision for 1988-89 is £445,000—likely to be some 1 per cent. of the budget. Annex A of the report on the misuse of drugs in sport, copies of which are available in the Library, gives details of the number of tests each year since 1979 and the incidence of banned substances.

Football Supporters (Breathalysing)

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Football League clubs have responded to the Minister for Sport's initiatives on breathalysing football spectators prior to Football League matches; what consultations took place with police authorities before this announcement was made; and what advice they have given about the feasibility of such tests minutes before kick off.

Mr. Moynihan: At a meeting on 19 October with representatives of the football authorities and the police, the Football League agreed to inquire into the possibility of stewards inside grounds having breathalysers available to test those suspected of excessive drinking. This may be an effective additional deterrent against hooliganism and would best be tried as an experiment in a small group of clubs, subject to police advice. I await a report from the Football League following their discussions with the police. The police response to this initiative at the meeting on 19 October was encouraging.

Electrical Safety

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what representations he has received about standards of safety in electrical installation in buildings for which he is responsible and in property owned by local authorities; if he is considering recommending the use of circuit breakers to prevent accidents; if he will introduce mandatory measures for controlling electrical installations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent representations he has received about standards of safety in electrical installation work in domestic and commercial buildings; if he will consider a system of registration of those undertaking this work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has received representations about standards of safety in electrical installation work from the Institute of Electrical Engineers, the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents and the Electrical Cable Makers Confederation in response to the technical review of the building regulations.

I accept that circuit breakers can play an important part in guarding against the misuse of normally safe installations and the hazards of faulty appliances. The IEE wiring regulations, which require the installation of circuit breakers in circumstances where a traditional method of earthing would not be appropriate, are very widely observed throughout the United Kingdom wherever new houses are constructed or rewiring undertaken. The representations made on electrical safety are being carefully considered but I do believe there is a case for leaving it to be covered by the IEE regulations rather than by introducing further legislation.

Council House Sales

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. E. Collins of his home at 18 Priory court, Cheltenham road, London, S.E.15, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. and Mrs. F. Sullivan of their home at 4 Priory court, Cheltenham road, London, S.E.15, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. G. Stout of his home at 17 Bromleigh court, Sydenham hill, London, S.E.23, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. W. J. Colville of his home at 15 Ruskin Park house, Champion hill, London, S.E.5, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. James Whitwell of his home at 7 Grove court, Camberwell grove, London, S.E.5, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. and Mrs. S. Morton of their home at 13 Seeley drive, London, S.E.21, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(7) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. and Mrs. J. Wand of their home at 7 Goodwin house, Nunhead crescent, London SE15, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement.

(8) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mrs. M. Miles of her home at 85 Ruskin Park house, Champion hill, London SE5, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(9) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. D. McClean of his home at 1 Deventer crescent, London SE22, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(10) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. F. G. Frankham of his home at 10 Princes court, 156 College road, London SE19, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(11) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mrs. B. T. Szydlowski of her home at 11 Monteagle way, Consort road, London SE15, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(12) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. F. Lloyd of his home at 19 Gylcote close, Denmark hill, London SE5, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(13) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. W. Lush of his home at 69 Delawyck crescent, Half Moon lane, London SE24, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(14) what information he has as to the reasons for delay in the purchase by Mr. and Mrs. M. Crook of their home at 66 Delawyck crescent, Half Moon lane, London SE24, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(15) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. and Mrs. Ewart of their home at 27 New James court, Nunhead lane, London SE15, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement;

(16) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Miss B. Thompson of her home at 46b Limesford road, London SE15, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department is monitoring closely the right-to-buy performance of Southwark borough council and has taken up with it the cases of the tenants mentioned.

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the reasons for the continued delay in the purchase by Mr. W. Crabb of his home at 99 Scylla road, London S.E.15, from Southwark council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that Mr. Crabb claimed to exercise his right to buy in 1981. I am extremely concerned to hear of the unacceptable delays he has suffered. I am seeking a full explanation from Southwark council and will write to my hon. Friend.

Local Authority Grants

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the proposed methodology for constructing the assessments of need for the new local authority grant system envisages a negative outturn.

Mr. Howard: We do not envisage negative assessments for any individual authority.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the separate needs of subheadings used by him at present for local authority grants and referred to in paragraph 15 of the Yellow Paper "The New Grant System", indicating those which will not be required under the proposed system.

Mr. Howard: The needs subheadings used for 1987-88 are listed in the document "Grant-Related Expenditure 1987-88" which is available in the Library. The details of the new arrangements will be decided after discussion with local authority representatives, but there are likely to be significantly fewer subheadings than at present.

Rating Reform

Mr. Marland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide illustrative figures for each local authority of the effect of implementing his proposed local government finance reform in the form of a banded community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Illustrative figures for a banded charge would depend on the details of the scheme proposed—for example, the bands of income and the relationship between bands. Such a scheme would involve all the disadvantages of a local income tax with, additionally, considerable poverty trap effects on running from one band to another.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how the proposed needs assessment for local authorities under the new grant system proposed for the introduction of the poll tax will be open to challenge.

Mr. Howard: The needs assessment methodology will, after discussion with the local authority associations, be set out in a distribution report which will require the approval of the House. After approval, it will, like other decisions, be open to challenge by application for judicial review.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the 1987-88 poll tax exemplifications using safety netted figures in the same form as those published for 1986-87.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 28 October 1987]: Not yet, because the transitional arrangements are presently being reconsidered.

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he is having with Age Concern in relation to the introduction of the poll tax and its effect on retirement pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 30 October 1987]: The Department has consulted Age Concern on the Government's proposals for rates reform and Age Concern has expressed its views in detail. I fully expect to continue discussions with Age Concern about the impact of our proposals on retirement pensioners.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mr. Ridley: For each of the past five years the total of press advertising expenditure (other than on recruitment, tendering and statutory notices) by my Department, including the Property Services Agency, was:

Year	Press advertising £
1982-83	688,538
1983-84	19,184
1984-85	679,690
1985-86	543,527
1986-87	338,000

The information available does not distinguish between the use of national and local newspapers. The sums paid to individual organisations is a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Cash Limits

Mr. Patnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of outturn in the current year on cash limit DOE/LA1; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: DOE/LA1 covers capital expenditure and receipts by local authorities in England on education, housing, transport, personal social services, and other services. The first quarter's returns indicate that there is likely to be an underspend this year of a substantial amount. I have already announced that some additional allocations may be made to cover expenditure in the current year in making good storm damage. But in view of the size of the prospective underspend, I and my colleagues responsible for the services within the cash limit in addition propose supplementary allocations of up to £75 million to cover expenditure on worthwhile schemes which will be incurred in the remainder of this financial year.

As far as my own services are concerned, up to £44·7 million of the extra resources will specifically be made available for additional housing schemes. I intend to direct these resources at well-targeted and cost-effective schemes to tackle homelessness, housing defects, renovation and homes insulation.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans any changes in his public expenditure programmes.

Mr. Ridley: My right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer has today announced the Government's public expenditure plans for the next three years. The following tables give details of the major changes in my Department's programmes. Because of increased receipts I have been able to provide for significant increases in gross expenditure, particularly for housing, the inner cities and the environment without increasing net expenditure.

Housing

There is a substantial increase in gross provision for housing capital expenditure in 1988-89. At £3,827 million, this is £384 million (11 per cent.) higher than previously planned and £159 million higher than the estimated outturn for 1987-88. In 1989-90 there will be an increase of £284 million on previous plans. Increases on this scale have been made possible by the continuing success of the right to buy, and by disposals of new towns land for housing. Capital receipts are now expected to yield more than £2 billion in each of the next three years.

Within the total available for capial investment I have allocated resources in accordance with the priorities outlined in the White Paper "Housing: the Government's proposals" (Cm. 214). Gross provision for the Housing Corporation will increase by nearly £50 million in 1988-89, and by 1990-91 will be £145 million higher than expected outturn in 1987-88. I hope that these extra public resources will increasingly be augmented by private finance under mixed funding arrangements.

While housing associations will have an increasing share of the provision of new social housing for rent, I have made substantial additional provision for local authorities to enable them to spend more on renovation of their existing stock. Gross provision fot local authority capital spending in 1988-89 will be £3,048 million, an increase of £313 million on previous plans and of £128 million on estimated outturn for 1987-88.

As local authority spending power from receipts continues to increase, the borrowing consent represented by capital allocations declines in importance. Nevertheless, basic housing investment programme and homes insulation scheme allocations will remain at a high level in 1988-89: at £1,150 million they will stand at around 90 per cent. of this year's.

Additional allocations will again be made to local authorities to revitalise rundown estates under the Department's estate action programme. The resources available will nearly double, to £140 million.

Additionally, over the three survey years I am making available a total of £125 million for housing action trusts so that they can renovate some of the worst estates of rundown local authority housing, and pass it on to new forms of ownership and management.

Housing investment by new towns is increasingly confined to the servicing of sites for development by the private sector. Gross provision in each of the next three years has been increased to support this activity, and is more than financed by increased proceeds from disposals.

Because of the continuing high level of receipts it will be possible to achieve the higher levels of gross provision for capital investment I have outlined without any increase in the overall net housing programme totals already planned. The figures are given in the following table. Compared with expected outturn in 1987-88 the overall planned level of net expenditure in 1988-89 shows an increase of £498 million (20 per cent.).

Other environmental services

I continue to give very high priority to the inner cities. The urban development corporations have proven their worth in bringing effective help to the areas of greatest need, drawing on the resources and expertise of the private sector, and I am increasing planned resources by £65 million in 1988-89, and £68 million in 1989-90. Total resources for UDCs will now be more than £200 million in each of the next three years. This will enable us to maintain the momentum of the corporations in London and Merseyside, to secure the successful launch of the four new UDCs established this year (in Trafford Park, Teesside, Tyne and Wear and the Black country) and to press ahead with further initiatives.

Despite the increased emphasis on UDCs I am still continuing to provide substantial resources, nearly £300 million a year, for the other parts of my urban group: the urban programme (including urban development grant and urban regeneration grant) and derelict land grant.

I am also increasing resources for the countryside, environment, recreation and heritage. The Development Commission, Nature Conservancy Council, Countryside Commission and Sports Council will receive increased financial support. In addition the National Heritage Memorial Fund will receive an additional £20 million capital injection in 1987-88.

Provision for gross capital expenditure in 1988-89 on local environmental services has been increased by £60 million to £627 million.

The increases in gross expenditure in the other environmental services programme in 1988-89 have been more than offset by substantial increases in forecast receipts to local authorities and the new towns. This reflects in particular the success of the new town bodies' programme of disposals as the private sector takes an increasingly prominent role in the future of the towns.

Water

I am reducing slightly the borrowing limit for the water authorities by £9 million in 1988-89. Water authorities continue to reduce real operating costs and this, taken with increased profitability, will enable them to finance large increases in investment proposed in their 1987 corporate plans. Capital expenditure has already grown in real terms by 40 per cent. since 1980-81 and is currently running at about £1 billion. Further major growth is now assured in programmes to improve water and sewage treatment and to renew underground assets.

The British Waterways Board external financing limit is to increase by £1·6 million in each year.

Property Services Agency

PSA's civil accommodation programme in net terms is planned to decrease by £22 million in 1988-89 and by £59 million in 1989-90. But because disposal and Property Repayment Services receipts are expected to increase substantially, expenditure is planned to increase by £63 million and £78 million respectively in the next two years. After meeting increases on rents to be paid to landlords and other unavoidable expenditure, the agency should be able to allocate sufficient funds to the maintenance of the civil estate in 1988-89 to prevent further build up of the backlog of work. In the following year the Agency should be able to make inroads into this backlog.

Overall Local Authority Expenditure, England

I proposed on 23 July that provision for local authority relevant current expenditure for 1988-89 should be increased by £838 million to £27,538 million and that aggregate Exchequer grant should be £13,775 million, an increase of £750 million compared to 1987-88. I am consulting local government about my proposals for the 1988-89 rate support grant settlement.

As regards local authority capital expenditure overall, gross provision for the main local authority cash limit DOE-LA1 in 1988-89 has been increased by £500 million. Because of authorities' continuing success in increasing their capital receipts, this has not required an increase in net provision. The revised plans allow for gross spending on the five services covered by the cash limit (housing, education, transport, personal social services and other services) of nearly £5·2 billion.

The very high level of receipts being generated by authorities in 1987-88, which is leading to an underspend against the net cash limit, will add to the growth in accumulated receipts and hence will lead to a further increase in the spending power from receipts next year. Despite this, the increase that has been agreed for gross provision means that the allocations available for the services across the cash limit in 1988-89 should be broadly equal to allocations issued for the present year.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many buildings have been downgraded from grade II* listed to grade II in each year since 1979;

(2) how many buildings have been downgraded from grade II* listed to unlisted in each year since 1979.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not readily available.

Storm Damage

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will show in the Official Report the lastest estimates of dealing with storm damage incurred by local authorities on the night of 15 and 16 October both in total and for each authority, showing (a) the total expenditure incurred, (b) expenditure up to the Bellwin scheme threshold, (c) grant lost by the authority for expenditure up to the Bellwin scheme threshold and (d) expenditure above the Bellwin scheme threshold, gross and net of specific grant.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 2 November 1987]: I do not yet have sufficiently reliable information to provide the detailed figures requested.

Households

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the numbers of households comprising (a) one adult, (b) two adults, (c) three adults, (d) four adults and (e) five or more adults in (i) England, (ii) each economic planning region and (iii) each local authority.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 2 November 1987]: Numbers of households estimated from the 1985 labour force survey for England and the standard regions are shown in the table.

The 1981 census county reports, available in the Library, show the numbers of households with 1, 2 and 3 or more persons aged 16 or over in each local authority area (table 39). Analyses of the 1981 census data on the basis of people aged 18 or over could be produced only at excessive cost.

EMPLOYMENT

Manpower Services Commission

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement as to the future of the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Fowler: The Employment Bill which I introduced in the House on 22 October, at column 944, includes provision to amend the law with respect to the constitution and functions of the Manpower Services Commission and for it to be known as the Training Commission. Together with the creation of an integrated employment service within my Department the purpose of these changes is to help the unemployed back into work and to enable the Training Commission to concentrate on the key task of meeting the nation's skill needs.

The employment service, which is directly operated by my Department, now provides a full range of services for unemployed people, including the payment of benefit, help and advice to unemployed and other job-seekers and job placement. It is the gateway to the whole range of programmes that we have developed or are developing for unemployed people.

The Training Commission will be at the heart of our efforts to harness the resources of Government, industry, commerce and individuals to the crucial task of meeting our present and future skill needs. To this end it will continue to develop its existing provision for the vocational education and training of young people and adults including the youth training scheme and the job training scheme. It will also run the community programme, community industry and the voluntary projects programme. I also attach great importance to the commission's role in encouraging employers and individuals to grasp the opportunities that training offers to sharpen industrial competitiveness and improve career opportunities.

In pursuing their respective roles I expect the employment service and the commission to work closely together where a joint effort is necessary to meet key objectives such as our commitment for 16 and 17-year-olds and the long-term unemployed.

Interviews (Travel Assistance)

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will review the current guidelines on eligibility for assistance under travel to interview on Manpower Services Commission-sponsored schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The travel-to-interview scheme, which includes provision for participants on certain schemes sponsored by the Manpower Services Commission, is at present being reviewed following its first year of operation, and I will write to the hon. Member when the results are known.

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many people in (a) Leeds, West constituency and (b) Leeds metropolitan district council area have received financial assistance to attend interviews on Manpower Services Commission-sponsored schemes in the past 12 months; and what proportion of total applications for such finance this represents.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 26 October 1987]: For the year ending September 1987, 318 people applied for help under the travel-to-interview scheme in the jobcentre areas which approximate to the Leeds, West constituency. Of these, 79 per cent. received assistance. The corresponding figures for the area approximating to the Leeds metropolitan district were, 356 applications, 77 per cent. of whom received assistance. Information about the numbers of these applicants attending interviews for places on Manpower Services Commission schemes is not available.

Contracts of Employment (Disputes)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will exercise his powers under the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and transfer to industrial tribunals disputes concerning contracts of employment.

Mr. Nicholls: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Prohibition and Improvement Notices

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many prohibition and how many improvement notices have been served in Leicester during each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the information for the years 1981 to 1986-87. Data for other years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will increase the number of inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive; and whether he has any proposals to change the annual budget of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive is a matter for the Health and Safety Commission, acting within its grant-in-aid provision. The planned provision for 1988-89 and future years is currently under consideration.

Training (Safety)

Mrs. Mahon asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest notifiable accidents to (a) YTS trainees, (b) community programme workers and (c) job training scheme workers.

Mr. Lee: Table (a) provides accident figures for YTS trainees by quarter for fatal, major and minor injuries for the period 1 April to 30 September 1987.

Participants in the job training scheme (JTS) and new job training scheme (new JTS) are trainees. Table (b) provides fatal, major and minor accidents by quarter to trainees on the job training scheme for the period 1 April to 30 September 1987.

Table (c) provides fatal, major and minor accidents by quarter for trainees on the new job training scheme (new JTS) period 1 April to 30 September 1987. Accident statistics for community programme workers are not available. Accidents to these workers are, however, reportable to the Health and Safety Executive.

[1] MSC accident figures are for trainees on YTS, JTS and new JTS have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive on employed persons. However, the commission's figures will include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments which may not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individuals been employed.
[2] Major injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.
[3] This fatality was a road traffic accident in scheme time.

Mrs. Mahon asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many health and safety inspectors' working hours are spent each week on average inspecting or monitoring premises and conditions at work for (a) YTS, (b) community programme schemes and (c) job training schemes.

Mr. Cope: The information as requested is not available. When carrying out inspections, health and safety inspectors examine the health and safety conditions of all persons, regardless of whether they are engaged on Government schemes or not. Therefore, no distinction is made between those premises at which people are engaged on YTS, community programme schemes and JTS, and those where they are not.

Community Programme

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total nationally of the numbers of workers on community programme schemes who lost unemployment benefit under the Social Security (Unemployment, Sickness, and Invalidity Benefit) Amendment Regulations 1987; and if he will give totals on a similar basis for each unemployment benefit office in Newcastle upon Tyne.

Mr. Lee: Statistical records are not kept of unemployment benefit claims disallowed for this reason.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for 30 September 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 the total number of unemployment benefit claimants allowed to sign quarterly; and if he will give the totals on a similar basis for each unemployment benefit office in Newcastle.

Mr. Lee: The figures requested are set out in the following tables:

1—Unemployment benefit claimants signing quarterly: Great Britain (shown to the nearest thousand)

Disabled People

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Employment what provision will be made to accommodate disabled people who are not able to cope with the demands of full-time work into the community programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: There are many part-time jobs available on the community programme for those unable to work full-time. Improvements to be introduced next year will focus the programme more closely on the individual training needs of participants, and final details have still to be settled.

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from disabled groups regarding the change in eligibility to join the community programme to one year's unemployment for everyone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: There have been no such changes to eligibility rules as far as these affect disabled people. Disabled people may still join the programme after six months unemployment.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people, by sex, work full-time and part-time in the Dundee, West constituency for the latest available date; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979;

(2) how many people in the Dundee, West constituency are employed in the service industries on the latest available figures; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979;

(3) how many people in the Dundee, West constituency are employed in manufacturing industry on the latest available figures; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979;

Mr. Lee [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The available employment estimates for parliamentary constituencies are from censuses of employment taken in September 1981 and September 1984 and are as follows. A breakdown by industry and by full and part-time status is not available for the earlier year.

Employees in employment[1]

[1] The figures exclude the self-employed and members of Her Majesty's forces.

[2] To facilitate comparisons over time, the figures for the constituency are aggregates of frozen wards (ie, ward boundaries as at 1981).

N/A = Not available.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of job vacancies in the Dundee, West constituency for the latest available date.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1987]: I have been asked to reply.

Vacancy statistics are not available on a parliamentary constituency basis. However, the number of vacancies notified in the Dundee jobcentre area and remaining unfilled on 4 September 1987 was 579 (including 84 community programme vacancies). It is estimated that only around one third of all vacancies nationally are notified to jobcentres. This information is available in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Census

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is planning to hold a census in Northern Ireland in 1991.

Mr. Tom King: Yes. The need for information on the population and alternative ways to gather it have been examined, and it has been concluded that in line with England, Wales and Scotland, a census should be held in Northern Ireland in 1991. The registrar general has arranged for consultations about the census to be held with users of census statistics and submissions to him from any source are welcome. Proposals for the content of the census will be announced next year.

ENERGY

Retired Miners

Mr. Cummings asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate how many retired miners there are in (a) the Durham area and (b) the Northumberland area.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This information is not available.

Coal Reserves (Ponfeigh)

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is British Coal's assessment of the coal reserves in the townhead area of the village of Ponfeigh.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a management matter for the British Coal Corporation. I will ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mr. Parkinson: Figures for expenditure on press advertising for 1982-83 to 1983-84 were given in the answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North West (Mr. Banks) at column 267 on 8 May 1984, those for 1984-85 were given in the answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North West at column 359 on 6 December 1985 and those for 1985-86 were given in the answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) at column 231 on 19 November 1986. The figure for 1986-87 was £11,830,000 including the British Gas flotation. All figures include production costs.

Information is not readily available to distinguish between expenditure on advertising in national newspapers and that in the press generally. The sums paid to individual organisations are commercially confidential.

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in the Western Isles;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the Western Isles in the financial year 1989-90, calculated on the basis of (a) 100 per cent. collection, (b) 95 per cent. collection, (c) 90 per cent. collection, (d) 85 per cent. collection, (e) 80 per cent. collection, (f) 75 per cent. collection and (g) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Doran asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in the Aberdeen, South constituency;

(2) if he will publish a tale showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the Aberdeen, South constituency in the financial year 1989, calculated (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection, (iii) 90 per cent. collection, (iv) 85 per cent. collection, (v) 80 per cent. collection, (vi) 75 per cent. collection and (vii) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish the predictions level of the personal community charge in the constituency for 1989-90 calculating a basis of (i) 100 per cent. (ii) 80 per cent. collection;

(2) if he will estimate how many applicants will be required to enforce the poll tax in Cunninghame, North.

Mr. Lang: No. These are matters for the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the predicted level of the personal community charge in the Monklands, West constituency in the financial year 1989-90 calculated on the basis of (a) 100 per cent. collection, (b) 95 per cent. collection, (c) 90 per cent. collection, (d) 85 per cent. collection, (e) 80 per cent. collection, (f) 75 per cent. collection and (g) 70 per cent. collection.

Mr. Lang: No. This is a matter for the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to make regulations to provide that where a sum is paid by a tenant being within a designated premises within the meaning of section 11 of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, in respect of a community charge (a) that any payment made in excess of the number of days of his residence in that provision is returned to him without delay and (b) that any records made with section 11(14) of the Act is open to investigation by any tenant who has made a payment under section 11.

Mr. Lang: No. Section 11(16) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 provides for the reimbursement of sums paid by way of collective community charge contributions where these sums are not due. Records kept under section 11(14) of the Act will be available to the community charges registration officer when he sets the multiplier determining the level of the collective community charge and multipliers will normally be available for public inspection under section 20(2)(a) of the Act.

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to make any regulations in order to define those persons who come within the scope of section 8(7) and section 8(8) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987.

Mr. Lang: The draft Abolition of Domestic Rates (Domestic and Part Residential Subjects) (Scotland) Regulations 1987, which were recently issued for consultation with interested bodies, define certain classes of premises—nursing homes, residential care homes and certain hostels providing an equivalent level of care—which will remain in rating after 1 April 1989. Persons soley or mainly resident in these premises (except resident staff) will be exempt from personal community charge liability under section 8(8)(d) of the 1987 Act. Draft regulations will shortly be brought forward dealing with the criteria to be taken into account by the community charges registration officer in designating premises as liable to the collective community charge: residents in these premises will be exempt from personal community charge liability under section 8(8)(c) of the Act, but will be required to pay to the landlord collective community charge contributions at the same daily level.

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to make regulations to require that where a tenant pays rent that indicates an element in respect of domestic rates that any such rent payable after 1 April 1989 is reduced by such amount as was payable in respect of domestic rates.

Mr. Lang: No. Domestic rates will be abolished on 1 April 1989 and rents which now include an element of rates will therefore no longer do so.

Closures and Redundancies

Mr. MacDonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all factory closures that have resulted in 20 or more redundancies in the Western Isles in each year since 1979.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all closures and redundancies in Cunninghame, North constituency since 1978.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all closures that have resulted in 25 or more redundancies in the Monklands, West constituency in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information requested cannot be provided since details of closures and redundancies confirmed by individual companies are provided to the Manpower Services Commission in confidence.

Mental Health

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many current occupants of National Health Service and unit beds in Scotland have a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis; what those figures are as percentages of (a) mental and (b) all hospital beds in Scotland; and how these figures compare with each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Patients with main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis shown as percentage of all psychiatric hospital beds and all hospital beds

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Patients	4,156	3,913	3,762	3,575	3,526

Percentage of all beds	7·2	6·8	6·6	6·3	6·3

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the admissions by diagnosis and order of admission including percentage change in numbers and rates per 100,000 population, of patients suffering from schizophrenic psychosis in Scotland for the years 1984 to 1986 inclusive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Admissions to psychiatric hospitals with schizophrenic psychosis

	Number			Percentage change
	1984	1985	1986	1984-86
First admission	400	384	374	−6·5

High Court of Justiciary

Mr. Menzies Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of people who stood trial in the High Court of Justiciary in Scotland on charges of murder and of those how many where convicted of (a) murder or (b) culpable homicide in the last three years for which such information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information available is given in the table:

		Year of result	Scotland
	1984	1985	1986
Persons called to court in cases initially recorded by the police as murder	102	116	91 of whom:
Number convicted of murder	36	25	28
Number convicted of culpable homicide	31	45	27

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Menzies Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the number of occasions on which applicants in Scotland for (a) shotgun certificates and (b) firearm certificates who have had their applications refused appealed against refusal to the sheriff court and the results of any such appeals in the last three years for which such information is available;

(2) what was the number of occasions on which applicants in Scotland for (a) shotgun certificates and (b) firearms certificates had their applications refused in the last three years for which such information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of applications refused is as follows:

	1984	1985	1986
Firearms certificates	12	31	30
Shotgun certificates	88	52	85

Note: The 1986 figures exclude the number of renewal applications refused by Lothian and Borders police in respect of which statistics are not available.

Information about appeals to the sheriff court against refusals to grant or renew certificates is not available as such appeals are not recorded separately.

Buses

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the total bus mileage operated by (a) private companies and (b) companies owned by local authorities and other public sector bodies since the operation of the Transport Act 1985 in each regional council area in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total bus mileage registered by private operators, public transport companies owned by local authorities and the Scottish Bus Group as at January 1987 are as follows:

Region	Private operators	Public transport companies owned by local authorities	Scottish Bus Group
Borders	0·80	—	2·50
Central	0·54	—	7·15
Dumfries and Galloway	1·06	—	1·51
Fife	1·17	—	8·21
Grampian	1·59	5·85	7·30
Highland	2·47	—	4·30
Lothian	1·06	17·10	15·61
Strathclyde	13·33	24·61	52·95
Tayside	2·70	3·29	5·12
Orkney	1·06	—	—
Shetland	0·56	—	—
Western Isles	0·20	—	—

Note: Mileage shown in millions.

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the total bus mileage operated in each local authority area in Scotland (a) before 7 pm and (b) after 7 pm each day.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This question cannot be answered without disproportionate cost.

Gaelic

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received in favour of Gaelic being included in the curriculum of schools in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend receives representations from time to time about the place of Gaelic in the curriculum.

Courses and examinations are currently available for both Gaelic learners and native speakers at the ordinary grade and higher grade of the Scottish certificate of education; there is a certificate of sixth year studies in Gaelic. Standard grade courses for learners and native speakers are planned for introduction in 1988 as part of the Government's standard grade development programme.

Under section 1.5(iii) of the Education Scotland Act 1980, education authorities have a statutory responsibility to provide for the teaching of Gaelic in Gaelic-speaking areas.

Housing

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether it is proposed that Scottish Special Housing Association tenants will suffer any diminution of their existing rights as a result of legislation to follow the consultative document on Scottish housing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. Suggestions that this might be the case are wholly without foundation. My right hon. and learned Friend has already taken steps to ensure that reassurance is available to tenants who have been caused unnecessary anxiety by those who have irresponsibly sought to mislead them.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce legislation to enforce the improvement of conditions in the private rented housing sector.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government's proposals for the future development of housing policy, including provisions relating to the private rented sector, will be set out in full in a White Paper which it is intended to publish shortly.

YTS

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage of employers in Scotland who are paying YTS trainees (a) the basic rate, (b) topping up payments by less than £5 per week and (c) topping up payments by more than £5 per week.

Mr. Lang: This information is not collected. I understand, however, that many YTS trainees, particularly those with employed status, receive topping up payments.

Drunken Offenders (Designated Places)

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to increase the number of designated places available for drunken offenders under section 5 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provision of designated places is a matter for voluntary organisations, which may be eligible for grant under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, or local authorities.

School Boards

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if as a result of the consultation process he has any plans to alter his proposals on school boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The consultation period has not yet ended. The purpose of consultation is to elicit views on a proposal and then to consider the responses before reaching a decision. That is what we intend to do.

Nurses

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish (a) the number of nurses in post at Eastern general hospital and (b) the Lothian health board established figure for nurses at the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At 31 March 1987 the number of nurses in post and the nursing establishment at the Eastern general hospital was 292·4 and 299·2 (whole-time equivalents) respectively.

National Health Service

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing, for each year since 1979, (a) the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in Lothian and in Scotland, respectively, and (b) the number of National Health Service staff in terms of full-time equivalents in Lothian and Scotland, respectively.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

	Average available staffed beds in NHS hospitals at 30 September		NHS staff[3], [4] whole time equivalent at 30 September
	Lothian	Scotland	Lothian	Scotland
1979	8,374	58,501	17,543·0	115,736·6

1987[1]	[2]8,047	[2]55,349	18,882·8	123,673·5

[1] At 31 March.

[2] Provisional.

[3] Excludes General Practitioners.

[4] The conditioned hours for nurses changed from 40 in 1979 to 37·5 thereafter.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the number of people on hospital waiting lists in the Lothian region health board area for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested, which relates to 30 September, follows:

Year	Number
1979	13,007
1980	10,834
1981	9,715
1982	16,953
1983	14,717
1984	13,845
1985	13,381
[1]1986	14,189

[1] Provisional.

Lothian Health Board

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the revenue expenditure allocated to Lothian health board for each year since 1979, expressed in cash terms and in real terms at 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Lothian health board's revenue expenditure allocation for hospital and community health services in each of these years was as follows:

£ thousands

	Cash	At 1986-87 prices
1978-79	98,543	191,732
1979-80	119,359	198,701
1980-81	154,874	217,465
1981-82	172,268	220,302
1982-83	186,197	222,125

1984-85	207,238	226,390
1985-86	217,546	224,114
1986-87	235,056	235,056

Health Boards

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the actual total populations in each health board area, broken down by age and sex, and percentage share of revenue allocations for each health board, as calculated under the SHARE scheme for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on health boards' population, analysed by age and sex, is contained in "Scottish Health Statistics", which is produced annually by the information and statistics division of the Common Services Agency for the Scottish Health Service. Copies are held in the Library.

Each health board's share of the total provision for revenue expenditure on hospital and community health services, in each year since 1979-80, is shown in the table.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the numbers of cross-boundary in-patients for each health board since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The material requested is lengthy. I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the members of each health board, stating the date of their original appointment, the date of their present appointment, and when their current term of office expires.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The information requested is as follows:

Hospital Waiting Lists (Clydesdale)

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the complaints affecting patients on the Clydesdale waiting lists of 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1987]: Information relating to the conditions from which patients on hospital in-patient waiting lists are suffering is not available centrally on a constituency basis. No complaints about waiting lists have been received by the Secretary of State from patients in Clydesdale.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps substantially to reduce waiting lists in Clydesdale.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1987]: I regard reduction of the length of time patients have to wait for treatment as one of the most urgent tasks facing the Health Service and I am looking urgently at the steps that can be taken to improve the situation. Health boards are already making considerable efforts to achieve reductions; the recommendations made in the recent report on the management of orthopaedic services in Scotland will assist them with their objective.

Radioactive Fallout

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to deploy portable detectors or mobile equipment to monitor radioactive fallout in Argyll and Bute; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the event of a nuclear accident overseas affecting the United Kingdom, or an accident at a United Kingdom nuclear installation with off-site effects requiring the implementation of the monitoring arrangements proposed under the national response plan, the monitoring of the Argyll and Bute area, so far as this might be necessary, would be undertaken by monitoring teams from such sites as the Hunterston nuclear power station or the Ministry of Defence installation at Faslane.

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will identify the nearest monitoring stations for radioactive fallout to Argyll and Bute; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The nearest sites currently capable of monitoring radioactive fallout are situated at Hunterston and Faslane. Under the national response plan for nuclear incidents overseas which is currently being developed, it is proposed to have a chain of fixed monitoring stations around the United Kingdom, in addition to the existing nuclear installations, and sites at Machrihanish and Oban are being considered.

Cash Limits

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to make any further changes to the cash limits for 1987-88 within his responsibility.

Mr. Rifkind: I shall be making the following changes. As announced on 23 July 1987, (Official Report columns 434-438) the cash limit for class XVI, vote 3: regional and general industrial support, Scotland was increased by £853,000; from £124·787 million to £125·640 million, to reflect the carry forward of capital underspends allowed under the end year flexibility scheme. This cash limit will be further increased, by £1·389 million, to £127·029 million. The additional expenditure is mainly for land reclamation projects. I shall also be seeking parliamentary approval for a cash limit of £370,000 for a new vote, class XVI, vote 26: Privatisation of the electricity supply industry, Scotland. This makes provision for preliminary expenses, largely advisers' fees.

The limit for the SO/LA2 cash block—which covers mainly housing capital expenditure by public sector agencies in Scotland—is at present £581·166 million. The limit is to be decreased by £62,000 and is the net effect of two changes. The first is an increase in provision of £308,000 as a result of some district councils budgeting below the limit for rate fund contributions to their housing revenue accounts, thereby releasing additional resources for capital expenditure on housing. The second is a reduction of £370,000 from net new towns expenditure, which, subject to parliamentary approval of a Supplementary Estimate for class XVI, 9—New Towns, Scotland—will be used to offset increased requirements for housing deficit and accumulated deficit grants on that vote.

Provision remains within the totals shown in Cm. 56 and none of these changes will increase the planned total of public expenditure.

Parliamentary approval for the changes in voted expenditure will be sought through Supplementary Estimates.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cervical cancer smear tests have been carried out in each of the past five years by each health board; how many patients were recalled; and how many tests proved positive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The available information is set out in the table. The figures relate to the health board in which the examining laboratories are located, which is not necessarily the health board in which the cervical smears were taken.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the total number of job vacancies in (a) Dundee, East and (b) Dundee travel-to-work-area, for the latest available date.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to the reply, 26 October 1987, c33.]: I have been asked to reply.

Vacancy statistics are not available on a parliamentary constituency or travel-to-work area basis. However, the number of vacancies notified in the Dundee jobcentre area and remaining unfilled on 4 September 1987 was 579 (including 84) community programme vacancies). It is estimated that only around one third of all vacancies nationally are notified to jobcentres.

This information is available in the Library.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inland Revenue

Mr. Raison asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer to how many individuals the Inland Revenue sends tax returns forms to their home addresses.

Mr. Lawson: Between 7 million and 8 million.

Tobacco

Mr. Holt asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the annual income from taxation on tobacco and tobacco product to the Exchequer in each of the past eight years.

Mr. Brooke: Receipts from the taxation of all tobacco products were as follows (figures in £ million):

	Excise	VAT[1]	Total tax
1979-80	2,583·7	450	3,033·7
1980-81	2,820·6	630	3,450·6
1981-82	3,420·4	720	4,140·4
1982-83	3,445·8	770	4,215·8
1983-84	3,805·5	810	4,615·5
1984-85	4,140·0	860	5,000·0
1985-86	4,459·4	910	5,369·4
1986-87	4,767·6	970	5,737·6

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Redwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the net revenue cost to the Exchequer if both husband and wife were to enjoy mortgage interest relief on £30,000 of mortgage.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue cost in a full year, at 1987-88 levels, of allowing both a husband and wife to claim relief for mortgage interest paid on a loan of upt to £30,000 each is estimated to be about £350 million. The cost of the increase in the mortgage interest relief ceiling for married couples at 1988-89 levels would probably be significantly higher than the estimate above, both because the number of new loans at £30,000 has been increasing recently and because an increase in the ceiling for married couples might stimulate additional borrowing.

Mr. Redwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what extra revenue would result to the Exchequer if mortgage interest relief were limited to the standard rate of tax only.

Mr. Lamont: The direct revenue yield in a full year, at 1987-88 levels, from restricting relief to the basic rate is estimated at £340 million. This makes no allowance for the effect of any consequential changes to the distribution of outstanding mortgages.

Cash Limits

Mr. Key asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is proposing any change to the Central Office of Information's cash limit for 1987-88.

Mr. Brooke: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class XIX, vote 1, will be increased by £29,905,000 from £111,127,000 to £141,032,000. The increase will be offset by reimbursements by the clients of the Central Office of Information and will not therefore add to the planning total of public expenditure.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any changes are proposed in the cash limit and the running cost limit for the Inland Revenue for 1987-88.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit class XIX, vote 7, will be increased by £28,914,000 from £1,013,831,000 to £1,042,745,000 and the running cost limit for the Inland Revenue will be increased by £33,000,000 from £977,736,000 to £1,010,736,000. The changes reflect an increased provision for dealing with work loads in the taxes and collection networks, a revised estimate of amounts received for the cost of collecting national insurance contributions and the amount agreed for the Department under the end-year capital flexibility scheme. The net increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planning total of public expenditure.

Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there will be any changes to the Treasury's running costs limit for 1987-88.

Mr. Lawson: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the Treasury's running costs limit for 1987-88 will be increased by £803,000 from £65,561,000 to £66,364,000. This increase will be offset by a corresponding decrease on the running costs limit for the central management of the Civil Service etc —Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (Cabinet Office) vote (class XX, vote 1) and results from the changes in the distribution of functions between the office of the Minister of the Civil Service and the Treasury announced by the Prime Minister on 7 August 1987.

BP Share Offer

Mr. Ward asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Government's sale of shares in British Petroleum.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The offers for sale of 2,194 million shares in BP were concluded on 30 October 1987 and provide for total proceeds of £7,017 million. Of this total, proceeds of some £2,552 million are being paid immediately, with the balance spread equally over two instalments in August 1988 and April 1989. £1,513 million has been paid to BP in respect of nearly 459 million new shares which it had issued for subscription by the Treasury.

There were 270,234 applications for nearly 71 million shares at the fixed offer price of 330p each. These applications included 18,008 from existing BP shareholders with entitlements to purchase in the offer and 886 from BP employees. All valid applications have been accepted in full.

A further 2,055 million shares were taken up, at the underwritten price of 330p, by underwriters and sub-underwriters in the following markets (share numbers to the nearest million):

	Million shares
United Kingdom	1,179
United States of America	506
Japan	160
Canada	105
Europe	105

The remaining 68 million shares were reserved by the Treasury to meet entitlements to share bonuses and were not underwritten. Some of these shares will be reserved for the approximately 250,000 applicants who are eligible to receive free shares (one for every 10 they hold continuously until 31 October 1990, subject to a maximum of 150 bonus shares). The Government will sell the remaining shares in due course and the proceeds will be additional to those noted above.

The costs of the sale to the Government will be announced as soon as the full details have been worked out.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer also announced on 29 October, at column 540, arrangements, to be operated by the Bank of England, to ensure that there are orderly aftermarkets in BP shares.

Further details of the bank offer will be announced this week.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in view of his decision to stabilise the market by instructing the Bank of England to purchase BP shares, he intends to extend such arrangements to any other sizeable rights issues to give other companies the same benefits.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the contract or any other agreement with Rothschilds for the flotation of BP allows Rothschilds the right unilaterally to withdraw from the contract or suspend the flotation.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 30 October 1987]: No.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Sackville asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what stamp duty relief will be available to licensed dealers when the relief provided by section 42 of the Finance Act 1920 comes to an end.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is proposed that the Treasury should make regulations extending the stamp duty and reserve tax exemptions for market makers provided by sections 81 and 89(1) of the Finance Act 1986 to authorised dealers carrying out transactions in securities which cannot be dealt in on a recognised investment exchange. A draft of the proposed regulations is being placed in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Burns asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in a full financial year of abolishing stamp duty on the purchase of houses.

Mr. Norman Lamont: About £670 million, at forecast 1987-88 levels, for residential property of all kinds.

Phicom plc

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in the light of the reasons given for instructing the Bank of England to repurchase BP shares, he will instruct the Bank of England to make a similar arrangement to purchase shares in Phicom plc at a discount to the placing price comparable with that allowed on BP.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

EC (Finance)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the new proposals from the European Economic Community Commission about the financing of the Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Government's position remains as set out in the statement by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the House on 1 July, at columns 493-94, following the last European Council: there must be agreement on effective and binding control of Community spending, particularly agricultural spending, before the question of additional resources can be addressed.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the amount which the European Economic Community will actually spend in the 12 months of 1987 in excess of its budget, disregarding the savings made by the Community in demanding early payment of contributions and delaying payments due to member states.

Mr. Brooke: The 1987 Community budget allows expenditure of up to 36,168 mecu. The Commission's limited discretion to seek overdraft facilities for cash flow reasons must be unwound during the budgetary year, so total spending cannot exceed this figure.

On the question of the budgetary savings agreed in 1987, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend for Moorlands (Mr. Knox) on 3 July, at columns 178-79.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Schizophrenic Psychosis

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research projects his Department has landed to test the effectiveness of community care for people suffering from schizophrenic psychosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Three research projects directly commissioned by the Department and specifically relevant to the examination of the effectiveness of community care for schizophrenia sufferers are currently in progress:

1 Early brief treatment versus sustained neuroleptic treatment in the maintenance phase of schizophrenic illness (Charing Cross hospital).
2 Assessment of the needs of chronic schizophrenics living in the Harrow health district (clinical research centre, Northwick Park hospital).
3 The management of schizophrenia in the community (Institute of Psychiatry, London).

In addition, a number of research projects directly commissioned by the Department in the mental illness field are relevant to the treatment of schizophrenia in the community, as well as to other diagnostic groups. The annual DHSS handbook of research and development, which is in the Library, gives details of all the Department's directly commissioned research.

AIDS

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the latest progress of the Government's efforts to co-ordinate their response to the AIDS crisis and the precise measures taken to this end.

Mr. Newton: We have a four-part strategy for dealing with AIDS which comprises:

Public health measures, such as screening blood donations and a system of monitoring the spread of AIDS and HIV;

Public education, so that people can learn how to avoid HIV infection;

Research into vaccines against HIV infection and anti-viral therapies for those who are infected; and Development of services for those who are infected with HIV or who have AIDS itself.

As my right hon. Friend made clear when he addressed the United Nations General Assembly on 20 October, we are also laying stress on the need for international co-operation in this field.

Specific measures taken or in prospect include:

On 2 September we launched a campaign focusing on the drug-related risks of HIV infection.

New educational work will be carried forward by the Health Education Authority and an initial allocation of £4·1 million has been made to meet the cost of this in the current financial year.

The United Kingdom Government and the World Health Organisation are jointly organising the world summit of Ministers of Health on programmes for AIDS prevention, to be held in London in January 1988.

On 23 October in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South-West (Mrs. Shephard) at column 906 I announced an extra allocation of £7·8 million as a further contribution this year to the three health regions facing special additional pressures from AIDS and for surveillance work carried out by the public health laboratory services. This brings total extra allocations arising from AIDS this year to £16·4 million.

The Social Services Committee made detailed recommendations in its report on problems associated with AIDS, and we expect to respond by Christmas.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific consideration is given to heating costs when calculating the level of the retirement pension; and how this is calculated.

Mr. Scott: Fuel prices are included in the retail price index which is used as a basis for the uprating of pensions. Changes in heating costs are therefore taken into account automatically when pensions are increased to reflect the overall rise in the cost of living. Help with heating costs is given to supplementary pensioner householders throughout the year and extra payments may also be made during periods of exceptionally cold weather. This help will continue to be available following the social security reforms next April.

Cystic Fibrosis

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people in total and in each health authority are currently known to suffer from cystic fibrosis;

(2) how many of the total number of people in England and Wales who currently suffer from cystic fibrosis are over the age of 16 years; and what this figure is as a percentage of sufferers;

(3) what information he has about the recent survey conducted by the British Paediatric Association concerning the percentage of adult cystic fibrosis sufferers who also suffer from diabetes;

(4) how many adult cystic fibrosis sufferers are currently entitled to free prescriptions because they also have the secondary condition of diabetes; and how many adult cystic fibrosis sufferers this leaves who are liable to pay prescription charges for their medication;

(5) what information he has concerning the finding of the recent survey by the Association of Cystic Fibrosis Adults as to the numbers of adult cystic fibrosis sufferers who are in employment and the numbers unemployed who are exempt from prescription charges;

(6) if he will estimate the total number of cystic fibrosis patients who are currently paying prescription charges.

(7) what information he has concerning the average prescription charge paid annually by adult cystic fibrosis sufferers who are liable for such charges;

(8) if he will estimate the total annual revenue generated by prescription charges paid by cystic fibrosis sufferers;

(9) what action he proposes to take in the light of the conclusion of Cystic Fibrosis Research Trust about the number of cystic fibrosis sufferers who currently pay prescription charges and about the total revenue generated;

(10) if he has any plans to exempt cystic fibrosis sufferers from prescription charges.

Mr. Newton: Only a limited amount of information is available and none is collected centrally. From information on the number of children identified as having cystic fibrosis, together with data on survival it can be estimated that there are about 5,600 people with cystic fibrosis in the United Kingdom of whom about 2,400 (40 per cent.) are over 16. In a study of 316 cystic fibrosis patients seen at the Brompton hospital between 1965 and 1983, 36 (11.5 per cent.) developed diabetes mellitus, 13 of whom were insulin-dependent and would therefore be exempt from prescription charges. Patients seen at the Brompton hospital are not necessarily representative of the cystic fibrosis population as a whole, but the figures do provide some indication of the prevalence of diabetes among cystic fibrosis sufferers.

This information is not sufficient to estimate the numbers of people suffering from cystic fibrosis who have to pay prescription charges, or the revenue generated by charges paid by them, though I understand that the Association of Cystic Fibrosis Adults (UK) believes about 800 cystic fibrosis adults are liable to pay prescription charges at an estimated total annual cost of £51,000.

Although the cost of extending the present arrangements for exemption from prescription charges to include cystic fibrosis patients would be small, it would be unfair to single out one group from others who seek an extension of exemption on medical grounds. We therefore have no plans to change the existing arrangements.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the practice with regard to cystic fibrosis patients receiving replacement therapy due to a deficiency state; and if such treatment qualifies for exemption from prescription charges.

Mrs. Currie: Patients who suffer from cystic fibrosis are not automatically exempt from prescription charges. They may, however, qualify for exemption by reason of their age, their financial circumstances or on other medical grounds.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out the changes in housing benefit taper rates since the introduction of housing benefit in 1983, together with the taper rates proposed for April 1988; and if he can estimate the rate of withdrawal of benefit for each additional £1 of income for (a) a non-taxpayer and (b) a taxpayer at the standard rate.

Mr. Portillo: The table shows the tapers above the needs allowance since November 1982 when housing benefit was first introduced on a partial start basis, together with the marginal tax rate (MTR) for a non-taxpayer and someone paying standard rate income tax only, assuming they are getting help with both rent and rates. There have been no adjustments to the tapers below the needs allowance since the introduction of housing benefit.

The proposed tapers of 65 per cent. (for rents) and 20 per cent. (for rates) under the reformed scheme next April cannot be directly compared with the current ones because they will operate net rather than gross income. For someone paying standard rate income tax only, the proposed tapers are equivalent to approximately 47 per cent. (for rents) and 15 per cent. (for rates) on gross income, giving a total MTR of approximately 89 per cent.; for a non-taxpayer the total MTR would be 85 per cent.

Housing Benefit: tapers and tax rates since 1982

	November 1982 Per cent.	April 1983 Per cent.	April 1984 Per cent.	November 1984 Per cent.	November 1985 Per cent.	April 1987 Per cent.
Rent taper	17	21	26	29	29	33
Rates taper	6	7	9	9	13	13
MTR for a non-taxpayer	23	28	35	38	42	46
MTR for a taxpayer	53	58	65	68	72	73

Notes:

1. The tax rate prevailing at the time has been used. No account has been taken of national insurance contributions or other benefits.

Diet Additions

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the figures for basic food costs for children, as expressed in the deductions from diet addition claims in clause 4736 of the 'S' manual; and if he will express those deductions for children aged under 11 years, 11 to 15 years, and 16 to 17 years as a percentage of the deductions for adults.

Mr. Scott: The figure for an adult in paragraph 4736 of the S Manual (£11·30) represents the average expenditure on food as originally derived from certain data in the 1979 family expenditure survey and subsequently uprated in line with the food element of the retail price index. The figures for children represent approximately 30 per cent. of the supplementary benefit scale rate. The figures were last uprated in November 1985. The figures are as follows:

Under 11	3·00	26·5
11–15	4·40	38·9
16–17	5·50	48·7

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many child dependants of supplementary benefit claimants were claiming diet additions in November 1985, November 1986, and September 1987; and if he will give those figures for each age band.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information is not available. Statistical data on supplementary benefit dietary additions do not show to which member of the assessment unit the award relates.

Unemployment Benefit Claimants

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants on a quarterly basis successfully claimed under regulation 6 of the Condition of Entitlement Regulations in the 12 months 1 October 1984 to 30 September 1985, 1 October 1985 to 30 September 1986 and 1 October 1986 to 30 September 1987; and if he will give the figures on a similar basis for each unemployment benefit office in Newcastle.

Mr. Portillo: Regulation 6 lists all the categories of persons whose entitlement to supplementary benefit is not subject to the condition of being available for employment. Generally the fact that a claimant falls within one of these is recognised by an officer dealing with the case, usually in the Department but sometimes in the Department of Employment (for example at a restart interview); but the claimant or someone on his behalf may of course raise the question himself.

I regret that no information is available about the number of people required to be available who have been signing on quarterly and have subsequently come within the terms of regulation 6. Such information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Drug Safety

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to ensure that when considering the safety of drugs, the effect of drug overdoses is brought within the scope of the Medicines Act.

Mr. Newton: When assessing an application for a product licence under the Medicines Act, the licensing authority and the Committee on Safety of Medicines are concerned primarily with the safety, quality and efficacy of the medicinal product when taken at recommended doses for the relevant indications. Where appropriate, however, close account is taken of the adequacy of warning statements, including guidance in the event of overdosage, in the data sheets, product particulars and labelling of medicinal products. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ensure that consultation takes place between the Committee on Safety of Medicines and drug companies before notices are formally issued under section 28 of the Medicines Act.

Mr. Newton: Before seeking the compulsory revocation or variation of a product licence under section 28 of the Medicines Act, it is normal practice for the licensing authority to consult the licence holder with a view to obtaining agreement to a voluntary change. Where the licensing authority proposes to take formal action under that provision to suspend, revoke or vary a product licence in relation to safety, quality or efficacy, the provisions of schedule 2 to the Medicines Act 1968 will apply. These include the right of the licence holder to make oral or written representations to a section 4 committee, such as the Committee on Safety of Medicines, and, if necessary, thereafter to the Medicines Commission before action is taken. The licensing authority can, however, suspend a product licence with immediate effect for up to three months in the interests of safety, further suspension being subjected to the process described in schedule 2. Informal consultation may not be possible in such circumstances.

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to reduce delays in the processing by the Committee on Safety of Medicines, of applications by drug companies that will lead to the introduction of new and available treatments for a variety of conditions.

Mr. Newton: The special study of the medicines division of the Department by Dr. J. Evans and Mr. P. Cunliffe, which I announced in March this year, is considering ways of reducing the time taken in the processing of new drug applications. We hope to receive their report early in the new year. Increases have been made to the full-time professional staff which supports the Comittee on Safety of Medicines. We are also introducing more information technology. The recently introduced EC requirement for expert reports to be included in all applications should lead to improvements in the quality and comprehensiveness of applications by pharmaceutical companies and this will facilitate quicker processing.

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the benefit-risk ratio applied to the Committee on Safety of Medicines; if the same criteria will be applied to treatments for AIDS as for other conditions; and what groups of conditions qualify for fast-track processing.

Mr. Newton: The Committee on Safety of Medicines has to balance the risks and benefits on a case by case basis in the light of professional judgment. The level of acceptable risk will clearly vary according to circumstances, for example where conditions are life threatening, such as AIDS, compared with other less serious conditions. I am satisfied that the committee is well constituted to provide expert advice to the licensing authority on licensing decisions. Normally all licence applications are assessed in strict chronological order of the date of receipt. "Fast-tracking" means that the application is considered out of turn; it does not mean that normal standards are lowered. A product licence application may be fast-tracked when there are compelling reasons for believing that the product would provide a major therapeutic breakthrough in the treatment of patient for indicated conditions.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mr. Moore: The amount spent by my Department on press advertising including national newspapers in each of the past five years is as follows:

	£
1982-83	1,600,000
1983-84	1,938,000
1984-85	3,662,000
1985-86	3,188,000
1986-87	5,570,000

It is not possible to distinguish between national advertising and all other press advertising. A breakdown by newspaper titles cannot be provided as the information is commercially confidential.

National press advertising has been an element in a variety of DHSS campaigns covering social security and health subjects including social security reformed benefits, the primary health care review, AIDS public education, drug prevention, blood donor and nursing recruitment.

National Insurance Contributions (Review)

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has yet completed his review of national insurance contributions for 1988-89.

Mr. Moore: I have completed the annual review under section 120 of the Social Security Act 1975. The proposals will take effect from 6 April 1988.

As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer said in his statement earlier today, I do not propose to raise the standard rate of contributions for either employees or employers, which remain at 9 per cent. and 10·45 per cent. respectively. 1988-89 will be the fifth successive year when these rates have remained unchanged.

In line with the requirements of the Social Security Pensions Act 1975, the lower earnings limit for class 1 contributions is to be raised to £41 per week, which is just below the basic retirement pension rate for a single person, as announced to the House on October 27. The upper earnings limit is to be raised to £305 per week, which is a little less than 7½ times the new basic pension rate. The new earnings limits replace the current ones of £39 and £295 respectively.

The reduced contribution rates for the lower paid will continue unchanged. The reduced rates of 5 per cent. and 7 per cent. for employees, and 5 per cent., 7 per cent. and 9 per cent. for employers will be extended further; they will now apply to weekly earnings which fall below the ceilings of £70, £105, and for employers only, £155 (the previous ceilings were £65, £100 and £150 respectively).

Not contracted-out employees and their employers

Neither the employee nor his employer will have to pay any contributions if his earnings are less than £41 per week. For people earning between £41 and £295 (the former upper earnings limit) there will be no increase for either the employee or the employer. In fact, owing to the increase in the earnings ceilings for the reduced contribution rates, some lower paid employees will pay a slightly smaller contribution, as will their employers. For those employees with earnings above £295 per week, the maximum possible increase will be 90p per week. There will be no corresponding increase for employers since there is no upper earnings limit for their contributions.

Contracted-out employees and their employers

Contributions payable by some contracted-out employees and their employers will rise slightly, partly as a result of the lower contracted-out rebate which Parliament approved in April, and which will take effect in April 1988. Where earnings are less than the former upper earnings limit of £295 per week, the increase will reflect both the reduced rebate and the fact that the increase in the lower earnings limit increases the band of earnings on which the non-contracted-out contribution rates are paid. Some lower paid contracted-out employees, and their employers, will in fact have their contributions reduced as a result of the higher earnings ceilings for the reduced contribution rates.

Contracted-out employees with earnings above the old upper earnings limit (£295) will pay a maximum of £1·12 a week extra, and their employers will pay 46p per week extra if they are earning £305 per week.

Self-employed people

The flat rate class 2 contribution will be raised to £4·05 per week.

The rate of class 4 contributions will not be increased. The annual limits of profits between which class 4 contributions are paid will be raised to £4,750 and £15,860 from £4,590 and £15,340 respectively.

For those self-employed people with profits between £4,750 and £15,340 (the former upper profits limit) class 4 contributions will be reduced by £10·08 per year in 1988-89 assuming an unaltered level of profits. For those self-employed people with profits at or above the proposed upper profits limit of £15,860 in 1988-89, annual class 4 contributions will be £22·68 higher.

Class 3 (voluntary) contributions

The rate of class 3 contributions be raised to £3·95 per week.

Treasury supplement

The Treasury supplement to the national insurance fund will be reduced from 7 per cent. to 5 per cent. with effect from April 1988.

Employment protection allocation

There will be no employment protection allocation for 1988-89. Currently the rates are 0·07 per cent. for employees and 0·06 per cent. for employers.

National Health Service allocation

The allocation to the National Health Service, currently 0·85 per cent. for employees and 0·7 per cent. for employers, will be increased to 0·95 per cent. and 0·8 per cent. respectively from April 1988.

The draft orders and the contributions amendment regulations, which are required to give effect to my proposals, together with the Government Actuary's report on their effect on the national insurance fund, will be laid before the House shortly.

Income-Related Benefits

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to lay regulations covering the new income-related benefit schemes from April 1988.

Mr. Scott: I have today laid before Parliament four sets of draft regulations: the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987; the Housing Benefit (General) Regulations 1987; the Family Credit (General) Regulations 1987; and the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987.

Taken together, these regulations provide the detailed framework for the new system of income-related benefits which is to be introduced in April next year. They also include the rates which will apply to the new benefits. The benefit rates included in the regulations are the same as the proposed rates announced by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Social Services, in his statement on 27 October at columns 179-81.

The benefit rates in the draft housing benefit regulations have been the subject of consultation with the local authority associations whose representatives have been taken into account.

I have also today placed in the Libraries of both Houses, draft copies of the proposed transitional regulations covering income support, housing benefit and family credit so that the income-related benefit regulations can be considered as a total package. The transitional regulations will be made and laid before the House as soon as the general regulations (with which they are linked) have been approved. They will provide transitional protection for existing recipients of supplementary benefit and family income supplement who remain eligible for income support or family credit.

Peto Institute, Budapest

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what financial assistance is available to patients from the United Kingdom attending the Peto Institute in Budapest.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 29 October 1987]: There are no statutory powers to use Government funds to meet the costs of this type of treatment. Some United Kingdom social security benefits may continue in payment if a beneficiary goes abroad to seek treatment for a medical condition.

Doctors

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set a statutory limit on the number of hours worked by junior doctors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fearn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to reduce the average working hours of junior doctors.

Mr. Newton [holding answers 30 October and 3 November 1987]: The Government have accepted that the excessive hours traditionally required of some junior doctors are neither in their interests nor those of their patients. We have agreed with the representatives of the medical profession that, while the impetus to reduce such hours has to come from the Department, changes in working practices can only be identified and implemented locally, with the full support and co-operation of all the practitioners concerned, rather than through statutory limitations. We have already instructed health authorities to eliminate regular rotas requiring a practitioner to be on duty, on average, for more than one night in two and one weekend in two, and we have asked them to aim for a target maximum commitment of one in three or better, where practicable. We estimate that the number of posts with rotas more onerous than one in three fell or was planned to fall between 1982 and 1985 from 5,000 to 3,500. There are currently some 1,520 posts, representing about 7 per cent. of the total, with weekly contracted hours of over 104, although the average figure has fallen in every year since 1979, from over 90 to 85·7. These are hours of duty, rather than work: independent surveys commissioned by the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration show that the average weekly hours actually worked, as reported by juniors themselves, have also fallen, from 58·3 in 1981 to 57 in 1985. Officials will shortly be discussing with the profession's representatives how best to make further progress in this direction, in the context of the measures to reform the hospital medical staffing structure which I announced on 27 October at column 258. These are principally designed to increase the involvement of consultants in direct patient care and supervision of juniors, to maintain necessary levels of support for consultants, and to improve juniors' career prospects and job security, thus in turn helping to solve the recruitment difficulties experienced in some specialties.

Kendal Hospital

Mr. Jopling asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest start and completion dates for the new Kendal hospital, the estimated cost, and the number of people who will eventually be employed there compared with those currently employed in the hospitals in the area, together with the number of beds which will be provided compared with the current situation.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 2 November 1987]: Work on the site for the new Westmorland general hospital commenced on 7 September this year. The scheme is scheduled for completion in September 1990, at an estimate total cost of £21·5 million, and will provide 304 in-patient beds, some of which will replace existing outdated facilities.

The day-to-day running of the hospital will be the responsibility of the South Cumbria health authority; I understand that 575 people (whole-time equivalents) are expected to be required, which is a net increase of 173 (whole-time equivalents).

HOME DEPARTMENT

Life Sentence Prisoners

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of prisoners serving life sentences in prisons in 1979, 1983, 1985 and 1987.

Mr. John Patten: The number of prisoners serving life sentences was 2,339 on 30 June 1987, the most recent date for which figures are available. Details of the average population for each of the previous 10 years are published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales," at table 1.4 of the latest issue, for 1986 (Cm. 210) a copy of which is in the Library.

Children (Abduction)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of children being detained under the port stop procedures under the Child Abduction Act 1984 have been reported to him; and how many of these cases were instances where children had been abducted by those who were not related to them.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. The Home Office relinquished direct responsibility for port stop procedures on 2 May 1986; the responsibility now lies with chief officers of police and no statistics are kept centrally.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what liaison exists between British Police forces and those of other European countries relating to the abduction of children; and what machinery exists for reporting of the abduction of minors.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Liaison between British police forces and those of other European countries is conducted through normal interpol channels. Within this country all police forces are alerted to the abduction of minors through the police national computer.

Special Constables

Mr. Jim Callaghan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will take steps to bring special constables into the disciplinary and grievance procedure which applies to other police constables; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received seeking the right for special constables to have an appeal mechanism against chief constables' decisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans to introduce a discipline code for special constables since it would be difficult to apply such a code to voluntary unpaid officers. We have had no recent representations in favour of an appeal system other than from the hon. Member.

Private Investigators

Mr. Anthony Coombs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Her Majesty's Government propose to introduce legislation to impose statutory controls on the private investigation industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The Government continue to support and encourage non-statutory self-regulation for professional investigators as we do for the private security industry.

Nationality

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking in order to harmonise British nationality law with similar laws in European Community countries.

Mr. Renton: There are no Community proposals to harmonise nationality laws and we have no plans to amend the British Nationality Act 1981.

Research Specialists

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of operational research specialists in his Department for each year since 1979.

Mr. Hurd: The information is as follows:

Number of Operational Researchers as at 1 January

Year	Number
1979	[1]
1980	[1]
1981	33
1982	32
1983	30
1984	31
1985	35
1986	36·5
1987	32·5

Political Refugees

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the normal procedure with regard to extending the residence period granted to a person likely to be imprisoned for political reasons on return to his own country, on application, after an initial grant of 12 months' residence has lapsed; and what were the considerations made in the case of Mr. Safpar Hamdani, overseas co-ordinator to the Pakistan People's Party, currently in London.

Mr. Renton: An individual in this position would normally be granted leave to remain for an initial period of one year and then be granted further leave to remain for a period of three years, after which permanent settlement may be granted. Further leave to remain may however be granted for shorter periods than three years where, for example, there is a possibility of a change in the circumstances which led to the initial grant of leave to remain. The normal criteria have been applied in the case of Mr. Safpar Hamdani.

Self-Defence

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the acceptable degree of self-defence available to citizens threatened by criminal acts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have received numerous inquiries and representations from right hon. and hon. Members and direct from members of the public.

The law permits a person to use reasonable force to defend himself or to prevent crime. What is reasonable will depend on all the circumstances and, if a charge is brought, will be determined by the court in each specific case. The courts have held that, if a person defending himself against attack did what he honestly and instinctively thought necessary, that would be the most potent evidence that only reasonable defensive action had been taken.

The right of self-defence does not imply a right to the routine carrying by the public of weapons or articles intended for use as weapons; and we are concerned to reduce the number of weapons which are carried.

Trials (Video Technology)

Mrs. Golding asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will give the results of his consultations on the use of video technology at trials of alleged child abusers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend asked for views, first on the detailed implementation of our proposal to permit children to give evidence by closed-circuit television. We are still receiving helpful comments on this, and will bear these carefully in mind, together with observations made in this House and another place, when the time comes to implement proposals in the Criminal Justice Bill.

Secondly, we asked for views on whether video recordings of interviews with children should be more readily admissible at trials. The responses generally show enthusiasm for this, on grounds with which we have much sympathy. But there are serious problems. In particular, a video recording which is helpful for investigative purposes is likely to present at least part of the child's evidence in a form inadmissible as evidence at the trial. Further, the benefits for the child envisaged by most responses would not be realised unless the use of the recording at the trial meant that the child need not give oral evidence. We believe, however, that it is vital in the interests of justice for the right of the defence to cross-examine the alleged victim to be preserved.

As explained in the debate in another place on 22 October, we therefore feel that on balance easier admissibility of video recordings would not meet the twin tests of benefit to the child and interests of justice.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

City Technology College, Solihull

Mr. Anthony Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications and inquiries have been received for places at the new city technology college in Solihull.

Mrs. Rumbold: More than 700 inquiries have been received about admissions to the city technology college, Kingshurst. More than 300 applications have already been made.

Boarding Schools Association

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the recent meeting between the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) and representatives of the Boarding Schools Associations.

Mr. Dunn: I had a useful meeting with the association on 1 October. The secretary of the association has since written to me with a comprehensive note of points raised at the meeting, to which I have now replied.

Expatriate Workers

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to support or assume responsibility for the education of children of expatriate workers other than for Government employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Government have no such plans.

Research Specialists

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total number of operational research specialists in his Department, for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is as follows:

	Number
1979	2
1980	2
1981	2
1982	2
1983	3
1984	3
1985	3

WALES

Tourism

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will indicate when his response can be expected to the report of the Select Committee on Welsh Affairs on tourism in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I hope to respond shortly.

PRIME MINISTER

ICL

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister what investigations are currently going on into the affairs of ICL.

The Prime Minister: Investigations under the Companies Act are matters for the Department of Trade and Industry. Investigations in relation to defence issues are matters for the Ministry of Defence. Similarly, the Inland Revenue and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have responsibility for their own investigations. Most such investigations are of a confidential nature for obvious reasons.

Customs Barriers

Mr. Hood asked the Prime Minister what assessment she has made of the advantages likely to accrue from the removal of all customs barriers on trade between the United Kingdom and the rest of the European Economic Community by 1992.

The Prime Minister: Customs barriers add to the costs of exporting and hinder the development of trade with the rest of the European Community. Tackling them and other barriers will increase opportunities for British business by creating a single market of 320 million people.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Summary Cases

Mr. Bermingham asked the Attorney-General if his guidelines as to disclosure of previous inconsistent statements and unused material will apply in summary cases.

The Attorney-General: The guidelines issued by my predecessor in 1981 concern the disclosure to the defence of "unused material" in cases to be tried on indictment. There are not separate guidelines as to the disclosure of previous inconsistent statements. However, the term "unused material" includes all witness statements that have not otherwise been served on the defence, whether or not the maker of the statement is to give evidence for the prosecution. Thus, previous inconsistent written statements are covered by the 1981 outlines.

In addition to the obligations imposed by the 1981 guidelines, the general duty to be fair requires a prosecutor to disclose to the defence any materially inconsistent statement made by a prosecution witness, written or oral, of which the prosecutor becomes aware at any stage of the proceedings. That duty applies equally to summary proceedings and to proceedings on indictment.

Mr. Frank Larsen

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Attorney-General if the Director of Public Prosecutions will prosecute Mr. Frank Larsen for possession of a forged Ministry of Defence police warrant.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave on Monday 2 November 1987 at column 510.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Winnick asked the Attorney-General if he will give a detailed breakdown of all the legal costs accorded in the United Kingdom and outside in taking action to stop the publication of "Spycatcher."

The Attorney-General: I shall break down the total amount of costs to public funds to date of the court action in Australia into two categories: the first, travelling and subsistence for officials, is approximately £65,000; the second, legal fees, is approximately £369,000.

Travelling and subsistence costs have not yet been incurred in respect of the actions in New Zealand and Hong Kong; nor have they been incurred in repect of the action here against The Guardian, The Observer and The Sunday Times. The total costs to public funds to date of these actions remain as in my answer of 22 October to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks).

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Soviet Union

Mr. Warren asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress of British-Soviet trade since the visit of the Prime Minister to the Soviet Union this year.

Mr. Alan Clark: I was very encouraged by the high level of interest in trade and industrial co-operation shown by both sides during my visit to the Soviet Union for the UK/USSR joint commission in mid-October. I was accompanied to Moscow by senior members of several United Kingdom companies and they were able to join me in calls on Soviet industrial Ministries which have now the right to engage in foreign trade directly. There is considerable potential which I hope that British companies will exploit energetically, with the full support of Her Majesty's Government, so that the increase in bilateral trade by 40 per cent. in 1990, as discussed by the Prime Minister with Mr. Ryzhkov in March, can be achieved.

Mr. Warren asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table of export and import trade between each of the member states of the European Economic Community and the Soviet Union during each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement on the trends indicated therein.

Mr. Alan Clark: The figures are in the following table. Exports from the Community have shown little variation in recent years (in dollar terms) while imports have declined in recent years mainly because of reduced oil imports and the fall in the price of oil. The Community's overall deficit with the Soviet Union is about half its level four years ago.

British Caledonian and British Airways

Mr. Flynn asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will make it his policy to take into account the potential impact of a British airline industry dominated by one carrier operating from both Heathrow and Gatwick on Cardiff and other regional airports before making his decision on the proposed merger of British Caledonian and British Airways.

Mr. Sackville asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will take into account the potential impact of a British airline industry dominated by one carrier, operating from Heathrow and Gatwick, on Manchester and other regional airports before making his decision on the proposed take over of British Caledonian by British Airways.

Mr. Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will take into account the potential impact of a British airline industry dominated by one carrier, operating from both Heathrow and Gatwick, on Bournemouth International Airport and other regional airports in making his decision on the proposed take-over of British Caledonian by British Airways.

Mr. Cran asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, when he takes the decision on the British Airways/British Caledonian merger, he will take into account the potential effect of a large British carrier on smaller independent air lines and their employees.

Mr. Maude: The proposed merger is being investigated by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. Only if the commission concludes that a merger might be expected to operate against the public interest does my right hon. and noble Friend have the power to intervene to prevent or impose conditions on it. In such cases, he will take into account all relevant considerations in deciding what action, if any, may be appropriate.

Biodegradable Products

Mr. Beggs asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what incentive Her Majesty's Government are giving to industry to encourage the development of biodegradable products; and whether Her Majesty's Government have plans to introduce legislation to require that biodegradable products are introduced to replace plastic products where possible.

Mr. Butcher: The Government have no plans to introduce such legislation at this time.

Normal channels of Government funding are available to encourage work in this area. We support and are in discussions with the plastics industry about the use of degradable materials. They are being encouraged to employ them when it is commercially viable to do so.

In October 1986 a workshop was held on the recycling of plastics which was attended by the industry and other interested bodies. This has been successful in creating a more positive attitude towards recycling.

Regional Policy

Ms. Armstrong asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has completed his review of regional policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State and I have been reviewing all our Department's activities since we were appointed to our present posts and we will continue to do so. We have recently established new objectives for the Department and we are considering the best application of those objectives in the field of regional policy.

Toys (Safety)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to secure the safety of toys to be made available for sale during the pre-Christmas shopping period, and in particular to ensure that in future all toys sold within the United Kingdom should conform with BS 5665; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My Department plans to run a toy safety promotion campaign in November and December aimed at putting across an effective message during the Christmas peak buying period.

The Government have no plans to make compliance with BS 5665 mandatory. We are effectively prevented from doing so under the standstill provisions of article 9(2) of the EC directive 83/189/EEC because a proposal for an EC toy safety directive is now in the final stages of negotiation.

Toys supplied in the United Kingdom must comply with the requirements of the Toys (Safety) Regulations 1974, which cover the main hazards. The general safety requirement of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 applies to hazards not covered by the regulations. As a published standard BS 5665 is relevant for the purpose of the general safety requirement.

Trading Standards officers

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any proposals for the removal of trading standards officers and their delegated functions from local authority control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: There are no plans to remove trading standards officers and their delegated functions from local authority control. Local enforcement enables trading standards officers to respond quickly to the public, to take immediate action and to provide for the particular needs of local industry. There is no evidence that this can be achieved more efficiently or economically.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Hood asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list the cases in which Her Majesty's Government have withdrawn from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission mergers referred for its consideration, as from 1979;

(2) in what cases of proposed mergers a referral to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission can be withdrawn.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend has no powers, under the Fair Trading Act 1973, to withdraw a merger or proposed merger from consideration by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission once he has referred it to the commission. However under section 75 of the Act, if, in the course of its investigations on a merger reference, it appears to the commission that a merger proposal has been abandoned it may, if the Secretary of State consents, lay the reference aside. Since 1979 the following merger references have been laid aside:

Steel Industry

Mr. Hardy asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to make decisions or offer further opinion to the European Economic Community in regard to proposals to secure further contraction of the steel industry in the United Kingdom and in the other member states.

Mr. Atkins: The Commission's proposals on steel policy were considered by Ministers of the Twelve at the Industry Council on 21 September. The Council agreed to invite the Commission to appoint a group of three wise persons to advise the Council on how adequate commitments to the reduction of production capacity can be obtained. The wise persons have been asked to report by Mid-November. The next meeting of the Industry Council is scheduled for 8 December.

Mr. Hardy asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the proportion by which the steel industry has contracted both in terms of production volume and job loss in Britain and in the other member states of the EEC since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested can be found in the "Iron and Steel Statistical Yearbook 1986" and the "Iron and Steel Quarterly Statistics" published by Eurostat, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Third World

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total value of invisible exports, invisible imports and the invisible balance of trade, between Britain and the third World, broken down into oil-exporting countries and the rest of the world, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Atkins: Comprehensive annual data on invisibles relating to the areas mentioned are not available.

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the totals of new investment, reinvestment and disinvestment by Britain in the Third World and by the Third world from Britain, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Atkins: The available information relates to overseas direct investment. The value of acquisitions and disposals of share capital by UK companies in the companies in the developing countries and the value of reinvested profits in the overseas concerns are given in Table 1. The value of acquisitions and disposals of share capital of UK companies and of profits reinvested in the UK by companies in the developing countries are shown in table 2. The data relating to outward direct investment will be published in approximately two months time in Business Monitor MA4 1985.

The net totals shown in tables 1 and 2 include only those items requested and hence exclude changes in the levels of current account and long-term loan balances and in branch/head office indebtedness, all of which are normally included in the published series for foreign direct investment in Business Monitor MA4.

Research Specialists

Mr. Bermingham asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total number of operational research specialists in his Department, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Butcher: The number of operational research specialists in this Department for each year since 1979 was as follows:

	Number
1979	6
1980	7
1981	11
1982	9
1983	9
1984	6
1985	6
1986	10
1987	11

Group Accounts

Mr. Bermingham asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in respect of the incorporation of the European Community's seventh directive on group accounts into British law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My Department is preparing detailed legislative proposals in the light of responses to a consultation document. The necessary legislation should be part of the next Companies Bill.

Company Accounts (Disclosure of Liabilities)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he intends to introduce legislation to restrict the ability of companies not to make disclosure of liabilities through their accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My Department is considering the issues raised by the practice of keeping assets and liabilities off a company's balance sheet with the Accounting Standards Committee and other bodies with a close interest in this topic. This will be taken into account in drafting changes to company law which will be made to implement the EC seventh company law directive.

Semi-Conductors

Mr. Bermingham asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any plans to assist the semi-conductor industry to play a part in joint European research initiatives, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Assistance to joint European collaborative research in semi-conductors will be available through the second phase of the European Community's ESPRIT programme, which is now in the final stages of preparation. The Department is active in providing advice to companies wishing to participate in the programme.

Electronics Industry

Mr. Bermingham asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to extend financial aid to more process-based projects in the electronics industry, along the lines of the proposed scheme to replace the Alvey programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The IT86 report's recommendations are being considered as part of the review of priorities, in the field of research and development, for the Department of Trade and Industry.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Consumer Credit Act 1974

Mr. Grylls asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is in a position to make a statement on the future treatment of business lending and hiring under the Consumer Credit Act 1974.

Mr. Maude: As stated in the White Paper "Building Businesses . . . not Barriers" the Government have been studying the treatment of business lending and hiring under the Act. At present the Act regulates any credit or hire agreement, within the financial limits of the Act, where the borrower or hirer is not a body corporate. It has been strongly argued by major lenders that the application of the Act to some business credit is harmful both to lenders and to small businesses themselves and can give rise to anomalies. My Department has consulted organisations representing small businesses on a possible change to the Act to exclude all credit for business purposes and this proposal has been generally welcomed. We have therefore decided that the Act should be amended to exclude all credit and hire for business purposes and we will make this change to the Act, together with other changes to simplify and clarify the Act's provisions, as soon as there is a suitable opportunity.

Telecommunications

Mr. Jack asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is central Government's spending on telecommunications with (a) British Telecom and (b) Mercury Communications.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

Records of expenditure on telecommunications products and services are not maintained centrally.

ENERGY

South African Coal Industry

92. Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the South African Government concerning the establishment of the office of the South African coal industry in London.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None.

Coal (Imports)

Mr. Cummings asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will indicate the level of coal imports during the years 1985, 1986 and 1987 to date, through the port of Seaham; and what are the origins of such imports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: For the purposes of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise's import statistics, Seaham is included within the port of Sunderland. Coal imports through Sunderland in 1985, 1986 and January-August 1987 (the latest period for which data are available), split by country of consignment, are shown in the table. The country of consignment is the place from which the coal was despatched to the United Kingdom and is not necessarily the country in which the coal was originally mined. No split of coal imports through Sunderland by country of origin is available.

Drax Power Station

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Energy when orders will be placed for the desulphurisation plant at Drax power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Central Electricity Generating Board expects to be able to place the main plant contracts for the Drax power station by the end of 1988.

Miners' Strike

Mr. Cummings asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on how many miners in the north-east area who were dismissed during the 1984-85 strike have not yet been re-employed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Questions on the dismissal and re-employment of mineworkers are matters for the management of the British Coal Corporation.

Power Transmission Cables

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Energy what studies are currently taking place to determine the economic and practical feasibility of placing underground more rural electric power transmission cables.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The placing of electric power lines is in the first instance a matter for the electricity supply industry and I have therefore asked the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to my hon. Friend with the information he requested and to send me a copy of this letter.

Research Specialists

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total number of operational research specialists in his Department, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Parkinson: No operational research specialists have been employed in this Department since 1979.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Mr. Warren asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the operation of the pesticide regulations of the Food and Environmental Protection Act insofar as they relate to the need of growers to register agro-chemicals which are off-label, with a view to suspending the regulations until such time as the applications before his Department have been cleared.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The requirements of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 are kept under constant review to ensure that they achieve their objectives in terms of protecting food and the environment. I also require to be satisfied that they do not impose unnecessary burdens on those who have to operate within them. I accordingly announced interim arrangements for off-label uses of pesticides in 1988 on 30 October, which give provisional approval for one year for additional uses of approved pesticides where safety considerations allow this. I believe that these arrangements will ensure that growers should have available to them appropriate products with which to treat almost all pest and disease situations. We are also giving priority to individual applications in those sectors which are not included in the interim arrangements, and I hope to be announcing definitive off-label approvals for those sectors within the next few weeks.

Hedgerows (Removal Subsidy)

Mr. Cummings asked the Secretary of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the amount of subsidy paid to farmers in Easington district for the removal of hedgerows.

Mr. Gummer: Grants for hedge removal were abolished in 1976 except where the removal was ancillary to drainage work. Grants even of this restrictive kind were discontinued for all new commitments on 1 December 1983. Since 1985 grants of up to 60 per cent. have been available for the provision, replacement or improvement of hedges and hedgerow trees.

Forestry Planting Licences

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications for forestry planting licences in England were objected to by local authorities and other statutory bodies, respectively, in each of the last five years and 1987 to date; and how many were refused as a result.

Mr. MacGregor: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of applications object to	Number of objections from Local authorities	Number of objections from Other statutory bodies	Decisions taken on these applications
1982	—	—	—
1983		—	—
1984	3	3	2	2 Refused 1 Approved
1985	—	—	—
1986	4	3	1	1 Refused 3 Approved
1987	2	2	1	1 Refused 1 Pending

Dairy Inspection Charges

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he has had since 1 July regarding the impact of dairy inspection charges on smaller farm units; and whether he will list the organisations making such representations;

(2) whether he has any plans to change the pattern or the administration of dairy inspection charges, insofar as these affect smaller farm units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have received representations from individual farmers, from their Members of Parliament and from organisations such as the NFU and the MMB. The original proposals were modified to reduce the impact of charging on small producers, including those in the untreated milk sector. But the search for economies is continuing and any reduction in costs will be passed on to producers.

Trade Balance

Mr. Leighton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current United Kingdom trade balance with the rest of the European Economic Community in agricultural produce.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 28 October 1987]: The latest available information is given in the following table.

Trade between the United Kingdom and other European Community countries—Agricultural products

	January to December 1986 £ million
Exports	3,003
Imports	5,706
Balance	−2,703

During the first eight months of 1987, exports have risen by 20 per cent. compared with the same period in 1986, and imports by only 8 per cent.

North Sea (Pollution)

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information he has as to the amount of pollution in the North sea caused by sea dumping by Britain;

(2) what amount of waste and other materials Britain dumps in the North sea.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The amount of waste and other materials disposed of in the North sea in 1986 by virtue of licences issued under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 was:

	Tonnes
Dredgings	17,776,000
Sewage sludge	5,540,000
Solid industrial waste	2,570,000
Liquid industrial waste	242,000

Sea disposal licences are not issued unless careful scientific examination shows the operation in question to be acceptable in terms of its impact on the marine environment, the living resources it supports, and human health, and unless it conforms to the relevant international conventions. The practical availability of alternative methods of dealing with the wastes is also taken into account. Monitoring of the marine environment indicates that the United Kingdom's sea disposal activities meet these criteria and the quality status report prepared for the ministerial North sea conference bears this out.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much is owed by his Department to the London residuary body in respect of unsettled Greater London council accounts.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 29 October 1987]: I estimate that further grant aid of approximately £5 million may become payable to the London residuary body in respect of the Thames tidal defence scheme. The precise sum and the timing of payments are dependent upon the submissions to my Department of the information necessary for the verification of claims.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Training Scheme

Mr. McLeish asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of trainee places occupied on the new job training scheme in the last month for which full figures are available, in Scotland, England and Wales.

Mr. Cope: At 25 September 1987, 1,966 people in Scotland, 19,258 people in England and 887 people in Wales were receiving training on the new job training scheme.

Research Specialists

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of operational research specialists in his Department, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: My Department has never employed operational research specialists because of limited demand. When such expertise is required my officials engage outside specialists.

New Workers Scheme

Mr. Bowis asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the future of the new workers scheme.

Mr. Lee: As announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his statement on 3 November, the new workers scheme will close on 31 January next year. Applications for support in respect of jobs starting up to and including that date will be considered, provided they are received within 13 weeks of the job start date. Payment of support in respect of applications already approved is not affected.

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Bowis asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of the job release scheme.

Mr. Lee: As announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the scheme will close on 31 January 1988. All existing applications will be considered, but new applications can be considered only if the proposed date of early retirement is no later than 31 January 1988, except that applications made between 3 and 17 November 1987 with a release date up to 31 March 1988 may be considered in exceptional circumstances.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa (Sanctions)

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received any official information pertaining to the reported threats by Mr. Johnstone Makatini of the African National Congress that British companies with investments in South Africa may be subjected to attacks and full scale violence if Her Majesty's Government do not apply further sanctions against South Africa; if in the light of previous contacts between Ministers and the African National Congress he has conveyed any representations or comments about this to Mr. Oliver Tambo; and what is his policy towards the threats to British subjects contained in Mr. Makatini's remarks.

Mrs. Chalker: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister told the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 22 October, at column 929, Mr. Makatini said in Vancouver that > "violence could include attacks on British and other Western companies refusing to disengage and hasten the collapse of apartheid".—[Official Report 22 October 1987; Vol. 120, c. 929.]

We take strong exception to such language. A central theme of our contacts with the ANC has been to condemn violence from whatever quarter it may come. We continue to take every opportunity to make our views widely known, and to call on the ANC and similar bodies to forswear violence.

Foreign Ministers Council

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects will be considered at the next meeting of the European Economic Community Foreign Ministers Council.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 30 October at columns 479-80.

Nicaragua

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: We have normal diplomatic relations with Nicaragua.

El Salvador

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received on the current human rights situation in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: We receive regular reports from various sources, including on the recent appalling murder of Mr. Herbert Anaya. The United Nations special representative's latest report indicates a further overall improvement in the situation, notes that the Government of El Salvador are doing what they can to combat the death squads and condemns killings, kidnapping and the indiscriminate use of landmines by the guerillas.

UNESCO

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will reapply for the membership of the United Kingdom to the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organisation.

Mr. Eggar: We made it clear when we withdrew from UNESCO that we would require evidence of fundamental and far-reaching reforms before reconsidering our position. There is no sign that such reforms are likely to be implemented in the near future.

We welcome the prospect of the appointment of a new director general. This can be no more than one element in the task of tackling the formidable problems that face the organisation. Our fundamental concern remains UNESCO's programmes and administration. We shall continue to keep an open mind and monitor developments carefully.

Cross-border Trade (Ireland)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attitude has been taken by Her Majesty's Government to the restrictions imposed by the Government of the Republic of Ireland on cross-border trade, whose conditions have been declared illegal by the European Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 28 October at column 270.

Survey Office, Hong Kong

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the work of the Survey Office in Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: The Survey Office was established to invite, collect, collate and report on the response of the public to the Hong Kong Government's Green Paper "The 1987 Review of Developments in Representative Government". It submitted its report to the Governor on 29 October. The independent monitors who were appointed to oversee the work of the office submitted their report to the Governor on 30 October. Copies of the two reports were tabled in the Legislative Council in Hong Kong today. Copies have also been placed in the Library of the House. The reports will now be carefully considered prior to publication by the Hong Kong Government of a White Paper in the new year.

KMS Ltd

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to gather information on the activities overseas of KMS Ltd.

Mr. Mellor: No. It is not our general policy to investigate the activities overseas of British companies.

Middle East

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will sponsor an international conference to which representatives of the Israeli, Russian, and American Governments can be invited, with representatives of the Palestinian people to discuss the situation on the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: As reaffirmed by Foreign Ministers of the Twelve in July, we continue to believe that an international conference under UN auspices represents the best way to make progress in finding a solution to the Israeli/Arab conflict.

ENVIRONMENT

Rate Support Grant

12. Mr. McCartney asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to announce the rate support grant settlement details for 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: I issued a consultation paper on 27 October setting out details of my proposals for the 1988-89 rate support grant settlement.

Rating Reform

13. Mr. Fearn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any estimates as to the likely evasion levels of the proposed poll tax.

Mr. Howard: I have no reason to suppose that evasion will be significant.

31. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters he has received from the general public about the proposed introduction of a community charge.

Mr. Howard: A summary of responses received by my Department before 31 October 1986, when the consultation period on the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) ended, was placed in the Library on 15 December 1986. 1,217 responses were received. Though opinions varied, twice as many people wanted to abolish domestic rates as wanted to keep them. The community charge received greater support than any other replacement for the rates. We continue to receive representations about specific aspects of our proposals as well as requests for further information.

44. Mrs. Mahon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will grant a separate identifiable sum of money to local authorities to cover the cost of implementing the community charge.

Mr. Howard: The cost of implementing the community charge will be taken into account in the rate support grant settlement for 1989-90 and in the needs assessments which will be used to determine grant entitlements under the new system.

51. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made any estimates as to the likely increase in administration costs incurred by local authorities if a poll tax is introduced.

Mr. Howard: Our preliminary estimate is that the cost per person liable of collecting the community charge may be broadly similar to the cost per person liable of collecting domestic rates.

65. Mr. George Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses has he received to his consultation paper "Non-domestic Rates, Amendments to the Rating Legislation in England and Wales" published in July.

Mr. Howard: A total of 281 responses to the consultation paper were received, of which five were from local authority associations, 16 from professional organisations, 56 from national and local commercial and industrial organisations, 101 from local authorities, 30 from firms of surveyors and 73 from other private sector firms and individuals. We are considering the proposals in the light of these responses.

66. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the impact of the poll tax on Bradford.

Mr. Howard: My Department received 1,217 responses before 31 October 1986 when the consultation period of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) ended. Two, about our proposals for a community charge were from respondents in Bradford. We continue to receive representations from all parts of the country about specific aspects of our proposals as well as requests for further information.

67. Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the arrangement for phasing in the proposed poll tax.

Mr. Howard: The Government are considering the arrangements for introducing the community charge in England in the light of views that have been expressed. An announcement will be made in due course.

69. Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those professional or academic organisations specialising in local government finance who are in favour of introduction of a poll tax.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor).

72. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have made representations to him in support of his poll tax proposals.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) on 24 July at column 722.

73. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next be meeting the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance to discuss proposed changes to the rating system.

Mr. Howard: The annual cycle of meetings of the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance should recommence in the spring of next year.

81. Mr. Illsley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government's proposals for a community charge or poll tax will apply to tenants of tied housing in the agricultural or other industries.

Mr. Howard: Yes.

83. Mr. Allen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses to the consultation document on the community charge he has received from the Nottingham area.

Mr. Howard: The booklet "Paying for Local Government — the Community Charge" was not a consultation document. Since it was published in December 1986, the Department has received several thousand letters from all over the country of all aspects of our rate reform proposals.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about the Government's proposals to introduce a poll tax.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the factors outside the control of a local authority which can influence the relationship between levels of expenditure and poll tax; and if he will make a statement outlining how these factors have been taken into account in the Green and Yellow Papers relating to the introduction of the poll tax.

Mr. Howard [holding answer, 3 November 1987]: The amount of central Government grant and payments from the non-domestic rate pool will both be fixed in advance of that year. Changes in authorities' spending, in relation to that year, will be reflected directly in community charges. Payments of grant and non-domestic rates may vary between years. That is why our proposals for the payment of grant, published on 23 September, included proposals for substantially reducing instability in grant entitlements. Payments from the non-domestic rate pool will be proportionate to adult population and will reflect only changes in the income to the pool.

Private Rented Accommodation

14. Mr. Riddick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for improving the supply of privately rented accommodation.

Mrs. Roe: We outlined our proposals in the recent housing White Paper, and described them in more detail in the consultation document on the private rented sector issued by the Department on 1 October. We will introduce measures in a new Housing Bill this Session to stimulate the supply of privately rented accommodation.

Inner Cities

15. Mr. Duffy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage investment in the inner cities.

Mr. Ridley: We have established five new urban development corporations and will be setting up a number of mini-UDCs, all of which will encourage investment. Urban development grant and urban regeneration grant generate substantial investment in inner cities. Our legislative proposals on the national non-domestic rate will remove a major obstacle to firms wishing to set up in those inner city areas which at present choose to have prohibitively high rates.

35. Mr. Ian Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for stimulating new enterprise in the inner cities.

Mr. Trippier: A number of my Department's programmes are specifically aimed at stimulating new enterprise in the inner cities. Urban development corporations, which operate in some of the most rundown areas, use their powers to acquire, reclaim and service land and their development control powers to create a climate of confidence to attract businesses and encourage them to invest.

Urban development grants are paid through local authorities to bridge the gap between the cost of a project and its value.

Urban regeneration grants work in the same way as urban development grants, but are paid direct to the private sector for projects which bring very large sites and buildings back into use.

Urban programme support for local authority assistance to industry is aimed at removing or reducing the competitive disadvantages suffered by business in rundown urban areas.

Other programmes, which are wider in scope, also help to encourage businesses to invest in inner city areas.

Derelict land grant covers part of the net loss to the landowner as a result of carrying out reclamation work; and land registers bring to the attention of prospective developers details of unused and underused land owned by public authorities.

In addition, our legislative proposals on the national non-domestic rate will remove a major obstacle to firms wishing to set up in those inner city areas which at present choose to have prohibitively high rates.

50. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure that in his Department's housing and financial policies for the inner cities, the needs of existing inner city residents are given priority.

Mr. Trippier: Improving the quality of life for inner city residents is a key part of the Government's strategy for urban renewal. My Department's plans for giving council tenants the opportunity to find another landlord when they are dissatisfied with the service their local authority provides, and the competition and enterprise this will stimulate, should lead to a major improvement in the quality of housing management and service to inner city tenants. The Government have made it clear that housing action trusts will regard the interest of those already resident in their area as central. Policies to strengthen local authorities' financial accountability, and extended competition in the provision of services will also benefit inner city residents. The urban programme places a strong emphasis on economic, environmental and social projects of direct benefit to local residents, complementing wider measures designed to regenerate the urban economy.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, for the purposes of tackling the inner cities crisis, he will make it his policy to consult church, environmental and housing organisations, local authorities and other members of the communities affected by such problems.

Mr. Trippier: The Department regularly discusses inner cities policy and the operation of existing programmes with a wide range of interested organisations and individuals including local authorities and representatives of the churches, business organisations, and other bodies concerned with economic, social, environmental and housing issues.

Water Authorities

16. Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the outstanding level of debt for each of Britain's 10 water authorities compared with the level of their water rates.

Mr. Moynihan: The outstanding debt of each of the English water authorities as a percentage of its annual turnover is as follows:

	Number
Anglian	264
Northumbrian	368
North West	239
Severn Trent	188
Southern	146
South West	131
Thames	42
Wessex	218
Yorkshire	199

The Welsh water authority is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. There are no water authorities in Scotland.

House Building

17. Mr. Arbuthnot asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for private house building starts.

Mrs. Roe: In January to September this year 127,000 private dwellings were started in England, more than in those months of any other year since 1973.

Derelict Land

18. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for bringing into use publicly owned derelict land.

Mr. Ridley: I am empowered under part X of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 to direct certain public bodies to dispose of their underused land. Since 1984, the statutory procedures for directing owners to sell have been initiated on over 250 sites covering 1,300 acres. The Local Government Bill now before Parliament contains our proposals to streamline these procedures.

Westminster Council (Housing Policy)

19. Dr. Moonie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he plans to take on representations sent to him about the housing policy of Westminster council.

Mrs. Roe: None. Local Authorities are responsible for their own housing policies, subject to legal requirements, including, where appropriate, the need to obtain consent from my right hon. Friend.

Rates

20. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest assessment of the impact on rate levels of the next statutory revaluation.

Mr. Howard: Information on the effects of the 1990 revaluation will not be available until the valuation office has analysed the rental information that it is now collecting.

30. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from business organisations in London and the home counties concerning the proposed establishment of a uniform business rate.

Mr. Howard: My Department received 1,217 responses before 31 October 1986 when the consultation period on the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) ended. Of these, 45 were about our proposals for a uniform business rate and were from business organisations in the home counties. We continue to receive representations from all parts of the country about aspects of our proposals as well as requests for further information.

54. Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the uniform business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: 542 responses were received about our proposals for a national non-domestic rate before 31 October 1986 when the consultation period on the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) ended. We continue to receive representations about specific aspects of our proposals as well as requests for further information.

Mr. Riddick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the likely effects upon households in (a) the Colne Valley constituency and (b) the Kirklees Metropolitan district council and (c) the Yorkshire and Humberside region of proceeding with a rate revaluation of domestic properties; and what is his estimate of the number of gainers and losers under such a revaluation.

Mr. Howard: Detailed estimates of the effects of a domestic revaluation are not available; but a recent independent study has forecast that rate bills in the north would increase, especially for occupiers of terraced houses.

Dorset (Structure Plan)

21. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what contact he has had with Dorset county council confirming its proposed revision of the current structure plan.

Mrs. Roe: I have had no personal contact with Dorset county council. As is customary, my officials replied to the county council's consultative document of June 1986, but not on the merits of the proposals. They have also met the council's officers to discuss technical details, and to keep in touch with progress on the review of the structure plan.

National Rivers Authority

23. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about his proposals to establish a National Rivers Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: By the end of October, a total of 318 responses had been received to our policy and consultation paper. Of these, 160 expressed support, and 34 opposition, for the proposals to establish the National Rivers Authority; the remainder commented on details of our proposals, but expressed no view on the principle. I am pleased by the wide measure of support which the responses have shown for our proposals, both inside and outside the water industry itself. We are now considering the comments received, and we shall make known our decisions on the unresolved aspects of our proposals in due course.

34. Dr. Reid asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has considered what mechanisms or criteria will be used by the National Rivers Authority for charging for water recreational activity and fishing, and if he will make a statement.

46. Mrs. Wise asked the Secretary of state for the Environment what he estimates the annual Exchequer grant-in-aid to the National Rivers Authority is likely to be.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Members to the answer given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on Monday 2 November 1987.

36. Mr. Martlew asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has made as to percentage increases in charges to industry for discharge consents that will be made by the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government have proposed that the National Rivers Authority should be empowered to charge for the costs which it reasonably incurs in setting, and monitoring compliance with, effluent discharge consents. Such costs may vary in relation to the scale and complexity of the discharge, but the average charge is unlikely to be substantial.

Rural Development Areas

24. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent evidence he has of the effectiveness of the policies pursued in rural development areas designated by the Development Commission.

Mr. Moynihan: The Development Commission's annual report for 1986-87 which was published on 14 October sets out the latest information on the commission's various achievements in rural areas. A detailed study of the effectiveness of the commission's economic programmes by the Joint Unit for Research on the Urban Environment is to be published shortly.

Hospitals

25. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received following his announcement that there would be no change of use in respect of hospitals included on metropolitan green belt sites which are subject to relocation proposals.

Mrs. Roe: We have received several representations about detailed aspects of the guidelines on the alternative uses to which redundant hospital sites in green belts may be put.

Local Authority Services

26. Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on progress with contracting out local authority services by competitive tendering.

Mr. Howard: It is clear that despite the good example shown by a small number of authorities, the vast majority of local services will not be subjected to market tests of their efficiency without compulsion. Part I of the current Local Government Bill therefore fulfils our commitments to bring forward legislation so as to ensure that ratepayers are not denied the benefits of competition for much longer.

Rivers (Quality)

28. Ms. Quin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals exist to reverse the decline in river quality over the last five years.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government's proposals for protection and enhancement of the water environment were published last year in its consultation paper, "The Water Environment: The Next Steps." A copy is lodged in the Library of the House. We are considering, in the light of the recent report by the Environment Committee, whether any further measures may be appropriate.

Private Empty Property

29. Mr. Robert Hayward asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for bringing into use privately owned empty properties.

Mrs. Roe: Our proposals to reform the private rented sector, outlined in the recent housing White Paper, should encourage many landlords to bring back into use properties which are currently empty.

Local Authority Expenditure

32. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to allow local authorities to spend more then 20 per cent. of their capital receipts from council house sales on housing needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Local authorities can use their capital receipts at any time to redeem debt or for non-prescribed expenditure such as capitalised repairs. The future use of capital receipts from the sale of council houses will be discussed in the Government's forthcoming consultation paper on a new financial regime for local authority housing.

House Prices

33. Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to deal with house price inflation in the south-east of England.

Mrs. Roe: House prices are determined by individual buyers and sellers, and the Government do not propose to intervene in private negotiations. The Government will continue to encourage initiatives such as shared ownership which can help to reduce the initial costs of home ownership.

Storm Damage

37. Mr. Grant asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make funds available to local authorities to assist them in dealing with any long-term damage arising from the recent storms and floods.

Mr. Chope: The scheme of special financial assistance for dealing with storm damage in England announced by my right hon. Friend on 21 October applies only to immediate emergency-related expenditure incurred by local authorities. But, as my right hon. Friend announced, the Government are making limited additional capital allocations available to local authorities this year to assist with repairs to buildings; and additional funds for the Countryside Commission's tree-planting scheme, which extends to local authorities.

The flooding in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

40. Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reimburse the London borough of Lewisham for costs incurred, within his area of responsibility, in meeting the emergencies resulting from the hurricane on 16 October.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, on 21 October. The London borough of Lewisham was invited that day by the Department to apply for assistance if it incurred eligible expenditure above the threshold in the Bellwin scheme.

"The New Grant System"

38. Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has received to his consultation paper "The New Grant System" published in September.

Mr. Howard: Ten letters have been received. In addition, my officials have discussed the paper with officials of the local authority associations.

Council Houses

39. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses were available for letting but vacant on 1 April; and what change this represents from April 1986.

Mrs. Roe: The latest estimates, based on figures reported by English local authorities in their annual housing investment programme returns, is 25,000 dwellings vacant and available for letting at 1 April 1987, a reduction of 5,000 (16 per cent.) compared with April 1986.

48. Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for increasing choice in housing provision for those living in council-owned accommodation.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend proposes a "tenants' choice" scheme, allowing most secure tenants of local housing authorities to invite a new landlord of their choice to apply to the council to buy, with their consent, the freehold of their home.

Local Government Finance

41. Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next proposes to discuss the reform of local government finance with the local authority associations.

Mr. Chope: My Department has established a number of working groups with the local authority associations to discuss our proposals for reforming the present system of financing local government in England. The annual cycle of meetings of the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance, which are chaired by my right hon. Friend, should recommence in the spring of next year.

74. Mr. David Porter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his detailed proposals to reform the present system of financing of local government.

Mr. Howard: The Government's proposals for changes to the local finance system were set out in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) published on 28 January 1986. Consultation on the proposals ran until 31 October 1986 and the Government subsequently published a document "Paying for Local Government: The Community Charge", confirming that they intended to proceed and setting out the proposed administrative arrangements, on 15 December 1986. Since then we have published further documents setting out the Government's proposals for amending the non-domestic rating system and for a new grant system. It was announced in the Gracious Speech that a Bill would be introduced in this Session of Parliament to reform the present rating system.

Housing Defects Act 1984

42. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to amend the Housing Defects Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no plans to amend the housing defects legislation itself. However, we are currently considering whether the detailed rules, in section 538 of the Act, governing grant as against repurchase, might be made more flexible. These rules can be revised under secondary legislation.

Rate Capping

43. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he makes of the demand for services in a particular local authority when reaching his decision on whether to rate-cap that authority.

Mr. Chope: Under the Rates Act 1984, an authority may only be selected for rate limitation on the basis of certain common criteria determined by my right hon. Friend. For every year since the system was introduced, one of the criteria he has determined is the extent to which an authority's total expenditure is likely to exceed its grant-related expenditure, which itself is an objective assessment of what the authority would need to spend to provide a standard level of services.

Council House Sales

45. Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of council home sales in the latest period for which figures are available.

Mrs. Roe: In the three months April to June 1987, English local authorities and new towns sold an estimated 21,900 dwellings.

79. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold since the right to buy was given to sitting tenants; and how many council houses have been built in the same period.

Mrs. Roe: From October 1980 to end June 1987, 765,000 dwellings were sold by English local authorities and new towns, while 214,000 were completed for them.

57. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to make it possible for council house tenants to buy their homes where they are now prevented from so doing because of fittings therein for a disabled member of the family.

Mrs. Roe: It seems right that purpose-built and sheltered housing for the physically disabled should be excluded from the right to buy. In 1984 the Government proposed in the Housing and Building Control Bill to extend the right to buy to housing which had only been adapted for the disabled, but an amendment was carried excluding dwellings which had been the subject of certain major adaptations. There are no plans for further legislation.

Structure Plans

47. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the future of structure plans.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government published proposals for the future of development plans in September 1986, as a basis for consultation. One of the proposals put forward was that the present system of structure and local plans should be abolished, and replaced by a single tier of district development plans. There has been a very full response to that paper from a wide range of organisations and individuals and we are considering the action which should now be taken.

Urban Regeneration Grants

49. Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to revise the criteria for urban regeneration grants.

Mr. Trippier: Urban regeneration grant was launched in April 1987 and has generated considerable interest. I shall review progress shortly.

Homelessness

52. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the increase in London's homelessness between 1979 and 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: In 1979, London boroughs accepted responsibility for securing accommodation for 16,650 households. In the first half of 1987, they accepted 14,820.

55. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to offer temporary accommodation to the homeless over Christmas and in periods of severe weather.

Mr. Waldegrave: The primary responsibility for assisting homeless people rests with the local authorities.

62. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the most recent previous year's cost to the London boroughs of bed-and-breakfast accommodation for homeless people.

Mr. Waldegrave: From returns made by local authorities to the Department it is estimated that in 1985-86 the total net cost to London boroughs was £25·3 million.

85. Ms. Primarolo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to deal with the problem of homelessness.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan).

Pollution

53. Mrs. Walley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has, as to the amount of pollution in the North sea caused by British rivers.

Mr. Moynihan: Controls on inputs of potentially polluting substances to rivers which discharge into the North sea are designed to reduce to a minimum their harmful effects, that is, pollution. The table shows the estimated levels (in tonnes per annum) of the main discharges via British rivers in 1985.

Rivers	N	P	CD	HG	CU	PB	ZN	CR	NI	AS

Local Government (Accountability)

56. Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for improving the accountability to the community of local government.

Mr. Chope: Our proposed changes to the way local government is paid for, in particular the introduction of the community charge, will greatly enhance the accountability of local authorities to those who live in their areas.

Business Movement

58. Mr. Moss asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for encouraging the movement of businesses into the poorer parts of the country.

Mr. Trippier: A number of my Department's programmes are aimed specifically at encouraging businesses to invest in inner city areas.

Urban development corporations, which operate in some of the most rundown areas, use their powers to acquire, reclaim and service land and their development control powers to create a climate of confidence to attract businesses and encourage them to invest.

Urban development grants are paid through local authorities to bridge the gap between the cost of a project and its value.

Urban regeneration grants work in the same way as urban development grants, but are paid direct to the private sector for projects which bring very large sites and buildings back into use.

Urban programme support for local authority assistance to industry is aimed at removing or reducing the competitive disadvantages suffered by business in rundown urban areas.

Other programmes help to encourage businesses to invest in other areas with economic difficulties.

Derelict land grant covers part of the net loss to the landowner as a result of carrying out reclamation work, and land registers bring to the attention of prospective developers details of unused and under-used land owned by public authorities. The assistance provided by the Development Commission and its agent COSIRA is given to small firms operating or wishing to set up in particularly needy rural areas.

Our legislative proposals on the national non-domestic rate will remove a major obstacle to businesses wishing to set up or expand in those inner city areas which at present choose to have prohibitively high rates.

"Paying for Local Government: the Need for Change"

59. Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the latest yellow summary pamphlet of "Paying for Local Government: the Need for Change" cost his Department to produce and print; and how many copies have been printed to date.

Mr. Howard: 100,000 copies of "Paying for Local Government: the Need for Change" have been printed at a total cost of £16,200.

Nugee Report

60. Mr. John M. Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding his Department's response to the Nugee report in relation to leasehold flats.

Mr. Waldegrave: There have been a number of representations from interested organisations and members of the public about the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987, which implemented the main findings of the Nugee report.

Local Authority Manual Workers

61. Mr. Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the likely impact on the level of rates of the recent wage settlement for local authority manual workers.

Mr. Chope: If there is no increase in productivity, the 10·6 per cent. pay increase conceded by the local authority employers to their manual workers could cost over £330 million, which is equivalent to 2 per cent. on rates.

Housing (Inner-City Areas)

63. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on initiatives being taken in collaboration with the private sector to improve public sector housing in inner-city areas.

Mrs. Roe: We are undertaking a number of major initiatives to attract the skills and resources of the private sector into public sector housing, particularly in inner city areas. In 1985 we launched the estate action team to develop with local authorities packages of solutions for the difficult to let housing estates. A key aim is to involve the private sector wherever possible in these packages, for example through a housebuilder or developer refurbishing rundown empty properties for onward sale or renting. More than 20 of the 138 estate action schemes approved in 1986-87 include private sector investment which will provide up to 3,000 new or refurbished houses. We aim to improve this figure this year.

The estate action team's work is complemented by a range of financial incentives to include the private sector in housing initiatives generally, where an additional public sector input is needed. The unit itself has £75 million in 1987-88 (£50 million in 1986-87) to allocate in support of its packages. We have also made available £30 million to the Housing Corporation this year to allocate to projects, including homelessness schemes, which will draw in a further £70 million in private investment, and urban development grant (up to £30 million in 1987-88) continues to be available to enable a wide range of projects, including housing schemes, to go ahead in inner city areas.

In the forthcoming Housing Bill we will be taking two new initiatives which will build on estate action's work. First, in areas where social problems and housing disrepair are particularly serious, housing action trusts will be set up to carry out improvements using both public and private sector resources before transferring the stock to new owners and managers. Secondly, we are introducing in the Bill arrangements to allow council tenants to choose to transfer to other, private landlords. As well as creating greater choice and efficiency, this move will also lead to more private investment in rented housing overall.

Berkshire (Planning Appeals)

64. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of planning appeals in Berkshire he has allowed in the last 12 months.

Mr. Waldegrave: During the year 1 September 1986 to 31 August 1987, 46 per cent. of planning appeals decided in the Berkshire area were allowed.

Lead-free Petrol

68. Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects lead-free petrol to be readily and widely available in Britain.

Mr. Moynihan: Encouraging progress is being made. As at 12 October 1987, 519 petrol stations, providing good geographical coverage, were offering unleaded petrol for sale. I expect further rapid expansion, but the precise scale and timing will depend on increasing uptake by the motoring public, and the response of the petrol companies. We are taking a number of measures to encourage motorists to switch to the cleaner fuel.

Housing Initiatives (Government Support)

70. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on central Government support for housing initiatives in the city of Manchester and the borough of Trafford.

Mr. Waldegrave: In Manchester, my Department's estate action unit approved additional capital allocations of £1,048,000 in 1986-87 and £915,000 in 1987-88 for work to the Miles Platting council estate; and £351,000 in 1986-87 to help the homeless. Urban programme grant for environmental work at Miles Platting has also been approved: £784,383 was available in 1986-87 and £1,270,232 this year.

Both Manchester and Trafford are expected to make bids shortly for estate action support for new schemes in 1987-88.

Local Government

71. Mr. Simon Coombs asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for improving the efficiency of operation of local government.

Mr. Chope: Effectiveness, efficiency and economy of operation in local government are the responsibility of the locally elected councillors. The proposals now before the House to widen competitive tendering will improve value for money in the delivery of local government services. Our proposals on paying for local government will immensely strengthen the direct accountability of local authorities to their electorates for the efficiency of the services they provide.

Lambeth

75. Mr. Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether in 1988-89 he proposes to increase resources in Lambeth which are directed at inner-city problems.

Mr. Trippier: I cannot anticipate public expenditure decisions for 1988-89. I will decide on Lambeth's allocation of urban programme resources, which are specifically directed to inner city problems, in the light of the borough's inner area programme.

Common Land

76. Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to introduce legislation regarding common land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) on 22 October at column 871.

Nuclear Waste

77. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the Government's proposals in relation to the storage of intermediate-level nuclear waste.

Mr. Moynihan: Intermediate-level radioactive waste is currently being stored at producing sites, pending the development of a deep disposal facility for both intermediate and low-level waste. Responsibility for evaluating the relative merits of techniques of deep burial and identifying a suitable location for a facility rests with UK NIREX Ltd. NIREX is planning to publish a discussion document shortly which will outline the options it is pursuing and invite comments from interested parties.

International Conference on the North Sea

78. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will be attending the international conference on the North sea to be held in London in November, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood).

Squatting

80. Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the incidence of squatting in London and the impact that this has on those on the waiting list for council housing including the homeless.

Mrs. Roe: London boroughs reported in their latest housing investment programme returns that, at 1 April 1987, 6,900 of their dwelling, 0·9 per cent. of total council stock in London, were squatted. Information is not available on squatting in property not owned by the boroughs.

In most authorities the number of squatted dwellings is a very small proportion of their total stock. Three boroughs however, (Southwark, Lambeth and Hackney), accounted for 64 per cent. of all reported cases of squatting in London, with just under 3 per cent. of these boroughs' stock being used in this way, and the impact may well be felt on the homeless and those on council housing lists there.

Basildon (Rate-capping)

82. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about his decision to rate-cap Basildon district council.

Mr. Chope: The Secretary of State has received no representations about the selection of Basildon district council for rate limitation in 1988-89.

Rural Areas (Housing)

84. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take to deal with problems of housing in rural areas.

Mr. Waldegrave: The proposals in the White Paper "Housing: the Government's Proposals" (Cmnd. 214) will provide opportunities for improving housing in both rural and urban areas. I have had a useful discussion with interested groups on the implications for rural areas: and will take them into account as the new approach is developed.

Property Revaluation

86. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when was the last revaluation of properties in England and Wales; and what information he has as to the class of domestic properties whose value increased most as a result.

Mr. Howard: The last rating revaluation of properties in England and Wales was in 1973. I will write to my hon. Friend about the other part of his question.

Water Meters

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has estimated the cost of installing water meters in every home in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: No. The cost will depend on where meters are sited and on the economics of scale a widespread metering programme will generate. The proposed compulsory metering trials will help to establish the sort of costs involved.

Runcorn

Mr. Butler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to consult new town tenants in Runcorn on their wishes with regard to future landlords after the wind-up of the new town development corporation.

Mrs. Roe: The Government believe that the interests of the development corporation's tenants are of vital importance, and we shall make sure that they have an opportunity to express their views before any change of landlord takes place.

Water Industry

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied with progress on compliance with the terms of EC environment directives within the water industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: In general, yes. The United Kingdom makes every effort to comply with European Community directives and our record is a good one, both in terms of the formal implementation of directives' requirements and the quality of water in the environment which is achieved.

However, like other member states, we sometimes have difficulties in implementing or meeting the requirements of particular directives. Such problems, when identified, can usually be resolved either through discussions with the water industry or, where appropriate, with the Commission of the European Communities.

Research Specialists

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of operational research specialists in his Department, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Ridley: Five currently. The information is not available for past years.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures are used to assess the job creation effect of enterprise zones; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Regular annual monitoring of activity in the zones records changes in employment but does not distinguish between new jobs and those transferred from elsewhere. We therefore asked the consultants who have evaluated the enterprise zone experiment in Great Britain to assess changes in employment attributable to the zones. Their report will be published in the near future.

Golden Plover

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to remove the golden plover from the quarry species of birds included in schedule 2, part I, to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I am advised that there is no conservation reason at present which would justify removal of the golden plover from part I of schedule 2 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of (a) notices and (b) orders applied for by each local authority under section 53 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for each year since its introduction; of those, how many (i) notices and (ii) orders were granted under section 53 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for each year since its introduction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Figures for the numbers of notices served by surveying authorities under section 53 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 are not held centrally. Nor have we any information about the numbers of orders made except in cases where they are opposed and subsequently submitted to the Secretary of State for confirmation. The relevant annual figures for each authority that has so submitted such an order to date are as follows:

DEFENCE

Search and Rescue

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each year since establishment the number of sorties involving the rescue of (a) military personnel, (b) merchant seamen and (c) civilians undertaken by the helicopter search and rescue flight stationed at RAF Brawdy, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Freeman: Statistics are readily available only from 1983, and in the following form. From 1 January 1983 until 30 September 1987 the following search and rescue sorties were carried out by helicopters based at RAF Brawdy:

Year	Number of sorties	Number of persons recovered
		Military	Civilians
			(A)	(B)	Total

RNAD Milford and Trecwin

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many working days were lost as a result of industrial action in each of the past 13 years at (a) royal naval armaments depot Milford and (b) royal naval armaments depot Trecwin; and if he will list the reason for each industrial action.

Mr. Sainsbury: The available information is not held in the form requested. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Naval Mines

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of the role of the conventional naval mine in modern warfare as both a defensive and offensive weapon.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Recent events in the Gulf demonstrate the threat that can be posed to surface shipping by conventional naval mines. Additionally, the conventional naval mine can be employed as an anti-submarine weapon system with options for use in an offensive or defensive role.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list for each NATO country the estimated number of conventional naval mines held by each country;

(2) if he will list for each NATO country the estimated annual production of conventional naval mines in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our practice, for good reasons of security, to give details of stocks or production rates of munitions of this kind.

Goose Bay

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence what use is made of the facilities at Goose Bay in Labrador for low-flying training; and whether there are any plans for an expansion of Royal Air Force activities there.

Mr. Freeman: The facilities at Goose Bay in Labrador are currently used for low-flying training by the Royal Air Force, as well as the air forces of Canada, the United States of America, the Federal Republic of Germany, and the Netherlands. Usage is governed by a multilateral memorandum of understanding, voluntarily entered into by all these Governments, including Her Majesty's Government. This limits the maximum number of aircraft and personnel to be stationed there. There are at present no plans to renegotiate this understanding. Goose Bay also remains one of the possible locations for the proposed NATO tactical fighter weapons training centre, on which a decision by NATO has not yet been made.

Swynnerton Training Area, (Radioactivity)

Ms. Walley asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will invite the local elected representatives responsible for public protection, hon. Members representing Staffordshire and a radiation monitoring expert of the county council's choice to visit the Swynnerton camp and satisfy themselves that there is no danger from radiation;

(2) if he will now publish the dates of all exercises involving the use of radioactive material at Swynnerton;

(3), what amount of topsoil was removed from Swynnerton following exercises involving radioactive material; to where; and where it now is.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our practice to discuss details of nuclear accident response exercises. However, the precautions that we take to ensure the safety both of participants in nuclear accident response exercises and of the general public were fully set out in the reply that I gave to the hon. Lady and to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 23 July at columns 386-87. I see no valid reason for the suggested inspection of Swynnerton training area.

Research Specialists

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of operational research specialists in his Department for each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: Operational research specialists in the Ministry of Defence are not separately identified. Scientists from a wide range of scientific and mathematical disciplines can expect to be posted into operational research and assessment groups in the Department at various stages in their careers.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Empty Government Property

91. Mr. Rogers asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of Government-owned houses and flats have been empty for more than six months.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information cannot be provided without disproportionate cost.

Tax Offices

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to improve the administrative efficiency and speed with which matters are dealt with by tax offices in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Generally, tax offices are working efficiently, but, where necessary, the Inland Revenue takes all possible steps to reduce arrears of work.

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Henderson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many companies have registered an interest in the profit-related pay scheme;

(2) if he will list those companies which have registered an interest in the profit-related pay scheme.

Mr. Brooke: The mailing list held by the Inland Revenue of all those who have asked to receive information and guidance notes about profit-related pay contains over 26,000 names. I do not propose to publish this list.

Inland Revenue (Records)

Mr. Raison asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer for how many individuals are home addresses known to the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Lawson: The Inland Revenue has records of the home addresses of some 31 million individuals. When—as in many cases—there has been no need for recent correspondence, the information may of course be out of date.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Redwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer in a full year if both husband and wife enjoyed a separate capital gains allowance.

Mr. Norman Lamont: If husband and wife were each entitled to an annual exempt amount of £6,600, and if unused amounts were transferable to the other spouse, the cost would be of the order of £50 million to £100 million.

Mr. Redwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in a full year of raising the capital gains tax allowance to £10,000 per person, and allowing both husband and wife a separate allowance.

Mr. Norman Lamont: About £250 million to £350 million if annual exempt amounts unused by one spouse were transferable to the other.

Taxation

Mr. Hood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about present taxation policies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lamont: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received a number of representations, which he is considering. It is not customary to make statements on taxation policy ahead of the Budget statement.

Third-World

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to grant tax relief to the banks in respect of their write-down of Third-world debt; and what will be the cost to the Exchequer.

Mr. Lilley: Tax relief due to banks in respect of loans which cannot be recovered in full is governed by the ordinary tax rules which apply to any trader who gives credit in the course of his business. Insufficient data are available to estimate the notional amount of tax revenues forgone as a result of losses incurred by banks on irrecoverable loans.

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the lending to the Third world by British banks was to finance the servicing of existing loans, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lilley: No comprehensive data are available for annual flows of gross lending by British banks to less developed sovereign borrowers which identify the purpose to which such lending has been put. However, end-year consolidated figures for United Kingdom registered banks' total claims on less developed countries for the period 1982-86 are as follows. British-owned banks account for around three quarters of the total. Firm figures for interest paid to British-owned banks are unavailable, but a rough calculation suggests that the annual amounts paid by less developed countries might have fallen by about a third between 1982 and 1986, the effect of an increase in the debt outstanding being more than offset by a decline in interest rates.

End-period	Total $ billion
1982	45·9
1983	47·8
1984	47·4
1985	48·0
1986	49·2

Notes:

(1) Changes between years reflect the effect of exchange rate movements as well as flows of lending.

(2) Many developing countries, included in these figures, have not experienced problems in servicing their debts.

HMSO

Mr. Trotter asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 29 October, what specific problems are occurring in the Stationery Office which are resulting in some parliamentary questions continuing to appear on the Order Paper after an instruction has been given that they should be withdrawn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Her Majesty's Stationery Office very much regrets that problems have occasionally occurred as a result of errors in the checking procedure. Her Majesty's Stationery Office is working closely with the House editorial staff to introduce more robust procedures to avoid this happening in future.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details in the Official Report of the new printing equipment which has been purchased by Her Majesty's Stationery Office for the printing of Commons publications.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 3 November 1987]: The main items of equipment newly purchased by Her Majesty's Stationery Office for the printing of Commons publications are as follows:

> a computer typesetting system, comprising two independently working but interlinked systems, with a total of 26 terminals;
> three helium-neon laser typesetting machines, connected on-line to the typesetting system;
> two high-volume bromide paper developing units, with a third smaller unit;
> two projection platemaking systems comprising camera stations, film development unit and computer-driven platemaking unit;
> two plate processing units:
> three twin-unit web-fed offset lithographic printing presses;
> six sheet-fed offset lithographic perfecting presses;
> one flat-bed lithographic proofing press;
> one 16-station finishing line for automatic gathering, side-stitching and trimming;

one 6-station finishing line for gathering and saddle-stitching;
two plastic enveloping machines and one plastic shrink wrapping machine.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will name the manufacturers, suppliers and country of origin of the new equipment at Her Majesty's Stationery Office which has been involved in the recent delays in the printing of Commons papers.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 3 November 1987]: The manufacturers, suppliers and country of origin of the relevant new equipment at the Parliamentary Press are as follows:

(1) Miles 33 system 400 typesetting system. Miles 33 is a British supplier. Hardware was manufactured in the United States of America by Data General and Rank Xerox and in the United Kingdom by Linwood Ltd. Software was written in the United Kingdom.
(2) Wohlenberg Projekte Systeme GmbH. a West German Company, manufactured the majority of the 16-station flowline which was supplied by Pershke Price Service Organisation, a British firm.

EC (Finance)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the gross contribution, before any rebates or refunds, which the United Kingdom will be required to make to the European Economic Community in respect of 1987; and what estimate he has made of the gross contribution under the proposals now made by the European Economic Community Commission for contributions by member states related to gross domestic product and value added tax had been in force.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 3 November 1987]: Estimates of the United Kingdom's gross contribution before abatement to the 1987 Community budget, both under the current financing system and under the Commission's proposals for a new structure of own resources, are contained in table 10 of the Commission's report COM(87)101. These show a gross contribution of 6,660 mecu (£4,883 million at the exchange rates assumed by the Commission) under the present system, and 6,354 mecu (£4,658 million) which would have been paid under the new proposals. The estimates do not take account of the 1987 supplementary and amending budget, but the relative effects of the two financing systems are not significantly affected by this.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Fearn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to introduce allowances against tax for stock appreciation within a business and company.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 2 November 1987]: No. Stock appreciation relief was abolished as part of the business tax reforms in 1984. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has no plans to revive it.

Profits and Dividends

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the totals of profits and dividends repatriated to Britain from the Third world and to the Third world from Britain in each of the last five years.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

The available information relates to overseas direct investment. The value of branch profits and dividends remitted to the United Kingdom from affiliates of United Kingdom companies in the developing countries and the value of branch profits and dividends remitted from United Kingdom companies to their parent companies in the developing countries are given in the table.

The data relating to United Kingdom outward investment will be published in Business Monitor MA4 1985 in approximately two months' time.

SCOTLAND

Buses

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the total cost to each local authority in Scotland, excluding expenditure on concessionary travel (a) of providing bus services in 1985-86 and (b) of payments made to bus operators in the period from 26 October 1986 to 31 March 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The amount of revenue support by each local authority for bus services shown in their final outturn for 1985-86 is as follows:

Regional/Islands Council	£ million
Borders	0·510
Central	1·271
Dumfries and Galloway	1·116
Fife	0·446
Grampian	−0·276
Highland	1·156
Lothian	3·736
Strathclyde	15·787
Tayside	1·504
Orkney	0·038
Shetland	0·244
Western Isles	0·416
Total	25·948

[1] Profit on local authority transport undertaking

Figures are not available for local authority expenditure on payments to bus operators in the period from 26 October 1986 to 31 March 1987, but estimates which have been made suggest that payments have been running at an annual rate of around £15 million.

Forestry

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all grants and tax exemptions currently available for the planting of forestry in Scotland; and if he will give the number of applicants and the total take-up of each in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Grant aid for forestry is provided under the Forestry Commission's forestry grant scheme and broadleaved woodland grant scheme, and I am arranging for copies of leaflets giving details of these schemes to be placed in the Library of the House. As regards taxation, a copy of Forestry Commission leaflet No. 12 "Taxation of Woodlands" is already available in the Library. This leaflet is currently being revised and a copy of the new version will be placed in the Library as soon as it is published.

The information requested on grant scheme applications in Scotland is as follows:

Year ended 31 March (1)	Number of applications received (2)	Area approved for entry to the scheme (hectares) (3)	Area of planting (including restocking) for which grants were paid (hectares) (4)

1987	599	2,408	336

Note: The areas shown in column 3
(a) include existing woodlands; and
(b) cover approvals for planting over a five-year period.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the total acreage of forestry in Scotland in each of the last 10 years for which records are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table:

Year (as at 31 March)	Hectares (thousands)
1978	867
1979	883
1980	904
1981	921
1982	940

Scottish Legal Aid Board

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the delay in payments to individuals by the Scottish Legal Aid Board of money paid to the board on their behalf and the refusal of the board to credit interest on the money to the individual concerned; what action he has taken in response; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This specific topic has not featured in the various representations which my right hon. and learned Friend has received recently about legal aid.

Doctors

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what special transport facilities he is giving to general practitioners who, in order to discharge their duties, must travel through very difficult terrain, or which requires the crossing of lochs and rivers in rural Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: General practitioners are responsible for making their own transport arrangements, and the costs which they incur in so doing are met from the generality of fees and allowances. In addition, for those doctors who, in the course of the discharge of their practice duties, encounter difficult terrain and water journeys, my right hon. and learned Friend makes compensatory payments through the Scottish rural practices fund. The operation of this fund takes account of particular factors, such as the distance of patients' homes from the practice, the use of footpaths and travel by water.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of new full-time doctors needed to cover the need for primary care in the rural parts of Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of general medical practitioners practising in Scotland is kept under constant review by the Scottish medical practices committee whose duty it is to determine the adequacy of general medical services in each health board area. My right hon. and learned Friend has no evidence that the existing number of doctors is inadequate to meet the needs of patients in rural areas.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what urgent steps he is taking in order to solve the problems facing doctors in charge of primary care in rural Scotland, particularly in remote and low populated areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The position of general medical practitioners in rural areas is currently being considered by my right hon. and learned Friend in the course of the review of primary health care, which followed publication of the Government's consultative document "Primary Health Care: An Agenda for Discussion". The conclusions reached on this review will be announced shortly in a White Paper.

Drinking Water

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he is satisfied with the quality of drinking water in Scotland;

(2) what is his policy towards drinking water quality in Scotland in the light of the recent European Community report which finds that the drinking water is not up to the required standard.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have not received such a report. The European Commission has written to the Government seeking clarification of a number of matters relating to the EC directive on the quality of water intended for human consumption (80/778/EEC). The Government are considering these matters and will reply to the Commission in due course.

Water authorities—the regional and islands councils—have a duty to provide a supply of wholesome water for domestic purposes. The quality of private water supplies is the responsibility of the owners, but the district and islands councils have powers and duties to ensure that such supplies are not a risk to public health.

My right hon. and learned Friend considers that the local authorities are discharging their duties satisfactorily. He also considers that the quality of drinking water is generally satisfactory and that where necessary improvements are in progress or are planned.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact on the Scottish fishing industry of freezer trawler operations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Two freezer trawlers, based at ports in England, currently operate in the main herring and mackerel fisheries; the granting of licences for three further freezer trawlers (two based in England, one in Scotland) was announced in January, but these additional licences are unlikely to be utilised until 1988. As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food recently pointed out, freezer trawlers have a part to play in ensuring that this country can fully fish its quotas. The existing freezer trawlers have not had any appreciable impact on the 45 purse seine vessels which make up the main component of the Scottish-based pelagic fleet but this is something which I am keeping under close review.

Visits

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is planning a visit to Clydesdale in the near future.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. McLeish asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent in Scotland at 1986 prices, on (a) regional development grant and (b) regional selective assistance for each year from 1979.

Mr. Lang: Total payments of regional selective assistance and regional development grant, at 1986 prices, to firms in Scotland between 1979-80 and 1986-87 are set out in the table below:

£ million

Year	Payments of Regional Selective Assistance at constant (1986) prices	Payments of Regional Development Grant at constant (1986) prices
1979-80	28·7	115·8
1980-81	30·9	157·2
1981-82	24·4	181·0
1982-83	23·7	339·0
1983-84	27·2	161·6
1984-85	34·5	117·6
1985-86	49·1	108·5
1986-87	35·1	166·8

Mr. McLeish asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will reconsider the exclusion of Glenrothes new town from the areas designated in Scotland for regional development grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My righ hon. Friend is aware of concern about the assisted area status of Glenrothes new town but no review of assisted area designation is planned at the present time.

British Rail (Scotland)

Mrs. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number and level of grants awarded by the Scottish Development Department to British Rail (Scotland) in each of the past five years, giving details of the projects for which such grants were allocated.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There were none.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 3 November 1987]: The total expenditure by my Department on advertising in Scottish national, regional and local newspapers for the past five years was:

	£
1982-83	334,860
1983-84	387,400
1984-85	455,850
1985-86	318,560
1986-87	394,000

These figures include production costs. A breakdown of expenditure in national and local newspapers could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Hospital and Community Health Service, Lothian

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the annual change in available resources, taking into account the inflation of hospital and community health service costs, in the provision of the hospital and community health service in the Lothian health board area for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 2 November 1987]: No record is maintained of pay and price movements within the NHS in Scotland and it would not, in any event, be appropriate to apply a national index of pay and price movements to expenditure figures for individual health boards because the composition of that expenditure may differ substantially from the national average. The following table shows the year-on-year change in Lothian health board's revenue allocation for hospital and community health services; after adjustment for inflation as measured by the GDP deflator.

Monofilament Nets

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many convictions have been obtained, by sheriff court, under the monofilament banning order 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The order in question is the Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Carriage of Monofilament Gill Nets) (Scotland) Order 1986. Precise figures are not available and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost. The indications are, however, that the number of cases is very small. The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries has reported only one case under the order which resulted in a conviction.

Rating Reform

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is in a position to estimate the number of service men who will have to pay the personal community charge in Scotland in its first year of operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1987]: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no such estimate. In 1986 about 19,700 United Kingdom service men were stationed in Scotland.

Factory Closures

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many factory closures have been reported to him in (a) Fife and (b) Scotland since June 1979.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1987]: Information is not available in the precise form requested. It is provisionally estimated that between July 1979 and September 1987, 810 closures in Scotland involving 10 or more redundancies in manufacturing industry were confirmed to Manpower Services Commission. Comprehensive figures for Fife on the same basis cannot be provided since records are not completely allocated to some regions for some of the earlier years of the period.

Education Statistics

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of PhDs awarded, by subject and institution, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The information is not readily available.

THE ARTS

Financial Provision

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister for the Arts what is the latest assessment his Department has made of the effect of the abolition of the metropolitan authorities on arts spending and arts provision in the areas concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Replacement expenditure in 1986-87 by the Arts Council, the British Film Institute and successor authorities in those areas affected by abolition was as follows:

£ million

	Performing arts		Film
	Arts Council	Successor Authorities	British Film Institute	Successor Authorities

Regional Arts Councils

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister for the Arts if he will provide figures for each of the last five years, and the estimates for 1987 and 1988, in real and cash terms, to show spending by each of the regional arts councils.

Mr. Luce: The information requested is as follows:

[1] Estimate

Research Specialists

Mr. Bermingham asked the Minister for the Arts what is the total number of operational research specialists in his Department, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Luce: There have been no operational research specialists employed in the Office of Arts and Libraries since its establishment as a separate Department in 1983.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 3 November 1987]: My Department has spent nothing on advertising in national newspapers in the past five years.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Schizophrenia

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many current occupants of National Health Service hospital and unit beds have a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis in each health region; what those figures are as percentages of (a) mental and (b) all hospital beds in each region; and how figures compare with each of the past five years.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend the information he seeks as it is not centrally collected. Statistics on the numbers of long-stay residents with particular mental illnesses will be available in the future following the implementation of new data collection systems throughout the National Health Service from April 1987.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the admissions by diagnosis and order of admissions, including percentage change in numbers and rates per 100,000 populations, of patients suffering from schizophrenic psychosis in each of the health regions for the years 1984-86 inclusive.

Mrs. Currie: The information is in the following table.

Domestic Heating Standards

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the standard of heating in British homes, particularly in the case of elderly people and people on low incomes.

Mr. Portillo: No studies have been made by this Department of the standard of heating itself. However, help with the cost of heating for elderly people and those on low incomes is available through the weekly supplementary benefit scale rates and heating additions.

Mortality Statistics

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what was the total number of deaths among those aged (a) 60 to 69 years, (b) 70 to 79 years and (c) 80 years and over for the period 1 October 1986 to 31 December 1986.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 1 July, Official Report, column 115, when he expects to process data relating to the numbers of deaths among those aged (a) 60 to 69 years, (b) 70 to 79 years and (c) 80 years and over for the period 1 January to 31 March.

Mrs. Currie: The data have been processed and are shown in the table:

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of cases where hypothermia was mentioned on the death certificate for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and how many of each annual total were of people aged (a) 65 years and over and (b) 80 years and over.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table.

Cranial Osteopaths

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which health districts in the United Kingdom fund the treatment of patients by cranial osteopaths.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not held centrally on the funding of individual forms of treatment provided through the National Health Service. General practitioners and hospital doctors are free to recommend any form of treatment which in their clinical judgment will benefit an individual patient's condition.

Doctors

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in the area of the Northern regional health authority, what was the average basic rate of pay for junior hospital doctor grades in the years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87; what was the average income from overtime pay in each of those years; and what were the average numbers of overtime hours worked expressed as an annual and an average figure for each working week.

Mr. Newton: The hon. Member may wish to approach the Northern regional health authority for this information, which is not available centrally in the form requested. The basic rate of salary for junior hospital doctors is related to the first 40 hours of duty. They may receive payments additional to basic salary for each unit of medical time (UMT), being four hours of duty, which they are contractually required to perform in excess of 40 hours. The relevant rates are shown in the table. Practitioners may also receive additional earnings from duty performed outside their normal contracted hours for their own or another employing authority.

[6] For availability on call.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific action he plans to take to reduce the hours worked by junior hospital doctors.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Members for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) and for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 3 November.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific steps he proposes to take to increase the number of hospital doctors.

Mr. Newton: It is for health authorities to determine the number of hospital doctors they require to meet their service objectives, within broad national priorities, but taking account of local needs and circumstances. The Department's role is to ensure an adequate supply of doctors at all stages in the career progression to meet those needs. Decisions on the overall supply of doctors will be taken in the light of advice from an advisory committee on medical manpower planning, but a preliminary assessment is that the current supply is sufficient to sustain a steady growth in the number of hospital doctors. Decisions on the number of training programmes in individual specialties are taken in the light of advice from a joint planning advisory committee, and where necessary additional posts are set up. Finally, to help to ensure that hospital medicine continues to be an attractive career option for young doctors, health departments have held discussions with the medical profession and with regional chairmen culminating in the publication of "Achieving a Balance—Plan for Action", which I announced on 27 October in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) at column 258. Among its provisions are a number of measures designed to increase the number of consultants, the introduction of a new intermediate-level staff grade, and a mechanism to relate the number of doctors in training to expected consultant opportunities.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of fully-trained speech therapists employed in each region of the National Health Service for 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87; and what was the rate of turnover of fully-trained speech therapy staff in each region for those years.

Mr. Newton: Staff in post figures are shown in the table. Information on turnover of staff is not held centrally.

St. Nicholas Mental Illness Hospital, Newcastle

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, in the light of the refusal on appeal of planning permission for a Fine Fare superstore in the grounds of St. Nicholas mental illness hospital, Newcastle, and the consequent loss of capital recession, if he will make a special capital allocation available to Newcastle district health authority to allow that authority's programme of transferring mental illness patients into the community to continue.

Mr. Newton: The allocation of capital moneys to Newcastle district health authority is the responsibility of the Northern regional health authority.

Social Fund

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will announce the allocation of the social fund grants and loans budgets for 1988-89 to individual local offices.

Mr. Scott: Allocations to each individual local office in Great Britain which will administer the fund, together with totals for each social security region, are listed as follows.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of the representations received from Scotland about his draft guidelines for the social fund.

Mr. Portillo: Thirteen organisations based in Scotland have commented on the draft social fund manual.

Scientists and Clinical Psychologists

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the 1987 clinical psychologists pay claim.

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will bring forward proposals to improve the pay of hospital scientists.

Mr. Newton: The pay of scientists and clinical psychologists is a matter for the Whitley Council. I understand that a joint meeting has been arranged for 11 November.

Disablement Services Authority

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the members of the Disablement Services Authority have any form of disability; and what steps he is taking to arrange for disabled people to be more widely represented on the authority.

Mr. Scott: One member of the Disablement Services Authority is a double amputee and another is a wheelchair user. We have no plans for changing the present membership of the authority.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Cummings asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate the number of live births and stillbirths within Easington district during the year 1986-87.

Mrs. Currie: During the 1986-87 financial year (from April 1986 to March 1987) there were 1,315 live births and five stillbirths to women resident in the Easington district of County Durham.

Storm Damage

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive a full assessment of recent storm damage to National Health Service property; what steps he intends to take to ensure that the cost of repairs to National Health Service property in the Canterbury and Thanet health authority district does not detract from funds available for patient care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The regional health authorities concerned have been asked to provide information, including the estimated cost of making good the damage caused to their property on 15/16 October. We expect to receive a detailed assessment shortly, and will consider the position in the light of that assessment.

Research Specialists

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of operational research specialists in his Department, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The number of operational research scientists employed in the Department for each year since 1979 is:

Operational research scientists

Date (1 April)	Number
1979	29
1980	30
1981	27

St. Paul's Eye Hospital, Liverpool

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many inter-ocular lens operations will take place at Liverpool's St. Paul's eye hospital in the remainder of the financial year 1987-88; and how many have taken place in the last six months.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to ask the chairman of the Liverpool health authority for the information.

Royal Liverpool Hospital (Funding)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on funding for the royal Liverpool hospital.

Mrs. Currie: As responsibility for the allocation of resources to the royal Liverpool hospital lies with Liverpool health authority, the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman.

Maternity Grant

Mr. Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will review the level of the £80 maternity grant from the social fund.

Mr. Scott: As my right hon. Friend announced to the House on 27 October the social fund maternity payment will be increased to £85 as from next April.

Sex Abuse Allegations (Leeds)

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children were taken into care in Leeds for each of the years 1984, 1985 and 1986 as a result of a diagnosis of alleged sex abuse.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Radiotherapy Levels

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his policy division expects to complete its review of the policy of centralising radio therapy levels; if the review will be published; and if the division has invited the submission of evidence.

Mr. Newton: The Department's internal review of its guidance to health authorities on the organisation of radiotherapy services is nearing completion. An announcement will be made as soon as conclusions have been reached.

Disabled Persons (Services, Representation and Consultation) Act 1986

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when Her Majesty's Government intend to implement sections 5 and 6 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Representation and Consultation) Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: Following the successful outcome of discussions with the local authority associations, I am pleased to be able to announce that sections 5 and 6 of the Act are to be implemented with effect from 1 February 1988. That date has been selected to give local authorities time to make the necessary administrative arrangements. The next step will be to consult the associations and the consortium of voluntary organisations who have been monitoring the implementation of the Act on draft guidance to local authorities on these two sections. This will be done as soon as possible.

The first disabled school leavers to receive statutory assessment by local authority social services departments under the terms of section 5 will mainly be those reaching the statutory school leaving age in 1990. However, I hope that local authorities will be able to apply the new arrangements on a non-statutory basis to as many as possible disabled young people who leave school in 1989.

The additional costs arising from sections 5 and 6 in 1988-89, mainly in relation to the identification and assessment of disabled school leavers, are estimated at £5 million. The local authority associations have accepted that this is covered in the proposed personal social services provision for that year. It has also been agreed that the best estimate of additional service costs arising from assessments made under section 5 is £14 million in 1989-90 and £20 million in subsequent years. These figures will be taken into account in the public expenditure discussions for the appropriate year.

There will be continuing discussions with the local authority associations on the costs of other outstanding sections of the Act.

Heating Additions

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many supplementary benefit claimants on the long-term rate of benefit were receiving heating additions at (a) the higher and (b) the lower rate on 30 September 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987; what percentages of the total numbers of claimants on the long-term rate were receiving each type of addition on that date; and what were these figures and percentages for each office of his Department within Newcastle upon Tyne;

(2) how many supplementary benefit claimants were receiving heating additions at (a) the higher and (b) the lower rate on 30 September 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987; what percentages of the total numbers of supplementary benefit claimants were receiving each type of addition on that date; and if he will give these figures and percentages for each office of his Department within Newcastle upon Tyne.

Mr. Portillo: Information from which the number and percentage of supplementary benefit claimants in Great Britain receiving heating additions can be extracted is available only for December 1984 and February 1986. I will let the hon. Member have a reply giving these figures as soon as possible. Equivalent figures for each local office in Newcastle upon Tyne are not available.

Benefits

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of supplementary benefit recipients aged under 25 years in Great Britain in 1986 and in the earliest year for which figures are available in the following household categories (a) lone person householders, (b) living as members of another person's household and (c) paying an inclusive charge for full board and lodgings.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The information is as follows:

	November 1979 (thousands)	February 1986 (thousands)
(a) Lone person householders[1]	20	129
(b) Members of another person's household	222	647
(c) Boarders[2]	5	52

[1] Excludes joint householders, and householders with dependants, non-dependants, boarders or sub-tenants.

[2] Excludes claimants in hostels or common lodging houses but includes cases where only part board is supplied (eg bed and breakfast only).

Abortion

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, Official Report, column 175, how many of the 69.7 per cent. of abortions after 18 weeks which were performed upon women with no previous children were performed upon women who had had a previous abortion.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 2 November 1987]: of the 5,770 notified abortions at 18 weeks and over gestation performed in England and Wales in 1986 on women with no previous children, 722 (12.5 per cent.) were performed on women who had had a previous abortion.

Birmingham Health Authority

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out figures for revenue spending for the Birmingham health authorities in 1982-83 at 1985-86 values together with the figure for 1985-86; and what account these figures take of demographic changes in addition to inflation.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 21 October 1987 c. 806]: Allocations to the five Birmingham district health authorities are a matter for the West Midlands regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the RHA seeking information about the basis of those allocations.

The information requested on revenue expenditure is shown in the following table. Provisional expenditure figures for 1986-87 are also shown. Comparable figures for 1987-88 will not be available until after the end of the financial year. The initial 1987-88 revenue allocations which the districts received from the West Midlands regional health authority are given in the table. However these allocation figures are not comparable with the expenditure figures shown for earlier years; in particular, they exclude income generated by the authorities themselves.

Publicity (Departmental Expenditure)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the total spending by his Department on press and public relations in 1986-87; and what is the estimated expenditure for the current year;

(2) what was the total spending by his Department on television, radio and newspaper advertising and other promotional literature in 1986-87; and what is the estimated expenditure for the current year.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 17 July 1987, c. 667]: My Department has no section which can be separately identified as public relations. Functions which are commonly associated with public relations are carried out by the Department's information division.

Total spending by my Department's information division in 1986-87 was as follows:

	£
Advertising and promotional literature	19,200,000
Professional manpower	936,000

Estimates for the 1987-88 year are as follows:

	£
Advertising and promotional literature	28,800,000
Professional manpower	994,000

Figures for the total spending by my Department on television, radio and newspaper advertising (but not cinema or poster advertising) and other literature in 1986-87 are as follows:

	£
Television	2,345,000
Radio	771,000
Newspapers	5,570,000
Other promotional literature	8,488,000
Total	17,174,000

Estimates for the 1987-88 year are as follows:

	£
Television	7,688,000
Radio	1,420,000
Newspapers	8,232,000
Other promotional literature	6,720,000
Total	24,040,000

Social security spending in the 1986-87 financial year centred on the changes arising from the reform of social security. In addition to the routine amendments to benefit literature, campaigns were mounted to advise potential beneficiaries of changed entitlements to maternity and invalid care allowances and the provision for extra help with heating costs because of the exceptionally cold weather.

Estimated expenditure for the 1987-88 financial year on advertising and promotional literature includes £11 million to explain and introduce the reform of social security. Approximately half of this figure will be for literature explaining the benefits. The balance will be spent on advertising to bring the changes to the attention of the public.

The major elements in health publicity spending in 1986-87 and that planned for 1987-88 include: public education campaigns on AIDS, drugs misuse, teenage anti-smoking, breast and cervical cancer and advice for people travelling abroad; together with recruitment campaigns for nurses, other NHS staff groups and blood donors.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Schizophrenia

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people with a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis were discharged from mental illness hospitals in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; and how many of them were taken into local authority residential care in the same year.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

	Number
1986	981
1985	1,120
1984	1,096
1983	1,037
1982	985

These figures may include patients discharged more than once in the year.

Information about how many of these people were subsequently admitted into residential care provided by health and social services boards in Northern Ireland is not available.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people discharged from hospital following a main diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis and subsequently taken by the police under section to hospital have been refused admission in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost from each of the psychiatric units in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research projects his Department has funded to test the effectiveness of community care for people suffering from schizophrenic psychosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: None.

Deaf/Blind People

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many deaf/blind and blind/deaf people there are in Northern Ireland; what advice his Department is giving to area health and social services boards as to how the needs of these groups can be met; what provision is being made by boards; what efforts are being made to provide employment for young deaf/blind people who are capable of earning a living; what provision exists for specialist training of social workers to meet the needs of deaf/blind people in Northern Ireland; what is the incidence of mental handicap among the deaf/blind; what additional needs have been identified as requiring further help; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: In the absense of an accepted definition of the terms blind/deaf and deaf/blind, information about these groups and on the incidence of mental handicap among them is not available. In an attempt to provide a workable interpretation the Royal National Institute for the Blind has established a working party which is currently considering this complex issue.

In Northern Ireland, the individual needs of visually handicapped and hearing-impaired clients are met by the general range of statutory and voluntary services including the provision of home helps, aids and adaptations, and day centre and workshop activities. In the Eastern board area, specialist rehabilitation services are provided at Beechbank house and Helen Keller house. However, it is recognised that services specifically for the deaf and blind reqire improvement. In its regional strategy for the period 1987-92, the Department has advised boards that it will expect them to effect improvements either through the creation of specialist posts or through in-service training designed to ensure that existing staff, including social workers, are made more aware and capable of meeting the needs of blind and deaf people.

With regard to employment opportunities, each of the Province's 28 jobmarkets has a careers officer who has particular responsibility for guiding and advising disabled young persons on career choice and on training in the youth training programme. The programme provides financial resources for young disabled people to meet the cost of, for example specialist equipment, and for deaf and blind trainees in particular, assistance is available through the Education Support Service which has three full-time teachers specialising in their needs.

Roads

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the level of funding allocated to the major roads programme in the last 10 years in the areas covered by the following divisional offices: Craigavon and Downpatrick; and if he will give a geographic breakdown of funding in (i) Down district (all) (ii) Newry and Mourne district (in County Down) and (iii) Banbridge (in the electoral wards of Bannside and Katesbridge, Dromore South, Dromore North, Quilly, Garron and Croob).

Mr. Needham: Expenditure was as follows:

	£ million
Craigavon Division	14·8
Downpatrick Division	22·6
Down District	0·6
Newry and Mourne District (in County Down)	5·8
Bambridge District (electoral wards of Bannside, Katesbridge, Dromore South, Dromore North, Quilly, Garran and Croob	1·0

Housing

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of contractors' work is inspected after improvement work is carried out to Housing Executive dwellings in the areas covered by the following district offices: Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Banbridge, Newry district 1 and Newry district 2; and if he is satisfied that this process results in value for money and a proper standard of workmanship.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Housing Executive who has advised me that all dwellings in improvement schemes are inspected on completion of the works and at the end of a defects liability period. The executive is satisfied that its inspection arrangements result in value for money and a proper standard of workmanship.

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current policy on the improvement of labourers' cottages in Northern Ireland; and how many unimproved labourers' cottages are part of Housing Executive stock in the areas covered by the following district offices: Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Banbridge, Newry district 1 and Newry district 2.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Housing Executive who has informed me that current policy is to carry out full improvements to labourers' cottages where possible subject to normal value for money considerations. The executive is aware of only one cottage in the districts in question on which no improvements have been carried out.

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new houses the Housing Executive will construct in the financial year 1987-88 in the areas covered by the following district offices: Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Banbridge, Newry district 1 and Newry district 2.

Mr. Needham: This is primarily a matter for the Housing Executive. I understand from the chairman that in the 1987-88 financial year the Housing Executive expects to complete or start dwellings in the areas covered by these district offices as follows:

District Office	Planned completions	Planned starts
Downpatrick	31	31
Kilkeel	—	11
Banbridge	22	44
Newry No. 1	8	31
Newry No. 2	9	33

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many handicapped adaptations applications have been received in the areas covered by the following offices during 1987-88: Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Banbridge, Newry district 1 and Newry district 2; for what types of adaptations applications are made; how many of these have been completed; what agencies are involved in the process and how long it takes to process a handicapped adaptation.

Mr. Needham: This a matter for the chairman of the Housing Executive, who has informed me that the number of handicapped adaptations applications received in respect of both private and public dwellings in the areas referred to during the period April 1987 to September 1987 was as follows:—

	Number
Downpatrick	52
Banbridge	60
Kilkeel Newry 1 Newry 2	233

Separate figures for applications received in Kilkeel and the two Newry district offices, and the numbers of these applications which have been completed are not readily available but I will ask the chairman of the Executive to write to the hon. Member on both these points.

The type of adaptations requested range from minor works such as provision of handrails or the fitting of locks and handles at convenient levels, to major renovations involving provision of an extension for kitchen, bathroom or bedroom facilities.

In dealing with such applications the Housing Executive works closely with the appropriate health and social services board, district council and Northern Ireland Fire Authority.

The time scale from receipt of an initial request to on-site completion varies considerably according to the complexity of each case. Minor works can be undertaken within a relatively short period. For major works to public sector houses, allowing for consultations, design, statutory approvals and contract period the average would be 1½ to 2 years.

Disabled People

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was his response to the Northern Ireland Council on Disability's proposals for equality of opportunity in employment for disabled people; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has any plans for further consultations with the Northern Ireland Council on Disability regarding equality of employment opportunity for people with disabilities;

(3) what plans he has for promoting equality of opportunity in employment for people in Northern Ireland with disabilities.

Mr. Viggers: Following consideration of all responses, including those received from the Northern Ireland Council on Disability, to the Government's consultative paper on equality of opportunity in employment the council has been advised that disability in Northern Ireland will continue to be addressed in the same way as in the rest of the United Kingdom. Discussions are, however, taking place between council and Government officials to examine how employment and training provision for disabled people can be most effectively administered and to consider proposals by the NICD that an equality of opportunity unit within its own organisation should be established.

Capital Grants

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why Northern Ireland has incurred a cut in the standard capital grant rate from 20 per cent. to 12·5 per cent; and what is his estimate of the percentage reduction in real terms.

Mr. Viggers: The decision to reduce the rate of standard capital grant was taken because this scheme does not provide good value for public money. Due to its automatic nature the scheme is unable to take account of factors such as the relationship between the investment and the creation of jobs or whether the project would have proceeded irrespective of grant assistance. In addition SCG has created a displacement effect whereby the grant aiding of some firms has placed their competitors, who are also dependent on local markets at a disadvantage.

The grant rate change is expected to result in a reduction in SCG expenditure this year of £1·75 million and £5 million in the next financial year. This represents some 1 per cent. and 3 per cent. respectively of the current year's planned expenditure on industrial support and development.

The Government intend that available funds should be targeted increasingly on the stimulation of new developments, the promotion of competitiveness and the introduction of better design, quality and marketing. It is intended that this change of emphasis should be achieved by greater use of IDB's and LEDU's selective assistance schemes.

Democracy

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list in the Official Report the 20 delegations of councillors which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State the hon. Member for Wiltshire, North (Mr. Needham) saw from the main political parties in Northern Ireland before publishing his discussion paper on elected representatives and the democratic process in Northern Ireland;

(2) if he will list in relation to the 20 delegations of councillors which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State the hon. Member for Wiltshire, North saw, concerning the discussion paper on elected representatives and the democratic process in Northern Ireland (a) which councils were represented by which parties and (b) which councils were represented by joint delegations composed of representatives of which parties.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 November 1987]: I received delegations, at separate or joint meetings, from the following councils and political parties: Antrim (SDLP and UUP); Ards (DUP and UUP); Armagh (DUP, SDLP and UUP); Banbridge (DUP and UUP); Ballymena (DUP and UUP); Belfast (SDLP and UUP); Carrickfergus (DUP and UUP); Craigavon (SDLP); Cookstown (SDLP); Derry (DUP); Down (SDLP); Dungannon (UUP); Fermanagh (DUP and UUP); Larne (DUP and UUP); Limavady (DUP, SDLP and UUP); Lisburn (Alliance and UUP); Magherafelt (DUP); Newtownabbey (DUP and UUP); North Down (Alliance, DUP and UUP); and Strabane (DUP). Councillors from the two unionist parties attended joint meetings, along with a number of Independent Unionists. The other political parties were represented at separate meetings.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, in relation to the 20 delegations of councillors which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State the hon. Member for Wiltshire, North saw, concerning the discussion paper on elected representatives and the democratic process in Northern Ireland, which of the councils involved had subscribed to the Fair Employment Agency's declaration on fair employment.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 November 1987]: Belfast, Derry, Down, Fermanagh, Magherafelt and Newtownabbey councils had signed the Fair Employment Agency's declaration of principle and intent.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, in relation to the 20 delegations of councillors, which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Wiltshire, North saw, concerning the discussion paper on elected representatives and the democratic process in Northern Ireland, which of the councils represented had limited or refused to conduct their business after the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 November 1987]: Of the councils whose members took part in the 20 meetings held, protest action against the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement resulting in some form of disruption of council business was taken by Antrim, Ards, Armagh, Ballymena, Banbridge, Belfast, Carrickfergus, Cookstown, Craigavon, Dungannon, Larne, Limavady, Lisburn, Newtownabbey and North Down councils.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to him, in relation to the 20 delegations of councillors which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Wiltshire, North saw, concerning the discussion paper on elected representatives and the democratic process in Northern Ireland, as to which of the delegations were mandated by their councils and which by political groups.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 October 1987]: None.

Sheep and Lambs (Sale Restrictions)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sheep and lambs, and in what areas of Northern Ireland, are still under restriction for sale as a result of the nuclear accident at Chernobyl in the USSR.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 2 November 1987]: When restrictions on movement and slaughter of sheep were introduced on 15 September 1987 a survey revealed the presence of approximately 35,000 sheep in the affected areas as follows:

	Number
Glenwherry, County Antrim	8,500
Glenshane, County Londonderry	21,000
Belraugh, County Londonderry	5,500

To date approximately 4,000 sheep have been monitored and released from restriction.

Storm Damage

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has to the number of dwellings which were flooded in each council area in Northern Ireland due to the exceptional rainfall on 21 October.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 November 1987]: Flooding of dwellings was confined mainly to the west and north-west of the Province. Details of reported major incidents of flooding are as follows:

District	Dwellings
Strabane	300
Omagh	84
Fermanagh	52
Craigavon	35
Coleraine	28
Banbridge	24
Armagh	16
Limavady	13

Precise numbers of flooded dwellings in other council districts are not known but are probably in single figures.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the repairs to the banking system on the River Roe which are necessary as a result of flood damage on 21 October to be completed; and what is his estimate of the cost.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 3 November 1987]: Repairs to the flood bank on the River Roe have already started. Progress will depend on weather conditions and the work is likely to take up to six months to complete. Its estimated costs is £120,000.

Home Help Service

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the inflation-adjusted cost of the home help care service in the constituency of Newry and Armagh during 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986 respectively.

Mr. Needham [holding answer, 2 November 1987]: The costs of the home help service provided in the Armagh/Dungannon and Newry/Mourne units of management are as follows:

	£[1]
1983-84	2,799,314
1984-85	2,737,926
1985-86	2,913,641
1986-87	[2]2,856,046

[1] At 1985-86 prices.

[2] Provisional.

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of recipients of home help care in the constituency of Newry and Armagh in 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986 respectively.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The numbers who received home help service in the Newry and Mourne and Armagh and Dungannon units of management were:

	Newry and Mourne	Armagh and Dungannon
1983	1,817	1,953
1984	1,848	1,772
1985	1,958	1,987
1986	1,576	1,921

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of recipients of home help care in Northern Ireland in 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986 respectively.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The information is as follows:

28,023, 28,318, 29,602 and 29,897 respectively.

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will initiate a review of the home help care service in Northern Ireland to establish the cost of the service during 1986 and the savings achieved by the Department of Health and Social Services as a result of the home help care service reducing the number of sick, aged and disabled who would otherwise have needed to be admitted to hospital or residential care during the same period.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 November 1987]: No. The Department of Health and Social Services has recognised in its regional strategy for 1987-92 that a wide range of domiciliary and other community services is essential in ensuring that people are admitted to long-stay care, whether in hospital or residential accommodation, only where this is essential.

The Department has also indicated that it intends to test this strategy by means of a programme of evaluation and monitoring, but a review related only to one component of the range of services which comprise community care would not be appropriate.

Maryfield Secretariat

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Belfast, South of 2 July, Official Report, column 161, he will bring up to date the costs so far to public funds of the Maryfield secretariat;

(2) if he will list all the sums of over £1,000 annual cost attributable to expenditure on the Maryfield secretariat.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 3 November 1987]: The cost to United Kingdom public funds of secretariat salaries, to the end of September, was £193,000; that of running expenses £184,000. Records are not kept in such a form as to yield the further breakdown the hon. Gentleman seeks.

Intergovernmental Council

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give particulars of each of the meetings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council held since the signing of the Hillsborough agreement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

The Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council has continued to provide a framework for a wide variety of meetings between our two Governments. These include the meetings of the Intergovernmental Conference established by the Anglo-Irish Agreement of 1985, which was explicitly set up within the framework of the AIIC. There have been a number of meetings at all the levels since the conclusion of the agreement, including those of the AIIC co-ordinating committee and its cultural and educational working group.

TRANSPORT

Catalytic Converters

87. Mr. Livingstone asked the Secretary of State for Transport what account he has taken of recent developments in catalytic converters; and if he will now reconsider the case for fitting these converters to British cars.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We keep in close touch with developments in vehicle technology. We will be tightening our legal emission standards when the relevant European directives have been finally adopted. We expect that catalysts will be needed in the 1990s on a substantial number of new cars registered in Britain.

Goods Vehicles

88. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to increase planning controls on the granting of licences for the operation of goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The environmental provisions relating to operator licensing were reviewed last year. I announced then that a number of amendments to the legislation would be brought forward when an opportunity arose. There was no recommendation for a closer link between planning and licensing law. When considering an application which involves a new operating centre the licensing authorities are able to take into account any information about planning permission.

Lean Burn Engines

89. Mr. Ingram asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the lean burn engine to be fitted to all new cars sold in Britain.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I cannot predict how widely the lean burn engine will be used in future. It is one of the most attractive options open to manufacturers seeking to comply with tighter emission limits, taking into account factors such as cost, performance, fuel economy and driveability.

Lead-free Petrol

90. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set a final date for Britain to have lead-free petrol only on sale.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Leaded petrol will be needed for a diminishing number of cars until around the end of the century.

Farm Vehicles

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what enforcement action is taken to ensure that farmers do not abuse the preferential treatment of farmers' vehicles to undercut boda fide professional road haulage.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Both the police and officials of this Department aim to ensure, by roadside checks and other available means, that vehicles are correctly licensed for the uses to which they are being put. I am not aware of any general difficulty relating to the licensing concessions for farmers' vehicles. Perhaps my hon. Friend could write to me if he has a particular problem in mind.

Coach Routes (Designation)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now return to local authorities the duty to designate coach routes in their areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Local authorities retain their powers under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 to prevent public service vehicles from using unsuitable roads. The Transport Act 1985 gave them a further power to prohibit or restrict waiting by local buses.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Transport what reports he has received from the Civil Aviation Authority concerning radar, radio and telephone problems at air traffic control centres in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These matters fall within the day-to-day management responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority and it does not therefore make such reports to my right hon. Friend as a matter of routine. He is informed of major failures in the system. Improved reliability of equipment may sometimes form part of the justification for investment proposals which require his approval.

Road Humps

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of relevant applications received by his Department, to install road humps, by each local authority in England; how many have been approved; and what steps he is taking to encourage the use of these devices.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have recently issued a leaflet on speed control humps to local authorities to help them assess where these might be appropriate and to advise them on technical aspects. It is for local authorities to decide where local circumstances make their use desirable. The Department does not approve or monitor individual installations of speed control humps or other local authority road and traffic measures.

M20 (Hollingbourne to Ashford)

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to let the main contract for the Hollingbourne to Ashford section of the M20 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Subject to the satisfactory completion of the remaining statutory procedures, we plan to let two contracts in the spring and summer next year for completion at about the same time in late 1990.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Noise)

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport what research is currently being undertaken by his Department with a view to reducing noise made by heavy goods vehicles with respect to (a) bodies, (b) engines (c) tyres and (d) transmissions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The quiet heavy vehicle (QHV90) project—a joint Government and industry initiative to research and develop methods of quietening heavy goods vehicles—should be virtually completed during 1988. During this programme a range of noise reduction measures have been examined, but not tyre noise. Trials of improved road surfaces, aimed at meeting a number of criteria including reduced tyre noise, are continuing.

Shipping Registers (British Dependent Territories)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether any review of the status of British dependent territory shipping registers has taken place since January 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Proposals on the British dependent territory shipping registers were published in the consultative document "Proposals for Legislation on Ship Registration and Other Matters" issued by my Department in March 1984. The Merchant Shipping Bill, introduced in the other place on 29 October, by my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport carries forward these proposals, modified in the light of comments made on the consultative document and of subsequent developments. The White Paper "Merchant Shipping: Legislative Proposals" (Cm. 239) published on 30 October gives further background.

Research Specialists

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total number of operational research specialists in his Department, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Four currently. The information is not available for previous years.

Transport Infrastructure Improvements

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is considering any proposals for making joint applications with other European Community member states for financial assistance from the European Community for transport infrastructure improvements of mutual benefit to both the United Kingdom and the other member states.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

M40 (Progress)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement regarding progress in completing the M40 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are making good progress. Both contracts for the Warwick section are already under construction and all five contracts for the Banbury and Gaydon sections should be under way by mid-1988. A public inquiry is currently in progress into the remaining, Waterstock-Wendlebury, section. Subject to the completion of statutory procedures, we hope to begin work on this section in 1989 and to complete it during 1991.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are at present being undertaken to extend the length of electrified railway track in England and Wales; and in which British Rail regions.

Mr. David Mitchell: Work is currently under way on five projects:

	Region
Bournemouth-Weymouth	Southern
North London Line	Eastern
East Coast Main Line	Anglian/ Eastern/ Scottish
Royston-Cambridge	Anglia
Watford-St. Albans	London

A further 15 projects have been completed since 1979.

British Rail (Privatisation)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with British Rail on the privatisation of passenger services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: None. The Government's policy towards the railways was set out in the letter on objectives sent to Sir Robert Reid in October 1986.

Skips

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish statistics showing the number of injuries and accidents which involve skips which are located on public highways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The presence of skips is not recorded on road accident reports. The information requested is therefore not available.

Airports (Financial Assistance)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Transport which airports have received financial assistance from Her Majesty's Government in each of the last three years; in what form; and what was the value of the assistance in each case.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following is the information:

Airport and Year	Form of assitance	Value £'000s
Belfast (Aldergrove)
1984-85	Security grant	604
1985-86	Security grant	655
	Airport development grant	833
1988-87	Security grant	680
Birmingham
1984-85	Airport development grant (under the terms of the now expired municipalisation agreement)	3,134
Liverpool
1984-85	Urban programme grants	n/a
1985-86	Urban programme grants	n/a
1986-87	Urban programme grants	n/a
St. Mary's (I.of S.)
1984-85	Assistance in respect of losses following I. of S. assumption of airport management from DTI	25
1985-86		60
Scottish Highlands and Islands
1984-85	Assistance in respect of losses at eight Highlands and Islands aerodromes	3,364
1985-86		3,251
1986-87		2,896

n/a Not readily available.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Transport what financial assistance is available for airports accepting scheduled or non-scheduled traffic from (a) Her Majesty's Government and (b) the European Economic Community; and what criteria are used in determining elegibility for such assistance.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Government financial assistance is not generally available, but some airports might be eligible for consideration under the following specific schemes:

(a) Urban programme grants. Available for inner city projects within designated areas to tackle problems of unemployment and social need.

(b) Security grants. Northern Ireland only. Compensation for additional security measures provided at Belfast international (Aldergrove).

(c) Scottish Development Department assistance to Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd. (a subsidiary of the Civil Aviation Authority) in respect of losses incurred at its eight aerodromes (Benbecula, Inverness, Islay, Kirkwall, Stornoway, Sumburgh, Tiree and Wick).

(d) European regional development fund. Available to projects in assisted areas designated by the Department of Trade and Industry, or serving an assisted area in such a way as to assist in the regeneration of its economy.

Airports (Civil Traffic)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he will list each airport in the United Kingdom which accepts non-scheduled civil or scheduled civil airline traffic;

(2) whether he will list each airport in the United Kingdom which accepts scheduled airline traffic.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Under article 71 of the Air Navigation Order 1985, most aircraft involved in scheduled or non-scheduled public transport of passengers in the United Kingdom are required to use an aerodrome licensed by the Civil Aviation Authority, a Government aerodrome, or one owned or managed by the authority. I am sending the hon. Member a list of such aerodromes, marked to show those from which scheduled services operated in October 1987. Copies will be placed in the Library. Information is not readily available to distinguish which aerodromes accept non-scheduled traffic.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will place in the Library the text of the undertaking given by British Rail to Eurotunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The agreement on payments to be made by British Rail and SNCF for use of the Channel tunnel is a commercial matter between the Railways and Eurotunnel.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport when, and in what manner, he gave permission to British Rail to guarantee payments to Eurotunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: It was entirely the Railways' decision to agree to make regular minimum payments to Eurotunnel each year once the Channel tunnel has opened in return for entitlement to use 50 per cent. of the tunnel's capacity. The Government were however, kept informed of progress on those negotiations, and were satisfied that British Rail did not go beyond what it considered would be commercially justifiable and that thus there was no question of the treaty or section 42 of the Channel Tunnel Act being contravened.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what conditions have been placed by the international banks on the granting of £5,000 million loans to Eurotunnel; and if in particular they are conditional on the undertaking given by British Rail and the loan facility provided by the European Investment Bank, respectively.

Mr. David Mitchell: The conditions placed by the international banks on the granting of credit facilities of £5,000,000,000 to Eurotunnel are a matter for the banks themselves.

Newark Bypass

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the tenderers for the Newark bypass whose quotations he has rejected and (b) the tender figures offered by each of them.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The firms, in alphabetical order, were:

Balfour Beatty Ltd.
Cementation Construction Ltd.
Costain Civil Engineering Ltd.
Fairclough Civil Engineering Ltd.
Alfred McAlpine Construction Ltd.
John Mowlem & Co. Plc.
Wimpey Construction UK Ltd.

It is the Department's policy not publicly to attribute unsuccessful tender prices to the firms that offered them. The prices, in ascending order, were:

£34,977,331·47
£35,224,724·00
£35,786,402·79
£35,817,341·72
£36,329,677·07
£36,801,616·86
£37,449,317·20

Public Transport (Workers)

Mr. Morley asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many workers were employed within the public transport industry in (a) 1985 and (b) 1986.

Mr. Major: I have been asked to reply.

Numbers in thousands were as follows:

	Mid year 1985	Mid year 1986
Public sector transport	397	383

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

New Zealand

Mr. David Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to increase trade between the United Kingdom and New Zealand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: New Zealand is an important trading partner. The British Overseas Trade Board actively encourages United Kingdom companies to export to the market, and has a wide range of services to assist them. I visited New Zealand myself in May 1986 in order to promote United Kingdom exports and the BOTB proposes to support 15 trade missions to that country in 1988-89.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Steinberg asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce legislation to require manufacturers of aerosols to state on the can whether the product contains chlorofluorocarbons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are taking steps to implement the Montreal protocol for the protection of the ozone layer, which will control the future production and use of chlorofluorocarbons. I see no need for additional measures regarding the labelling of aerosols. Individual manufacturers are free to indicate the contents of these canisters if they so wish: doubtless they will consider such action should there be any perceptible consumer preference.

Regional Aid

Mr. McLeish asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was his Department's expenditure on regional aid to industry in each of the English regions, Scotland and Wales in the last year for which full figures are available and for each year since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: The figures for my Department's spend on regional aid to industry in each of the English regions, Scotland and Wales for the years 1979-80 to 1986-87 are as follows:

Area	1979-80 £ million	1980-81 £ million	1981-82 £ million	1982-83 £ million	1983-84 £ million	1984-85 £ million	1985-86 £ million	1986-87 £ million
North East	117·8	115·3	130·4	111·2	82·6	76·2	62·0	108·3
North West	98·1	143·0	194·1	152·7	130·7	121·8	96·3	132·9
Yorkshire and Humberside	28·3	45·3	54·2	47·0	32·3	36·5	32·5	37·1
East Midlands	3·3	3·8	8·2	13·0	16·9	10·2	8·3	10·6
West Midlands	—	—	—	—	—	—	5·5	9·9
South West	7·7	11·0	12·0	13·7	9·8	11·6	10·9	20·6
Scotland	71·0	114·1	144·2	288·2	144·3	72·0	2·1	0·6
Wales	63·8	106·0	123·6	124·8	73·3	58·6	1·6	0·9
Great Britain	390·0	538·5	666·7	750·6	489·9	386·9	219·2	320·9

Notes:

These figures cover regional development grants and regional selective assistance industrial and training grants. All figures are gross, before deducting domestic and European Community receipts.

The figures exclude expenditure on the provision of land and buildings through the English Industrial Estates Corporation, the exchange risk guarantee scheme and business improvement services as it is not possible to provide a breakdown of these items by English region.

In November 1984 responsibility for RDG expenditure in Scotland and Wales was transferred to the Scottish and Welsh Offices. DTI expenditure figures for 1984-85 and, more particularly, the two subsequent years are therefore not comparable with those for earlier years.

Nearly all expenditure on regional aid to industry in Scotland and Wales is now the responsibility of the Scottish and Welsh Offices respectively.

Lonrho plc

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to complete his consideration of representations in relation to a possible breach by Lonrho plc of sections 204 to 206 of the Companies Act 1985 in relation to share dealings in House of Fraser plc during the period from the date of the inspector's interim report into share dealings in House of Fraser to the date of its acquisition by Al Fayed Investment and Trust (UK) Ltd;

(2) when he expects to complete his consideration of representations in relation to a possible breach of section 231 of the Companies Act 1985 by Lonrho plc in relation to its Liechtenstein subsidiaries Blorg and Contango.

Mr. Maude: The representations have been considered and my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State is about to write to my hon. Friend and other interested parties on this matter.

Guinness plc

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the inspectors appointed to investigate the affairs and membership of Guinness plc to report.

Mr. Maude: The investigation continues, but I am unable to say when a report will be received

House of Fraser plc

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the inspectors appointed to investigate the affairs of House of Fraser Holdings plc to report.

Mr. Maude: The inspectors are pressing ahead with their investigation as quickly as possible, but I cannot say when their report will be received.

British Caledonian

Mr. Madel asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from consumer organisations on the proposed take-over of British Caledonian by British Airways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend has received a number of representations from organisations representing the interests of consumers. These have expressed a range of views. During the course of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigation into the proposal those wishing to make representations have been directed to the commission.

Dumping

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, to assist British importers, he will seek to establish for the European Economic Commission its definition of dumping, with particular reference to (a) the cost of production and (b) the price at which the goods concerned are ruled in their domestic market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The definition of dumping used by the European Commission is based on article VI of the GATT and is incorporated in the Community anti-dumping legislation — regulation (EEC) No. 2176/84. Dumping can be established by various methods including the use of domestic prices or cost of production, depending on the circumstances of the case. United Kingdom importers can obtain guidance on all anti-dumping matters from my Department's unfair trade unit.

Economic League

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to the number of companies which declare donations to the Economic League in their returns to Companies House under the Companies Acts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Some of the individual accounts submitted to the Registrar of Companies each year may contain details of such donations by companies. These accounts are available for public inspection. However, the Department of Trade and Industry does not carry out any analysis which would provide the information requested.

Cash Limits and Running Costs

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any changes will be made to the Department of Trade and Industry's cash limits or running costs for 1987-88.

Mr. Butcher: The cash limit of class V, vote 2 (support for industry) will be reduced by £7 million from £471·249 million to £464·249 million. This change reflects forecast reduced requirements for the innovation programme.

The running cost limit of the Department of Trade and Industry is reduced by £399,000 from £275·771 million to £275·372 million. This reduction reflects the net effect of the reclassification out of running costs of the cost of external inspections under the Companies Act 1985 and the transfer of provision from the Department of Employment for staff in the inner cities unit and the enterprise and deregulation unit.

PRIME MINISTER

Flecknoe

Q17. Mr. Pawsey asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Flecknoe.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Overseas Visits

Q18. Mr. Grocott asked the Prime Minister how many official overseas visits she has made since 1979; and what has been the total cost.

The Prime Minister: I have made 95 official overseas visits since 1979. The total cost to date is £2,987,000.

EC Budget

Q24. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will submit proposals to the next meeting of the European Council designed to reform EEC spending within the current legal limits of expenditure; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The European Council in December will discuss the future financing of the Community, including proposals to improve budget discipline and management. I intend to make clear, as I did at the last European Council, that there must be agreement on effective and binding control over Community spending before the question of any changes to the current limit on resources can be considered.

Accountability

Q33. Mr. Allen asked the Prime Minister what representations she has received about her accountability to the House through Prime Minister's questions.

The Prime Minister: None, as far as I am aware.

North-West

Q52. Mr. Butler asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit the north-west.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

European Space Agency

Q58. Sir Geoffrey Pattie asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit the headquarters of the European Space Agency in Paris.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Inverclyde (Enterprise Zone)

Q73. Dr. Godman asked the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with the co-ordination between the Scottish Office and the Department of Trade and Industry about the creation of an enterprise zone in Inverclyde.

The Prime Minister: The case for an enterprise zone in Inverclyde remains under consideration, but, as my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has already indicated, after consultation with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, the Minister primarily responsible, no decision can be taken until the findings on the current evaluation of the enterprise zone experiment have been fully considered.

EC (Internal Market)

Q77. Mr. Cryer asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the development of the internal market in the EEC.

The Prime Minister: The Single European Act (SEA), which was before Parliament when it passed the European Communities (Amendment) Act, which received Royal Assent on 6 November 1986, writes into the treaty of Rome a commitment to adopt measures with the aim of completing the single market by 1992.

More than 100 individual measures have been agreed towards that goal during the past two years, including 48 during the United Kingdom presidency last year. Priority areas for decisions by the end of 1988 identified by the European Council meeting in Brussels last June include public purchasing, technical barriers under the Community's new approach to harmonisation, insurance, freedom of establishment for the professions and liberalisation of capital movements.

Mr. Charles Powell

Q87. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister when Mr. Charles Powell was promoted to the grade of under-secretary of state at the Foreign Office; at what age; what new functions and responsibilities he has assumed; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Powell was promoted to the senior grade of the Diplomatic Service with effect from 1 May this year, while in his present post.

Vancouver Summit

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the Commonwealth meeting in Vancouver and, in particular, of the progress made in friendship, mutal respect and community of aims and interests between the member countries.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement I made on Thursday 22 October 1987 at columns 921-22.

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister what was the source of the figures quoted by the British delegation in the recent Vancouver meeting of the commonwealth, regarding trade between Canada and South Africa.

The Prime Minister: The figures quoted were taken from the International Monetary Fund's "Direction of Trade Statistics" for 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister what representations she received from the South African Government regarding her intervention on the issue of sanctions, during the Vancouver Commonwealth meeting; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: None.

Storm Damage

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Prime Minister what additional financial resources have been made available to those who suffered from the severe storms and flood damage during the month of October in (a) southern England, (b) Wales and (c) Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the statements made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, and by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales on 21 October 1987.

In addition, the European Commission has offered £210,000 to provide assistance to those affected by the storm damage in England; and £140,000 for those affected by flooding in Wales and Northern Ireland. Discussions are being held urgently between the Government and the Commission on the distribution of this money.

In certain circumstances payments may also be available under existing social security regulations.

Sir Philip Woodfield

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister what is the salary that will be paid to Sir Philip Woodfield as a staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services; and what are the terms of his employment.

The Prime Minister: The staff counsellor will receive an annual retainer of £5,000 and a daily fee of £100, and will be reimbursed for any expenses necessarily incurred in the course of his duties. These payments are non-pensionable.

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister if authority will be extended to Sir Philip Woodfield to look into allegations of abuses by the security services made by those outside the security service.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister what accommodation, office and secretarial facilities and by which Government Department, will be provided to Sir Philip Woodfield as staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services.

The Prime Minister: The staff counsellor will have the use of an office and such facilities as he requires in the Cabinet Office.

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister from which vote and sub-head the salary and expenses of Sir Philip Woodfield as staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services will be paid.

The Prime Minister: All costs will be paid from Other Services (Cabinet Office) (Class XX, vote 2) sub-head A1.

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister if she will arrange for all or part of the reports of the staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services to be placed in the Library; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

SS Titanic

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister if she will take steps through international agencies to protect from further exploration the site of the SS Titanic.

The Prime Minister: I have every sympathy with those who do not wish the Titanic to be further disturbed by salvage operation. However, any action agreed through international agencies would be unlikely to be effective because it would be legally binding only in states which chose to be party to it.

Public Money (Allocations)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister what is the total overall identifiable allocation of public money made by the Government since 1979 to (a) Glasgow, (b) Bristol, (c) Lambeth, (d) Newcastle, (e) Hammersmith, (f) Cardiff, (g) Haringey, (h) Southampton, (i) Leicester, (j) Leeds, (k) Wandsworth, (l) Belfast and (m) Northampton (i) in total, (ii) per person, (iii) per unemployed person, (iv) per unemployed person aged under 21 years and (v) per retirement pensioner in each named district; and if she will also express these figures at 1987 prices.

The Prime Minister: Apart from expenditure which is the responsibility of the territorial departments, most public expenditure is planned on a national basis and it is not possible to identify separately expenditure allocated to particular areas.

Audit Commission Fees

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Prime Minister what information she has as to the margin by which the increase in audit fees proposed by the Audit Commission exceeds the current rate of inflation.

The Prime Minister: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. I understand, however, that the Audit Commission proposes an overall fee increase of 6·6 per cent. for the year beginning 1 November 1987. The rise in the retail prices index for the 12 months to September was 4·2 per cent.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Prime Minister if she will request the Secretary of State for the Environment to exercise his powers under section 21(7) of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 to make regulations prescribing a scale of audit fees which embodies an increase lower than the 6·5 per cent. rise proposed by the Audit Commission; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. Under the Local Government Finance Act 1982 it is for him to consider whether it is necessary or desirable to prescribe a scale of fees in place of the scale prescribed by the Audit Commission.

Engagements

Mr. McAllion asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 November.

Mr. Alton asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 November.

Mr. Fearn asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 November.

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

ENERGY

Coal Industry

Mr. Cummings asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will indicate, area by area, the number of British Coal houses sold to financial institutions and the revenue gained from such sales;

(2) if he will indicate the costs attributed to Dawdon, Murton, Vane Tempest and Easington collieries for transporting coal and minerals by road transport and by British Rail;

(3) if he will indicate the annual costs of transporting miners in the north-east to and from work;

(4) what was the level of capital investment in the deep mines of (a) Murton, (b) Dawdon, (c) Vane Tempest and (d) Easington during the year 1986-87; and what is the projected investment during the year 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These are matters for the British Coal Corporation. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Scottish Coalfields

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will make a statement on British Coal's proposals to develop the townhead coal reserves near Ponfeigh in the Clydesdale constituency;

(2) if he will give details of capital investment figures for the Scottish coalfields for the years 1988 to 1991;

(3) if he will give details of capital investment in the Scottish coalfields for opencast development for years 1988 to 1991;

(4) if he will give details as to the capital cost of developing the Dalguhandy coal site in the Clydesdale constituency.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a management matter for the British Coal Corporation. I shall ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to ensure that no private licence to develop opencast mining will be granted outside existing legislation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Under existing legislation the British Coal Corporation is responsible for the granting of licences for private opencast mining operations.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give assurances that his proposals for the privatisation of the electricity industry do not result in increased costs to the consumer.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Our proposals for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry will be designed to increase the efficiency of the industry, for the benefit of consumers.

WALES

Water

Mr. Alan W. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what information he has on the total volume of water in Llyn Brianne (a) on the first day of the month for every month during the current year and (b) day by day for every day during October;

(2) what information he has on the total volume of water that flowed from 12 noon Sunday 18 October to 12 noon Monday 19 October (a) from the Llyn Brianne reservoir and (b) downstream through the River Towy in Carmarthen;

(3) what information he has on the catchment area in square kilometres of (a) Llyn Brianne reservoir, (b) the River Towy above Glanrhyd, Llanwarda, and (c) the River Towy above Carmathen bridge;

(4) what information he has on how much water in cubic metres per hour was discharged from Llyn Brianne hour by hour from 12 noon on Sunday 18 October to 12 noon on Monday 19 October.

Mr. Grist: These are matters for the Welsh water authority and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Alan W. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the capacity in millions of cu m of the Llyn Brianne reservoir.

Mr. Grist: The capacity of the Llyn Brianne reservoir is 60·39 million cu m.

Cwmbran Development Corporation

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the chairman and members of the board of Cwbran development corporation to discuss the effects of that body's wind-up in 1988 on the local community.

Mr. Peter Walker: The board of Cwbran development corporation has not asked for such a discussion and I would not expect it to do so. The effects on the local community of the winding-up of the corporation are for consideration by the local authorities and other bodies concerned with the prosperity of Cwbran.

Cancer Screening

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to introduce a comprehensive scheme of screening for breast cancer among women aged below 50 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The breast screening programming which is currently being planned for Wales will be aimed at women aged 50 to 64. This is in accordance with the advice of a working group chaired by Professor Sir Patrick Forest, which concluded that the effectiveness of screening has so far been demonstrated only for women aged 50 and over. There are accordingly no plans at present to introduce breast screening for women below this age.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales how the existing laboratories for the testing of cervical cancer are distributed in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The distribution of existing NHS laboratories used for cervical cytology in Wales is as follows:

District health authority	Hospital
Clwyd	Ysbyty Glan Clwyd
	Ysbyty Wrecsam Maelor
East Dyfed	Bronglais
	West Wales General
	Llanelli General
Gwent	Royal Gwent
	Nevill Hall
Gwynedd	Ysbyty Gwynedd
Mid Glamorgan	Princess of Wales
	East Glamorgan
	Prince Charles
	St Davids
South Glamorgan	St Davids
West Glamorgan	Morriston
	Singleton
	Neath

Cervical smears taken in Pembrokeshire and Powys are tested in laboratories in neighbouring district health authorities.

Education Reform

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the implications and effects of the proposals in Government consultation and financial delegation documents on the national curriculum, upon physical education, including extra-curricular activity in the schools of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Government recognise the importance of sport and physical education for children and for this reason the consultation document on the national curriculum proposes including it as a foundation subject.

The proposals for financial delegation do not have any direct impact upon physical education, although the consultation document recognises the need to make appropriate arrangements for the use of community facilities in schools.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had on the national curriculum and financial delegation with district and county councils concerning physical education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Copies of the consultation documents on the national curriculum and financial delegation were sent to the Welsh Counties Committee, the Committee of Welsh District Councils and to individual county councils. My right hon. Friend and I have discussed them with the Welsh Joint Education Committee and the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance, and our officials have held a series of meetings with interested bodies. Consultation responses covered the whole range of issues raised and only one county council made any reference to the position of physical education.

Opencast Mining, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has had discussions with the chairman of British Coal concerning the Opencast Executive's proposals to mine opencast coal on agricultural land adjacent to residential properties at Cheapside, Ewloe, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will initiate an inquiry into the impact in Clwyd of opencast mining operations upon local communities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No. In view of my right hon. Friend's statutory responsibility to give impartial consideration to individual applications and appeals in relation to opencast coal mining, it would not be appropriate for me to set up such an inquiry.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will receive a deputation from Cheapside, Clwyd residents about the proposals of the Opencast Executive; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will visit Cheapside, Clwyd, and meet on site representatives of residents, the community, district and county councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No. The Opencast Executive has appealed to my right hon. Friend against the refusal of Clwyd county council to grant planning permission for opencast coal mining at Cheapside, Clwyd. Arrangements are being made for a public local inquiry to be held into the appeal and, in view of this, it would not be appropriate for my right hon. Friend to visit the appeal site or to meet local representatives to discuss the proposed development.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Zimbabwe (Railways)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will open talks with the Government of Zimbabwe, with a view to providing new locomotives and rolling stock for the Zimbabwe national railways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: We are ready to consider assistance for the national railways of Zimbabwe. However, when Zimbabwean and British officials met in September to discuss priorities in the allocation of British aid, the Zimbabweans did not put forward the NRZ as an area for our involvement.

Rain Forests

Mr. Jack asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to contribute to international attempts being made to stop the destruction of the world's rain forests.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government play an active part in the Food and Agriculture Organisation's tropical forestry action plan, which is co-ordinating donor action on the problem of deforestation. The Overseas Development Administration participates in missions arranged under the auspices of the action plan to discuss the need for conservation with the Governments of affected developing countries and their requirements for institutional and financial support. This has led to the funding of projects under the British bilateral aid programme, in which aid for forestry projects has increased threefold over the last five years.

The Government also ratified the international tropical timber agreement in 1984 and are a member of the related Tropical Timber Organisation, which was established in 1986. One of the principal aims of this organisation is to encourage trade in tropical hardwoods on the basis of sustainable and renewable resources.

Food Aid

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if measures have been taken to ensure that Third world countries do not receive food aid from the European Economic Community which is damaged or totally unfit for human consumption.

Mr. Chris Patten: Yes. The Council of Ministers agreed a new regulation governing EC food aid during the British presidency in December 1986. A subsequent Commission regulation establishing a new system for the mobilisation of food aid, which includes provisions for quality control, became effective in July 1987.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urgently demand a review of the way in which staff at the European Commission discharge their duties of quality and price control of food distributed either commercially or as aid.

Mr. Chris Patten: No. The position on food aid is described in my answer to the hon. Member's previous question.

We are in touch with the Commission about the tightening up of the management of intervention stocks and we strongly support their efforts, and those of the Court of Auditors and the Budgetary Control Committee of the European Parliament, in this regard.

Jordan

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans to offer further aid to Jordan in support of its five-year plan.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have offered a new loan of £5 million, on concessionary terms and tied to the provision of British goods and services, as a further contribution to the Jordan five-year plan. The finance will be spent on capital projects to be agreed between our two Governments.

TRANSPORT

Driving Tests

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current average waiting time for a driving test at each testing centre in West Yorkshire, compared with the national average waiting time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Current waiting times in West Yorkshire are:

Test centre	Waiting time (weeks)
Bradford—Wibsey	17
—Eccleshill	10
—Heaton	17
Halifax	12
Heckmondwike	15
Horsforth	16
Huddersfield	16
Keighley	5
Leeds—Harehills	20
—Crossgates	19
Pontefract	27
Wakefield	19

The national average waiting time is 14 weeks.

Skips

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current regulations regarding proper lighting on skips left on the public highway; who is responsible for ensuring the adequacy of such lighting; and if he has any plans to alter the present arrangements.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Section 139 of the Highways Act 1980 requires the owner of a skip deposited on the highway to ensure that the skip is properly lighted during the hours of darkness. The highway authority may impose conditions as to the manner in which the skip is to be lighted or guarded when granting permission for it to be deposited on the highway. Responsibility for ensuring that the skip is lit in accordance with any conditions imposed rests on the owner. It is a defence against a charge in respect of a lighting offence to prove that the offence was due to the act or default of another person and that the owner took all reasonable precautions to avoid the commission of the offence. In addition to lighting, the Builders Skips (Markings) Regulations 1984 require the owner of the skip to fit red and yellow fluorescent and reflective markings to the ends of the skip. There are no plans to alter the present arrangements.

Seafarers (Criminal Records)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether seafarers convicted while at sea for merchant shipping offences, but upon whom no penalty is imposed, acquire a criminal record.

Mr. David Mitchell: The powers have been repealed under which a ship's master could impose a financial penalty on a seafarer who committed a disciplinary offence. A person now charged with any offence under the Merchant Shipping Acts can be tried only in the courts. Any penalties then imposed would constitute a criminal record. A master now can impose only such penalties as are within the scope of whatever industrial agreement is relevant. Such penalties would not constitute a criminal record.

M40 (Extension)

Mr. Anthony Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's plan for the extension of the M40 from Oxford to Birmingham; and whether it will be constricted to three traffic lanes along its entire length.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is building the M40 north of Wendlebury to dual three-lane standard. Between Waterstock and Wendlebury, where traffic flows are forecast to be much lower, the Department's plans are for dual two-lane standard, but with the scheme designed to accommodate provision of third lanes when warranted by traffic levels.

Motorway Roadworks

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport what additional action he is taking to reduce accidents by vehicles passing through roadworks on the motorway network.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is discussing with the police the use of mandatory speed limits at contraflow sites.

We are about to start a trial of a new system of closer spaced matrix signals, which automatically detects stationary or slow moving traffic, on a 50-mile stretch of the M1.

We are evaluating the video monitoring of major roadworks to allow earlier detection and warning of breakdowns and accidents.

The Transport and Road Research Laboratory has recently commissioned a study of accidents at contraflows.

We shall implement further improvements in the design of contraflow systems in the light of the findings of this study.

M1 Motorway

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of the M1 are now being repaired; how many miles are reduced to single lane; how many miles to double lane; how many miles are subject to reduced speed controls on the approaches to road works; what was the comparable situation (a) six months ago, (b) a year ago, (c) two years ago, (d) three years ago; what are the estimated completion dates for all current road works; in how many cases completion dates are likely to over-run; and what new road works are scheduled to take place in the next (i) six months, (ii) the next year and (iii) the next two years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information is readily available only for major maintenance schemes. No stretch is currently reduced to a single lane because of major maintenance work. Eighteen miles are reduced to two lanes at times and subject to temporary speed limits. In addition, variable matrix speed signals are displayed as the need arises.

Comparable information for previous periods is not available. The number of major maintenance schemes at each of the dates requested was as follows:

	Number
5 May 1987	0
5 November 1986	4
5 November 1985	1
5 November 1984	0

Such schemes typically involved a two-lane contraflow not exceeding two and a half miles with advisory speed limits.

The estimated completion dates for current major maintenance schemes are as follows:

J39-40	December 1987
J14-15	*5 November 1987
J9-10	13 November 1987

*Note: end of contraflow

None of these schemes is expected to over-run

New major maintenance schemes are scheduled to take place in the following locations during the remainder of this financial year:

Bedfordshire	J12-13
Northamptonshire	J16-17
Leicestershire	J23

Five major maintenance schemes are provisionally planned for various periods in 1988-89. Further works will take place in future years; the programme for these has not yet been finalised.

Technology and Manning Strategic Planning Committee

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the status and remit of the technology and manning strategic planning committee, what are his intentions regarding its function; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: A strategic policy committee has been established under the aegis of the Merchant Navy training board to develop new training and certification arrangements tailored to the industry's needs in the light of the technology and manning for safe operation research report.

This committee comprises representatives from all sectors of the industry in order that the views of all concerned may be taken into account.

Ferries (Loading Doors)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Transport why the proposed change in the law relating to the closure of cargo loading doors on roll-on roll-off passenger ferries, which provides that criminal offences may be committed, is to be dealt with by means of statutory instruments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Secondary legislation can be enacted more quickly, and imposes less demand on parliamentary time, than primary legislation. Subsection (6)(b) of section 21 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1979 provides that orders made under that section may make contravention of a regulation an offence.

Ferries (Research)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the outcome of his consideration of how best to progress the research effort on roll-on roll-off survivability for which he made £1 million available for further work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: A steering committee of experienced professionals of appropriate backgrounds and interests has been formed to assist and advise the Department in the management of this research programme. The first meeting of this committee was held on 30 October and a further meeting has been arranged.

Ships (Safety)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether any research is to be conducted into the relationship between fatigue and manning, in the light of increased pressure from shipowners for the single night look-out concept; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is the intention to take up recommendation 9 of the technology and manning for safe ship operation research project and set up a new research project into the employment of bridge lookouts at night.

Ship Survey

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are his intentions regarding the retention of responsibility for ship survey within the Surveyor General's organisation and marine survey section (a) in respect of the United Kingdom register and (b) in respect of registers of dependent territories.

Mr. David Mitchell: The arrangements under which classification societies undertake certain marine survey work on United Kingdom ships on behalf of the Department are kept under regular review. Plans are in hand for the transfer of classification societies of the survey and certification of submersible craft, and the assessment of impact stability of mobile offshore drilling units. There are no plans for any further changes at present.

As regards ships registered in the dependent territories, the Department's surveyors undertake certain surveys, on a repayment basis, depending on the capacity of the administrations in question.

Spirit Class Vessels (Officers)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimate of his Department concerning likely deck officer reductions on Spirit class vessels, involving the removal of second officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 4 November 1987]: Provided it complies with the Merchant Shipping (Certification of Deck Officers) Regulations, deck officer manning is the responsibility of the owner. The manning proposed for the Spirit class vessels complies with those regulations. It also conforms with the view of the court of formal investigation into the loss of the Herald of Free Enterprise.

Breath Tests

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce either random or targeted breath tests.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

The courts have held that a constable may, under section 159 of the Road Traffic Act 1972, stop vehicles at random in order to decide whether there are grounds for requiring a sample of breath for testing. A sample may be required where the constable has reasonable cause to suspect that the motorist has alcohol in his body; that he has committed a traffic offence while the vehicle was moving; or that he has been involved in an accident. The Association of Chief Police Officers has stated that these powers are sufficient to allow the law to be enforced effectively, and the Government have no plans to amend the legislation. The use made of these powers is a matter for individual chief officers of police.

Sealink Ferry (Overloading)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will order an immediate inquiry into the recent overloading of a Sealink ferry at Boulogne; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: This incident has been investigated by one of my Department's marine surveyors. His report has been forwarded to the Treasury Solicitor, who is considering the possibility of prosecutions.

Arising out of a recommendation of the court of formal investigation into the loss of the Herald of Free Enterprise, my Department has now circulated for consultation a draft statutory instrument which would make boarding cards for these short-haul ferries mandatory. A copy of this has been placed in the Library.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Postgraduate Certificate of Education Courses

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the recruitment figures for each of the postgraduate certificate of education courses for 1987-88.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will inform Parliament of the principal findings of the Department of Education and Science's survey of recruitment to initial teacher training, including PGCE, courses once these are available.

Teachers (Retraining)

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of the take-up of places in Her Majesty's Government's specially funded programme allowing qualified teachers to retrain as teachers of mathematics, physics or technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: This programme is run by the University Grants Committee (UGC) and the National Advisory Body for local authority higher education (NAB). No take-up figures are available for the UGC share of the programme. Returns from the NAB suggest that recruitment under this initiative for retraining and updating courses is running at about 40 per cent. This compares with an encouraging 89 per cent. for initial teacher training places.

From April 1988, in time for the start of the first full year of courses under the initiative, the Government have ring-fenced grant aid for £4 million of expenditure by local education authorities on secondments of existing teachers to long retraining courses. This should mitigate the secondment funding difficulties associated with the changeover from the old pooling arrangements to the new training grants scheme that have been one of the causes of low take-up of places this year.

Playing Fields

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance is given by his Department to local authorities about the minimum acreage of playing fields for primary, middle and upper schools.

Mr. Dunn: The requirements for the provision of playing fields for maintained schools are set out in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981. The areas required for individual schools are determined by the number and age of the pupils. Additional guidance on the quantity and quality of provision is offered in the Department's building bulletin No. 28, "Playing Fields and Hard Surface Areas".

Grammar Schools

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to which local education authorities are currently offering less favourable treatment to girls in the provision of grammar schools; and if he will give the names of grammar schools in each local education authority concerned as well as the number of places offered to (i) girls and (ii) boys in each of the schools mentioned.

Mr. Dunn: No information is available centrally as to the number of places offered for entry to grammar schools. There were 28 local education authorities in England in January 1987 that had grammar schools of which only Birmingham LEA had more boys' grammar schools than girls'. The number of grammar schools in Birmingham LEA was eight, of which five were boys' schools and three were girls' schools as follows:

Sutton Coldfield Girls' School
Handsworth Grammar School for Boys
Kind Edward VI Aston School
King Edward VI Camp Hill School for Boys
King Edward VI Camp Hill Girls' School
King Edward VI Five Ways School
King Edward VI Handsworth
Bishop Veseys Grammar School

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Blackwood County Court

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Attorney-General if he will make available in the Library correspondence between the Lord Chancellor's Office and Blackwood county court, Gwent, in the case of Webber v. Webber in 1981-82.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's office did not correspond with Blackwood county court in the case of Webber v. Webber in 1981-82. There was correspondence in 1983 consisting of a request for, and a reply giving, factual information which formed the basis of the Lord Chancellor's reply to the hon. Member dated 1 June 1983, which was copied to the court with a formal acknowledgment of the reply.

Conveyancing

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Attorney-General what is the position with regard to the implementation of the provisions of part II of the Administration of Justice Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: As far as the provisions of part II of the Administration of Justice Act 1985 are concerned, the Council for Licensed Conveyancers has been established with the power to issue licences to persons qualified to provide conveyancing services to the public. The first licences have been issued and the council, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, has made certain rules regulating entry to the profession and regulating the conduct of licensed conveyancers generally. Rules to enable the council to permit corporations controlled by licensed conveyancers to provide conveyancing services have not yet been made. It is the Government's intention that all of the provisions contained in part II of the Administration of Justice Act 1985 will be implemented as soon as is practicable.

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Attorney-General what is (a) the number of licensed conveyancers thus far registered with the Council for Licensed Conveyancers and (b) the number of applications made for registration.

The Attorney-General: Applications for licences are dealt with in two stages. The first stage is the giving of notice of intention to apply, and it is at this stage that consideration is given to the question of the applicant's suitability. The second stage is the submission of a formal application. By 31 October a total of 420 notices of intention to apply had been received by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers, of which 158 are currently being considered, and 223 licences have been issued following the receipt of formal applications.

Social Security Commissioners

Mr. John asked the Attorney-General if he will reconsider his decision not to replace the Social Security Commissioner for Wales.

The Attorney-General: The jurisdiction of each of the social security commissioners for Great Britain extends throughout England, Scotland and Wales. Hearings continue to be held in Cardiff, where appropriate, on a regular basis, although the Cardiff office was closed in 1986 for reasons of operational economy. The Lord Chancellor has no plans at present to reopen that office or to base a social security commissioner in Wales.

✓

Mr. John asked the Attorney-General how many social security commissioners there are for (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) the Isle of Man; and if he will set out the criteria for appointment of such commissioners for a geographical area.

The Attorney-General: The jurisdiction of each of the social security commissioners for Great Britain extends throughout England, Scotland and Wales. There are currently two commissioners based in Scotland, but none in Wales. Appointments of commissioners to be based in England, Scotland and Wales are made to the extent justified by the work load arising there. The Lord Chancellor is not responsible for the Isle of Man.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Bermingham asked the Attorney-General what policy the Crown prosecution service has developed in respect of applications for prosecutions costs.

The Attorney-General: [pursuant to his reply, 26 October 1987, c. 13-14:] The policy of the Crown prosecution service is that an application for costs against convicted defendants should be made in all cases, unless in the particular circumstances of an individual case it is apparent that such an application would lack merit or that an order for costs would be impractical.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Attorney-General what policy the Crown prosecution service has developed in respect of prosecution of petty offences.

The Attorney-General [pursuant to his reply, 26 October 1987, c. 13-14]: The general principles applied by the Crown prosecution service when considering the prosecution of any criminal offence are to be found in the code for Crown prosecutors, issued in accordance with section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985.

Having satisfied himself that the evidence is sufficient to justify a prosecution, the Crown prosecutor must go on to consider whether the public interest requires a prosecution. Whilst each case will be assessed in the light of its own particular circumstances, paragraph 8(i) of the code enjoins Crown prosecutors when considering offences, the circumstances of which are not particularly serious, to consider carefully whether the public interest would be better served by a prosecution of some other form of disposal such as, where appropriate, a caution. This applies particularly where the offence is triable on indictment, when Crown prosecutors should also weigh the likely penalty with the likely length and cost of the proceedings.

In deciding whether or not to recommend to the police that a caution might be an appropriate method of disposal, Crown prosecutors will be guided by the criteria set out in Home Office circular 14/1985 on the cautioning of offenders.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Attorney-General what policy the Crown prosecution service has developed in respect of breach proceedings.

The Attorney-General [pursuant to his reply, 26 October 1987, c. 13-14]: As a general rule the Crown prosecution service will not be involved in proceedings for breaches of probation, supervision or community service orders. The exception to this is that the Crown prosecution service has a role in such matters where the breach consists of the commission of a further offence and the proceedings are associated with a prosecution for a criminal offence which the Crown prosecution service is conducting.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Attorney-General what policy the Crown prosecution service has developed in respect of supplying of information to the probation service.

The Attorney-General [pursuant to his reply, 26 October 1987, c. 13-14]: Although the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 does not confer any statutory duty upon the Crown prosecution service to supply information to the probation service, the Crown prosecution service endeavours to assist the probation service wherever possible. The supply of information will be one of the matters which will be discussed at a forthcoming meeting between representatives of the Crown prosecution service, Home Office and the probation service.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Attorney-General what, at the latest date available, was the establishment of lawyers, lawyers' clerks and administrators in each of the 31 areas of the Crown prosecution service.

The Attorney-General [pursuant to his reply, 26 October 1987, c. 13-14]: I take the hon. Gentleman's question to refer to the complement of the relevant categories.

The establishment of lawyers, law clerks and administrators in each of the 31 areas of the Crown prosecution service as at the end of October 1987 is given in the table.

	Establishment 28 October 1987				Staff in post 30 October 1987

Mr. Bermingham asked the Attorney-General what is the estimated annual cost of employing agent lawyers to cover shortages in Crown prosecution staffing.

The Attorney-General [pursuant to his reply, 26 October 1987, c. 13-14]: The cost of employing agent lawyers in magistrates courts in 1987-88 is expected to be some £14 million. Not all of this is attributable to staff shortages. Even if it had been fully staffed throughout the year, the Crown prosecution service would probably have found it cost-effective to spend some £4 million on agent lawyers.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Control

Mr McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy toward the implications for the United Kingdom of the current round of negotiations between the superpowers on the reduction of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Mellor: We warmly welcome the intermediate nuclear force agreement now in prospect. We and our NATO allies regularly assess the level of forces required to maintain our strategy of flexible response and are currently considering the implications of an INF agreement for NATO policy. We look forward to further progress in the talks aimed at achieving a 50 per cent. cut in the strategic offensive weapons of the United States and Soviet Union.

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current arms control negotiations.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) on 21 October.

James Abra

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about James Abra, the Briton held by the Libyan authorities.

Mr. Eggar: There is an appeal outstanding on Mr. Abra's behalf against his sentence of life imprisonment for spying. The appeal may be heard in November. I also understand that Mr. Abra's family lodged an appeal for clemency with the Libyan authorities in August this year.

Western European Union

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards reforms to the institutions and practices of the Western European Union; and what was the outcome of talks in The Hague for resiting the offices in London and Paris in some other capital city of a member state.

Mr. Mellor: Our policy is that Western European Union institutions should be structured to enable the organisation to be an effective forum for joint security consultations between WEU Foreign and Defence Ministers. The Paris agencies should be responsive to council requirements and merged into a single, streamlined unit under one director reporting to the secretary general. The London secretariat should be strengthened so that it can service the council efficiently. Both bodies should be collocated in one city to form an integrated, flexible, and cost-effective unit. Ministers at The Hague agreed that collocation should take place, but did not agree on a site. This question will now be pursued further, with the aim of drawing up detailed recommendations for the spring ministerial meeting.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will detail the current waiting lists for spouses applying to join husbands or wives in Britain at high commissions and embassies in (a) India, (b) Pakistan, (c) Sri Lanka, (d) Kenya, (e) Uganda and (f) Bangladesh.

Mr. Eggar: The table sets out the number of spouses awaiting interview in India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Kenya and Uganda as at 30 September 1987:

Post	Numbers in Queue
New Delhi	320
Bombay	460
Calcutta	No queue in operation
Madras	No queue in operation
Islamabad	965
Karachi	78
Dhaka	1,780
Colombo	No queue in operation
Nairobi	60
Kampala	No queue in operation

HOME DEPARTMENT

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

3. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch or equivalent schemes are currently in operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: There are now over 42,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in operation in England and Wales, three times the number of those known to us 15 months ago. We are greatly encouraged by the increasing willingness and commitment which this shows on the part of the general public to be involved in preventing crime.

Police Establishments

10. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications he is currently considering from police forces in England and Wales requesting an increase in their establishment.

Mr. Hurd: Nineteen police authorities in England and Wales have asked me to approve increases totalling 737 in their establishments in this financial year. I shall be taking decisions on these applications in the light of advice from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary.

48. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with chief constables about further increases in constabulary police establishments.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Police establishment matters are often discussed with chief constables during visits to police forces and on other occasions.

Broadwater Farm Estate

13. Mr. Bernie Grant asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Metropolitan Police Commissioner's current policing policy towards the Broadwater Farm estate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The policing of the Broadwater farm estate is a matter for the Commissioner. I understand from the Commissioner that there has been no change in his policy towards the estate. The area continues to be policed by a dedicated team of officers and the police are always ready to meet representatives of the local community to discuss concerns about policing on the estate.

Knives

17. Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had over proposed legislation to compound further the possession of knives.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During our recent study of the law relating to the possession of knives, we consulted chief officers of police and some trading interests. We also took account of the views of right hon. and hon. Members, other police officers and the public.

24. Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has received to his proposals to control the carrying and possession of knives and other offensive weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government's proposals to strengthen the law on carrying knives in public and to take powers to prohibit the manufacture, sale and importation of specified offensive weapons for which there is no legitimate use seem to have been well received generally.

Juveniles (Custody)

18. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Home Department if he will make a statement on the limitation Her Majesty's Government are taking in replacements for custody for juveniles.

Mr. John Patten: Whilst custody must remain available for the most serious offenders, it is the Government's policy to encourage more use of non-custodial measures for offenders under 21. There has been a positive response to this approach with juvenile offenders under 17, and the Government are considering how the use of such measures might be developed for 17 to 20-year-olds.

53. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to raise the age at which boys are liable to penal custody to that currently applying to girls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Government propose to replace detention centre orders and youth custody sentences with a unified custodial sentence for young offenders. The Criminal Justice Bill has been amended to include the necessary provisions. The new sentence will be available for boys aged 14 and girls aged 15.

Firearms

19. Ms. Primarolo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will change the onus of proof for the possession of firearms in the same way that he proposes for the carrying and possession of knives and other offensive weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As my right hon. Friend said in the debate on firearms in the House on 26 October, at columns 28 to 69, the burden of proof on the carrying of firearms in a public place already falls on the individual concerned. Section 19 of the Firearms Act 1968 makes it an offence for any person, without lawful authority or reasonable excuse (the proof whereof lies on him), to have with him in a public place a loaded shotgun or loaded air weapon, or any other firearm (whether loaded or not) together with ammunition suitable for use in that firearm. To be in possession of firearms an individual must satisfy the requirements for the issue of a certificate.

20. Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further discussions he has had with the Police Federation regarding the tightening of controls over the ownership and use of firearms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have not discussed this matter recently with the Police Federation but my right hon. Friend is very much aware of their views.

28. Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to bring shotguns within the scope of his proposals on the ownership and use of firearms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has already announced that we intend to bring self-loading and pump action shotguns under the same controls as rifles and handguns. We also intend to impose a statutory obligation on shotgun certificate holders to store their weapons securely when they are not being used.

29. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has received to his proposals for the reform of gun controls.

33. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has had to his proposals to tighten controls over the ownership and use of firearms.

61. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding reform of the gun control laws.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Solihull (Mr. Taylor).

31. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to consult those representing rural interests before introducing new firearms legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We recognise the important role that shooting plays in rural communities, both as a sport and, for many people, as a necessary means of vermin control. We have written to a number of organisations representing rural interests to request their views on our proposals. These include the National Farmers Union, the Countryside Commission, the Council for the Protection of Rural England, the Association of County Councils, the Association of District Councils and the British Deer Society.

34. Mr. Illsley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in order to encourage co-operation from firearms users, any future firearms legislation will include proposals to compensate those owners whose firearms would thereby be rendered illegal.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This is one of the matters currently under consideration.

40. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firearm certificates were issued in each of the years 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1986, 12,074 new firearm certificates were issued in England and Wales, compared with 11,663 in 1985 and 11,413 in 1984. The table shows, by police force area, the number of certificates on issue and the number of dealers registered at 31 December 1986. More detailed figures on the issue of firearm and shotgun certificates will be published shortly in a Home Office statistical bulletin.

54. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will summarise the principal conclusions he has drawn from the representation of gun clubs so far received in the preparation for new firearms control legislation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The consensus of opinion expressed by the gun clubs is against most of the proposals we have announced. We believe that, whilst the interest of legitimate shooters must be taken into account, a substantial shift in the balance of firearms law is necessary to meet the needs of public safety.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to introduce a Firearms Bill.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As my right hon. Friend indicated during the recent debate on firearms controls — 26 October 1987, columns 28-69—we hope to be able to announce a comprehensive package of measures on firearm controls by the end of November with a view to introducing a Bill before Christmas.

Nationality

21. Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to extend beyond 31 December the period available for registration as British citizen under the British Nationality Act 1981.

Mr. Renton: We have no plans to do so.

26. Mr. James Marshall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider reducing or withdrawing the requirement under the British Nationality Act 1981 that every adult registering as a British citizen pay a fee of £60 and every family pay a fee of £180.

46. Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reduce or cancel the fee of £60 payable by people seeking to register as British citizens under the provisions of the British Nationality Act 1981 on the grounds of its disincentive effect on poor people.

Mr. Renton: No. This would not be fair to all other applicants who have paid the full fee.

36. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he now proposes to make for those in receipt of state benefits who wish to apply for registration or naturalisation under the Nationality Act 1981.

Mr. Renton: The Government believe that it is right that those who wish to become British citizens should meet the cost of processing their applications and there are no plans to make any exceptions to this general principle.

Mr. Vaz asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total income received by Her Majesty's Government from those persons applying for registration to become British citizens for 1987 (interim), 1986 and 1985.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not available.

Net fee receipts in respect of all applications under the British Nationality Act 1981 (including those for naturalisation as well as registration) were as follows:

Financial year	Receipts
1985-86	£3,269,000
1986-87	£4,241,000
1987-88[1]	£5,120,000

[1] To end October.

Mr. Vaz asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total numbers of persons applying for registration as British citizens pursuant to the British Nationality Act 1981 for 1987 (interim figure), 1986 and 1985.

Mr. Renton: The precise information requested is not available. The following table gives the number of registration applications received in the Home Office for British citizenship, British Overseas citizenship and British subject status.

	Applications received
1985	33,756
1986	37,873
1987[1]	63,000

[1] Estimate to end September.

Mr. Randall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether those people who are eligible to register as British citizens by the 31 December deadline, and fail to do so will (a) lose their current civil rights including their right to vote, (b) lose, as a consequence, their current rights to any social benefit payments and (c) increase their risks of deportation.

Mr. Renton: If people do not apply for registration before the end of the year, their failure to do so will not affect their right to vote, their current rights to social benefit payments or their current immigration position.

Mr. Randall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate what effect the £60 cost of registering as British citizens will have on the number of people failing to register by the 31 December deadline.

Mr. Renton: It is not possible to make any such assessment.

Telephone Tapping

22. Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the latest judicial review of telephone tapping.

Mr. Hurd: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister presented to the House in March this year the first report of the commissioner appointed under section 8 of the Interception of Communications Act 1985 (Cm. 108). The Act requires the interception commissioner to report to my right hon. Friend

"as soon as practicable after the end of each calendar year".

I expect my right hon. Friend to present the report for 1987 to the House in February or March 1988.

Tape Recording

23. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement about the programme of tape recording of interviews with suspects; and how soon this will be available in all police areas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following the completion of field trials in six areas, police forces throughout England and Wales are now making arrangements for the introduction of the tape recording of interviews with suspects. The speed at which tape recording can be introduced within a force area will depend on a number of factors including resource implications for the police and for other agencies in the criminal justice system.

Broadcasting Standards Council

25. Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has drawn up the terms of reference of the Broadcasting Standards Council.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay) on 23 October at column 893. We are currently consulting interested organisations about our plans for the Broadcasting Standards Council, and will announce further details in due course.

Basildon (Courthouse)

27. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the building of a new courthouse in Basildon.

Mr. John Patten: Essex county council is responsible for providing the new magistrates' courthouse, in consultation with the magistrates' courts committee. We set a cost limit for the scheme earlier in the year and authorised Essex county council to go to tender without further reference to the Home Office.

Crime Prevention

30. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has drawn up terms of reference for the proposed national crime prevention organisation.

Mr. John Patten: We are not yet ready to do so formally, but it seems likely that the functions of the new body will include identifying good practice in local crime prevention and ensuring that it is promulgated widely, advising local communities, businesses, voluntary bodies and local authorities on strategies for tackling local crime problems, raising and distributing pump-priming funds for initiatives on local crime prevention and advising both central and local government on local crime prevention issues.

62. Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to announce the composition of the national crime prevention organisation.

Mr. John Patten: We hope to be able to do so before the end of this year.

Licensing Law

32. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received in respect of his proposals to amend the licensing law in England and Wales.

43. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the Bill on the reform of licensing hours; and how many representations have been made to him thereon.

44. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to introduce the Licensing Bill.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Details of the Government's proposals for the reform of the licensing law were published on 4 August and 528 representations relating to the proposals have been received since that date.

The Licensing Bill was introduced in this House on Thursday 29 October.

45. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to ensure that companies owning licensed premises do not require their tenants or managers to maintain opening hours at all periods permitted by law.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This is a matter for negotiation between the parties concerned. I understand that negotiations are in progress and the parties are hopeful that a satisfactory solution will be found.

Gambling Machines

35. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek powers to impose a minimum age limit of 16 years on users of gambling machines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The research announced into this subject on 6 May is now well under way. When we have received the results of that research we shall be in a better position to judge whether it is necessary or desirable to introduce fresh legislation.

Electoral Registration

37. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding improving electoral registration.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received representations in the recent past on three matters:

1. That the autumn canvass for the register should be advertised on television;
2. That people could not vote at the last general election because they had been omitted from the register;
3. That people resident overseas, who would be entitled to vote, found the procedure to be included in the register unduly difficult.

It would be unduly expensive to implement the first suggestion. We are looking, in consultation with the political parties, at the second and third matters to see what changes might be made. We have already taken a range of initiatives to improve the accuracy of the register and we shall continue to work for improvements.

Fresh Start Scheme

38. Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to introduce fresh start into Her Majesty's prison, Maidstone.

Mr. John Patten: We are firmly committed to introducing fresh start at all establishments as soon as possible. Implementation at Maidstone now depends on agreement locally.

Horse Racing

39. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the introduction of horse racing on Sundays.

Mr. John Patten: Provided suitable arrangements are made for betting to take place lawfully, we see no reason to stand in the way of horse racing on Sundays. That is the view we have expressed on the Bill introduced in another place by Lord Wyatt of Weeford and we are following the debate about that Bill and the public debate which has arisen with interest. We have no plans at present to introduce legislation on this subject.

British Broadcasting Corporation

41. Mr. Menzies Campbell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chairman of the board of governors of the British Broadcasting Corporation; and what subjects they discussed.

Mr. Renton: On 29 and 30 September, to discuss the portrayal of violence and sex on television and the independent production initiative respectively.

58. Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chairman of the British Broadcasting Company; and what matters he will raise with him.

Mr. Renton: We will be keeping in close touch with the chairmen of the BBC and the IBA in the coming months over a range of broadcasting policy issues. Topics we have discussed with them in recent weeks include the portrayal of violence and sex on television and the independent production initiative.

Murder (Convictions)

42. Mr. Mullin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the persons whose convictions for murder have subsequently been quashed on appeal or who have otherwise been released before completion of their sentences because of doubts about the safety of the convictions during the period 1979 to the present day.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not readily available in the form requested regarding those who have had their conviction for murder quashed on appeal. However, there have been three cases since 1979 where such convictions were quashed following reference to the Court of Appeal by Home Secretaries under section 17 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968. These are Albert Edward Taylor, conviction quashed on 13 March 1979; Mervyn John Scott Russell, conviction quashed on 6 December 1983; and Geoffrey Mycock, conviction quashed on 20 June 1984. In 1980 David Cooper and Michael McMahon were released early from their life sentences for murder by exercise of the royal prerogative of mercy.

Terrorism

47. Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent evidence he has about the effectiveness of the Prevention of Terrorism Act.

Mr. Hurd: In reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) on 8 April, at column 239, I announced that I had asked Viscount Colville of Culross to carry out a general review of this Act. I hope to be able to place Lord Colville's report before the House shortly.

Heysel Stadium (Trial Costs)

49. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what costs to his Department have arisen as a result of the extradition of the Heysel stadium defendants.

Mr. John Patten: The costs that have fallen on the Home Office relate mainly to the time spent by officials who are employed in the division responsible for extradition. No exceptional costs were involved.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

50. Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners, either convicted or on remand, are currently being held in police cells; and whether industrial action by the Prison Officers Association is still preventing these prisoners' admission into prisons.

Mr. John Patten: On Wednesday 4 November 810 were held in police cells, in England and Wales, most of whom would have been on remand.

Visitors (Residence Applications)

51. Mr. Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the principles he applies when considering applications to remain in the United Kingdom from persons who have continuously been in the United Kingdom for at least 10 years and against whom no deportation order has been made but whose leave to remain has expired.

Mr. Renton: We have recently reviewed our policy on the exercise of discretion to grant leave to remain after lengthy residence in the United Kingdom. Except where the grant of leave would not be in the public interest, a case in which continuous residence exceeds 10 years will be considered on its merits for the grant of indefinite leave to remain. Among the factors to be taken into account are the strength of ties with the United Kingdom and elsewhere, the total length of continuous residence and the proportion of it which has been lawful. In considering possible deportation we have regard to the matters set out in paragraphs 156-159 of the Immigration Rules (HC 169), a copy of which is in the Library.

Teenage Crime

52. Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he proposes to take to combat teenage crime.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have a comprehensive strategy for tackling all forms of crime of which measures to reduce offending by young people are an important part. The police, courts, probation and prison services all have a contribution to make; so have local authorities, social services, schools and voluntary organisations together with parents and responsible citizens. Most counties and large towns now have specific projects aimed at reducing crime, usually with teenage crime as one of the main targets and typically involving co-operation between the relevant services and agencies. The Staffordshire police activity and community enterprise run by the Staffordshire police in my hon. Friend's constituency is one example. These projects are constantly being developed with the Government's encouragement and in many instances financial support. The standing conference on crime prevention will later this month receive reports from working groups which have been examining various aspects of teenage crime; and the national crime prevention organisation, about which we hope to make an announcement before the end of the year, will no doubt make this one of its first priorities.

Conservative Party Conference

55. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received regarding policing costs for the 1987 Conservative party conference.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received representations from the Lancashire county council and police authority and from 14 hon. Members and one member of the House of Lords seeking a special payment from central Government towards the additional policing costs of the 1987 Conservative party conference. We have considered these representations carefully but concluded that we would not be justified in departing from normal police funding arrangements in this case, by which the Government meet the greater part of any additional costs.

Police Recruitment

56. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the objectives and current progress of the review of the police initial recruitment test.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The purpose of the review is to examine the feasibility of replacing the existing PIR test with a new test of the same standard which is directed more accurately to the abilities which police officers need to do their job. The first stage of the review required a job evaluation of the tasks performed by police constables. That part of the works is now nearly complete.

Prisons

57. Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the present conditions in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. John Patten: Overcrowding, especially in local prisons and remand centres, creates substantial difficulties for management and staff in maintaining satisfactory conditions. We are working to improve conditions through our major programmes for new prisons and refurbishment of existing establishments, the recruitment of more officers and fundamental changes in working practices under fresh start.

Drug Trafficking

59. Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assets have been seized as a result of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to a reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) on 2 November at column 539.

Prison Statistics

60. Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current prison population; by how much this has been reduced by his amnesty measures announced in July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: On 30 October 1987 47,815 persons were held in prison department establishments. The prison population was reduced by about 3,000 prisoners as a result of the increase on 13 August 1987 in remission to one half for prisoners sentenced to 12 months or less announced by the Home Secretary on 16 July at columns 1292-1305.

Prison Building (Northern Region)

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total expenditure on work in the prison building and refurbishment programme since 1983-84; what this expenditure was in each standard region; and how much of this expenditure since 1983-84 was placed with (a) architects and (b) quantity surveyors located in the northern standard region.

Mr. John Patten: The total expenditure on the prison building and refurbishment programme from 1983-84 to end September 1987 was £325·16 million, of which £166·68 million was on new prisons, and £158·48 million on the refurbishment and extension of existing prisons. These figures do not include professional fees. Regional figures are available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage, by value of work in the prison building and refurbishment programme in the years since 1983-84, was undertaken in the northern standard region; and what percentage, by value of work, in the prison building and refurbishment programme in the years since 1983-84, was placed with (a) architects and (b) quantity surveyors in firms located in the northern standard region.

Mr. John Patten: This information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Television Licences

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of television licences issued in the years 1957 and 1986.

Mr. Renton: The information available in respect of 1957 relates to the number of licences in force at the end of the 1957-58 financial year: 8,090,003. The number of licences in force at 31 December 1986 was 18,904,617.

Anton Gecas

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on what action he intends to take in respect of the alleged war criminal Anton Gecas, a resident of Edinburgh.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to a question from the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) on 26 October at column 15.

Fines

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to legislate to link court fines to the ability of offenders to pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Under section 35 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980, courts are already required to take the offenders' means into consideration when fixing the amount of a fine. We are setting up experiments to see whether means assessment can be improved so that fines can be linked more closely to the capacity of less well-off offenders to pay them.

Forensic Science

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the current grades and pay scales of forensic scientists employed by his Department; how many scientists are employed at each grade; if he has any proposals to increase the pay scales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The current grades, numbers in grades, and pay scales of scientific staff in the forensic science service are as follows:

Grade	Numbers in grade as at 12 October 1987	Current pay scale £
4	1	28,975 29,725 30,475
5	5	24,765 25,815 26,965 28,215

[1] Interim point from 1 October 1987: Staff on this point proceed to maximum of unified grade 7 (£20,292) on 1 April 1988.

From 1 April 1988 there will be accelerated incremental progression for the best performers and for those in grades SO grade 4 who have reached their scale maximum additional increments will be available to reward outstanding or otherwise specially deserving performance.

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to increase the establishment of forensic scientists employed by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend is considering an increase in the complement of the forensic science service to improve turn-round times and to provide new services. But 49 per cent. of the cost of the forensic science service is borne by police authorities and we shall therefore wish to consult them before reaching final decisions.

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recruitment policy of his Department's forensic science service.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department's policy is to recruit suitably qualified staff to maintain the complement of the service. Staff in the scientific grades above assistant scientific officer are recruited on behalf of the Department by the Civil Service Commission in accordance with the principles of fair and open competition. The directors of forensic science laboratories have delegated authority from the Department to recruit assistant scientific officers locally, when vacancies arise, in accordance with these principles.

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average period of delay between the submission of samples by the Metropolitan police for examination at the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory and the provision of the results of such examination; what were the corresponding periods for 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the relevant figures for 1984 and 1987 are as follows:

	1984 Days	1987 Days
Chemistry (Criminalistics)	45	65
Biology	28	41
Chemistry (Drugs possession)	28	140
Chemistry (Toxicology)	21	21
Firearms	58	70
Document examination	70	70
Drink driving	2 to 3	2 to 3

The above figures conceal wide variations, since the time taken to deal with cases varies according to the complexity of the case. Figures for 1985 and 1986 are not readily available.

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many forensic scientists are employed currently by the Metropolitan police and his Department, respectively; and what were the corresponding figures for 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

Date	Number of staff in post
Forensic scientists in the Home Office
1984—Figures not readily available	—
31 December 1985	480
31 December 1986	469
12 October 1987	471·5
Forensic scientists in the Metropolitan police
31 January 1984	211
31 January 1985	204
31 January 1986	204·5
31 January 1987	199·5
31 October 1987	195·5

Forensic Science Laboratory

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average period of delay between the submission of samples by the North Wales police for examination at the Home Office forensic science laboratory at Euxton and the provision of the results of such examinations; what were the corresponding periods for 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The current average period between the submission of crime samples by the North Wales police to the Home Office forensic science laboratory at Euxton (Chorley) and the provision of the results is 44 days. For drink-driving cases, the average period is six days.

The corresponding periods for the three preceding years were as follows:

1984 Crime cases: 35 days; drink-driving: 5 days;
1985 Crime cases: 33 days; drink-driving: 5 days;
1986 Crime cases: 42 days; drink-driving: 6 days.

Neighbourhood Watch Groups

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will provide the necessary funds for signs to be erected on street lights to indicate the existence of a neighbourhood watch group.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 29 October 1987 at column 382.

Economic League

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the use made by the police of files maintained by the Economic League as the source of information for their inquiries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police obtain information from many sources in the normal course of their duties. Details are not held centrally of the way in which the police use such information.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cross-border Trade

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, in accordance with article 10 of the Anglo-Irish agreement, he has raised in the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental conference, or otherwise, the restriction imposed by the Government of the Republic of Ireland on cross-border trade, whose conditions have been declared illegal by the European Commission.

Mr. Tom King: Yes.

Extradition

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for extradition to the United Kingdom of persons in the Republic of Ireland are being processed by the authorities in the Republic and how many of these applications are in respect of terrorist-type offences in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd: I have been asked to reply.

Figures are not available for the total number of warrants now being processed, but they include warrants relating to eight persons whose return has been requested in connection with terrorist offences.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been extradited to the United Kingdom from the Republic of Ireland for terrorist-style offences (a) in the two years prior to the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement and (b) since the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Hurd: I have been asked to reply.

The Home Office does not have records of individual cases, but I understand that two people were returned to the United Kingdom from the Republic of Ireland for terrorist offences in the two years prior to the signing of the Anglo-Irish agreement. No one has yet been returned since the agreement was signed.

Anglo-Irish Conference

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the dates and locations of all meetings of the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental conference and the Ministers and officials from the British and Irish Governments who attended them, together with a breakdown of costs involved for each meeting, covering security, administration, transport and logistical support, stating which vote these costs were met from and what proportion of each of the costs was met by the Irish Government.

Mr. Tom King: Joint statements issued after each meeting of the conference, copies of which are in the Library, set out details of dates, location and attendance. It is not the practice to give the names of officials attending. It is not possible at reasonable cost to identify the additional costs to United Kingdom public funds of conference meetings. Costs incurred by the Irish Government are a matter for them.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Belfast, South of 2 July, column 161, there has been any increase in the number of officials employed by the Anglo-Irish secretariat; what is the number of support staff; what information he has as to how many are employed by the Irish Government, the number of support staff, the cost to public funds and the proportion of this cost paid by the Irish side; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: The work of the United Kingdom side of the secretariat is still undertaken by three officials, along with six support staff. As to the running costs of the United Kingdom side of the secretariat, I refer the hon. Gentleman to a reply I gave to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross) on 4 November. The staffing and expenditure of the Irish side is a matter for the Irish Government.

Democracy

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, in relation to the 20 delegations of councillors which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State the hon. Member for Wiltshire, North (Mr. Needham) saw concerning the discussion paper on elected representatives and the democratic process in Northern Ireland, those proposals which were (a) proposed and (b) supported by which delegations.

Mr. Needham [holding answer, 2 November 1987]: The purpose of my meetings was to explore views on what might be done in response to widespread concern about the problems posed by the presence in council chambers of councillors who support violence. Given the exploratory and wide-ranging nature of our discussions, it would not be practical or appropriate to attribute specific views to individual delegations. All views were, however, taken into account in preparing the discussion paper.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cereals

Mr. Warren asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the surplus in cereal production in the European Community and make representations to the European Economic Community to halt the imports of cereal substitutes from outside the Community.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Average Community cereals production over the past three years has been about 20 per cent. above the level that can be absorbed on the Community market.

For the Community to halt unilaterally the import of cereal substitutes from third countries would be contrary to its international obligations and would not be consistent with the commitments that the Community has undertaken in respect of the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations.

Research and Development

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's policy towards maintaining the public sector agricultural research and development base provided by his Department and the Agricultural and Food Research Council, and towards the maintenance of a public sector advisory service to the rural community through the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The July 1987 White Paper on civil research and development (Cm. 185) made it clear that we are intensifying our review of R and D priorities in order to increase the contribution which Government-funded work can make to the efficiency, competitiveness and innovative capacity of the United Kingdom economy. My Department is currently looking at its activities and those of the AFRC against this background and the Government's general view that industry should contribute to the cost of work from which it benefits.

Prawns and Frozen Shellfish

Dame Peggy Fenner asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made on discussions and deliberations on the ice level on prawns and frozen shellfish.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are at the closing stages of considering the comments made on the recommendations in the Food Advisory Committee's Report on coated and ice-glazed fish products, one of which suggested that there should be an indication of net weight of fish core prior to glazing on all glazed products. I expect to make a further announcement shortly.

Research

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the Government plans for the future funding of his Department's research budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The new planning provisions for expenditure on agriculture, fisheries and food, announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Autumn Statement, include reductions of £5 million and £10 million respectively for 1989-90 and 1990-91 to reflect the changing balance between public and industry funding which the Government consider desirable for research and development work.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many farms or parts of farms in Cumbria had sheep movement restrictions reimposed in 1987;

(2) how many farms or parts of farms had sheep movement restrictions placed upon them for the first time in 1987 in Cumbria.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None.

Research Specialists

Mr. Bermingham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of operational research specialists in his Department, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 4 November 1987]: There are a number of staff in my Department using operational research techniques as part of their work, but there is not a specialist grade. The information is not therefore available in the form requested.

International Cocoa Council

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals Her Majesty's Government will be making to the International Cocoa Council at the end of November in order to reactivate the buffer stock of the international cocoa agreement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 4 November 1987]: The Government will be seeking implementation of the provisions of the international cocoa agreement for a downward revision of the price range for cocoa, taking into account current market developments and long-term trends, so that the remaining resources of the cocoa buffer stock are used as effectively as possible to promote long-term stability in the cocoa sector.

EMPLOYMENT

Safety Inspectors (Visits)

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average cycle of farm visits by safety inspectors; and what cuts there have been in the limits of inspectors mileage to make such visits.

Mr. Nicholls: Inspections and visits to farms by the Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectorate are prioritised and carried out according to the known hazard and the number of persons at risk. Labour-employing establishments are inspected approximately every four years, and other categories less frequently. The budget allocated to the agricultural inspectorate for travel and subsistence has remained the same for the last two years, during which time the number of farm visits has increased slightly.

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the 176,000 self-employed non-labour premises in farming, forestry and horticulture were visited last year by health and safety inspectors.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's HM agricultural inspectorate carried out 8,105 inspections of non-labour employing premises last year.

Pesticides Contractors

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many aerial and ground pesticides contractors are known to the Health and Safety Executive; how many complaints there were about their activities in the last year; and how many were visited (a) following a complaint and (b) in the course of a formal average visit frequency.

Mr. Nicholls: There are 35 holders of aerial application certificates known to the Health and Safety Executive; ground crop spraying contractors are not required to be registered.

The other information is not kept in the form requested but 17 complaints about aerial spraying and 24 complaints about ground spraying involving pesticides were investigated by HSE's HM agricultural inspectorate last year. For further information a copy of the inspectorate's annual report of pesticide poisoning and other incidents investigated in 1986 is available in the House Library.

Non-agricultural Undertakings (Visits)

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many known non-agricultural undertakings, involving fish farms, maggot farms, riding schools and kennels, are recorded by the Health and Safety Executive; and how many visits per year the average premises may expect, particularly to check on YTS trainees and the health of young people.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's HM agricultural inspectorate is responsible for 48,000 non-agricultural undertakings, involving fish farms, maggot farms, riding schools, kennels, contractors, landscape gardeners, golf courses etc. Inspections are planned and carried out according to known hazards on particular premises and according to the number of persons at risk. A total of 800 inspections of non-agricultural premises are planned in the coming year: there is no set visiting cycle for these premises.

Specific visits are not normally made to check on YTS trainees or young persons but during an inspection an inspector examines the health and safety conditions in which all persons work giving particular attention to the needs of all young people, and also to others who may be affected by the work activity.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the increasing cost of proceedings before industrial tribunals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I am aware that some employers are concerned about the cost of proceedings before industrial tribunals. Industrial tribunal procedures are kept under constant review to ensure that they are as simple as possible. Measures have been and will continue to be taken in the context of the Government's deregulation policy to achieve an acceptable balance between the need to preserve the essential employment rights of the individual and the need to reduce unnecessary burdens on employers.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) women and (b) men applied to start their own business under the enterprise allowance scheme in each of the past years since 1983; and how many (i) women and (ii) men were given an allowance award for each of these years.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of entrants to the enterprise allowance scheme for each year since 1983 is shown below, by sex. The number of applications received during the same periods is also shown, but no analysis of these by sex is available.

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Total number of applications	37,922	53,939	68,280	103,193
Entrants	27,629	46,037	60,036	86,751
Female entrants	4,034	9,392	14,579	22,902
Male entrants	23,595	36,645	45,507	63,849

Women Entrepreneurs

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to publish the results of his Department's current research into the problems facing women entrepreneurs; and whether he will give the terms of reference for this project.

Mr. Nicholls: The terms of reference for the study of female entrepreneurs commissioned jointly by my Department and Shell UK Ltd. are as follows:

1. To establish the personal characteristics, motivations and social context of women who become successfully established in business;

2. To identify the specific problems faced by women in running a business and the methods whereby these are resolved;

3. To examine what advice, training and other support women entrepreneurs need and can obtain at the various stages of setting up and operating a business;

4. To provide an account of the different ways women can become engaged in enterprise and to identify particular factors which contribute to business viability;

5. To advise on, and where possible, implement methods of dissemination of the research findings so that they reach the client group in question;

6. To advise on ways in which initiatives and programmes can be moulded to facilitate women's effective participation in enterprise.

It is expected that the study will be completed by the end of 1987 and results are likely to be available in early 1988.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the numbers of (a) women who are self-employed, (b) men who are self-employed, (c) women who are employed and (d) men who are employed for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Lee: The information is as follows:

Employment Rights

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether he has any plans to increase the number of hours that an employee must work each week before she or he can qualify for the main employment rights such as claims for unfair dismissal and statutory redundancy payments;

(2) whether he has any plans to change the obligation on employers of more than five employees to allow a woman to return to the same or a suitable alternative job at any time within 29 weeks after the birth of a child;

(3) whether he has any plans to introduce a requirement for applicants to an industrial tribunal to pay a fee.

Mr. Nicholls: Proposals or suggestions on these matters were set out in the White Paper "Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers" (Cmnd. 9794). They are still under consideration.

Community Programme

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to change the eligibility rules for entry to the community programme to allow the participation of women who are currently prevented from doing so because they are disqualified from receiving benefit.

Mr. Lee: I have no plans to change the present arrangements.

Training Schemes

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to extend the system of child care payments to single parents on the job training scheme, to single parents on the community programme and youth training scheme; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: There are no plans to extend the system of child care payments currently being piloted on the new job training scheme to single parents on the community programme or the youth training scheme. However, the new job training scheme pilot is being closely monitored and the situation will be reviewed on its completion.

Job Advertisements (Age Requirements)

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to legislate to prevent age requirements being mentioned in advertisements for employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The Government do not believe that legislation of this nature would be beneficial or practical.

Factory Inspectors

Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many factories in the west midlands, east midlands, northern and Yorkshire regions were visited by factory inspectors for each of the last five years for which figures are available; what percentage this figure represents of the total number of factories in each of the areas; how many factory inspectors are in post in each of the areas; and if he has any plans to increase the present number of factory inspectors in the areas mentioned.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the form requested as the Health and Safety Executive area boundaries do not coincide with those of the Department of Employment regions. It is not possible, without disproportionate cost to separate the number of visits made to factories from those made to other premises where the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 is enforced by the factory inspectorate. The information available is as follows:

(a) The number of visits made by factory inspectors to premises subject to HSWA:

HSE Area	1985-86	1986-87
East Midlands	10,374	10,421
West Midlands	9,963	10,466
Marches	8,041	9,768
North Midlands	7,779	6,803
South Yorkshire and Humberside	9,043	7,893
West and North Yorkshire	11,445	13,261
North West	10,118	8,358
North East	10,465	10,639

(b) Not all premises subject to the HSWA are required to send notification to the Health and Safety Executive. The percentage figures are therefore not available.

(c) On 1 October 1987, the number of factory inspectors in post in each of these areas was as follows:

HSE Area	Number of inspectors
East Midlands	24·5
West Midlands	33
Marches	23·5
North Midlands	21
South Yorkshire and Humberside	24
West and North Yorkshire	31·5
North West	23
North East	28

It is hoped to increase the number of factory inspectors in the field during 1988-89, but their location remains to be decided.

Redundant Workers (Benefit)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State For Employment if following the result of a test case involving a former British Shipbuilders worker in September 1986, he will publish the number of former British Shipbuilders employees in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde, (c) Scotland and (d) England and Wales who have now received payment of unemployment benefit for the first 13 weeks of their redundancy; what has been the average payment; what has been the total amount paid so far to those so entitled to this payment of benefit; what estimate he has of the number still to receive this payment and when they will receive such payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee [holding answer, 26 November 1987]: No record is kept of unemployment benefit payments arising from claims made in any particular set of circumstances.

Claims for unemployment benefit made by ex-British Shipbuilders employees and disallowed because of the 13-week payment received have been reviewed and those claimants who have not already been paid 312 days of unemployment benefit (the maximum amount payable in any period of unemployment) have received a payment of the arrears due. In addition my Department is now making special payments to certain ex-British Shipbuilders employees who at the time of their redundancy did not make a claim to unemployment benefit on the advice of their unemployment benefit office. It is too early to say how many people have received the special payments. However it is anticipated that the average amount of these payments will be approximately £314.

THE ARTS

British National Bibliography

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister for the Arts what is the number of items in the present backlog of accumulated material awaiting entry to the British National Bibliography.

Mr. Luce: As at 30 October 1987, the total number of deposited items which have not completed processing for entry in the British National Bibliography is approximately 39,000.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister for the Arts what is the average time between the publication of a British book and its entry details appearing in the British National Bibliography.

Mr. Luce: As at 30 October 1987, the average length of elapsed time between the deposit of all newly published British publications at the British Library and the appearance of entries for them in the British National Bibliography is six months.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to eliminate the British National Bibliography's backlog of unregistered books.

Mr. Luce: This is a matter for the British Library, which, following its consultative paper "Currency with Coverage", has recently announced plans to eliminate backlogs and enable its bibliographic services to keep pace with the rising annual numbers of new publications forecast.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will make a statement as to whether all descriptive entries for all new British publications appear in the British National Bibliography.

Mr. Luce: Descriptive entries appear in the British National Bibliography for all items deposited, except certain categories of publications as listed in the preface to the "British National Bibliography 1986" annual volumes. The exceptions include printed music (covered in another British Library publication), maps, and certain types of official and other "non-trade" publications.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister for the Arts if he will consult representatives of libraries, booksellers and publishers on the future of the British National Bibliography.

Mr. Luce: The British Library's consultative paper on the future development of the British national bibliographic service invited comments from interested parties, and I understand that further consultations with libraries and with the trade are planned.

Funding Levels

Mr. Jessel asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will announce levels of funding for the arts in 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I announced at Newcastle in July the start of a long-term plan for the funding of the arts. The aim of the plan is to maintain the level of support from public funds, but to encourage subsidised bodies to become more self-reliant in their development and growth. I am glad to announce today a new departure in arts funding which will carry that plan forward.

The new departure consists of a three-year settlement of the arts budget. This is a special arrangement providing firm figures not only for the next financial year but for a three-year period from April 1988 to March 1991. This is to give arts bodies a firm base on which to plan their future activities, and if they are successful their future growth. In order to create the right atmosphere and to get this new approach off to a good start, I am providing a substantial increase in funding in the first year.

The three-year settlement covers much the greater part of my central Government arts programme, including the national museums and galleries; the Arts Council, British Film Institute, Crafts Council and other arts bodies; the running costs of the British Library and the public lending right. It excludes the National Heritage Memorial Fund, for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced a special injection of £20 million this year on 23 October. It also excludes the costs of the British Library capital project at St. Pancras, which will continue to be reviewed annually in the usual way. But it covers all the rest.

The essence of the three-year settlement is that the figures for the period up to March 1991 will not be reviewed in the course of the 1988 and 1989 expenditure surveys unless the situation changes substantially in ways that cannot be foreseen today. The Government will consider in 1988 what provision to make for the last year of that survey, that is for 1991-92; and similarly in 1989 what provision to make for 1992-93. We intend a rolling three-year programme.

Thus, arts bodies will be able to plan their own future on a firm basis. We want them to know what the Government are going to do for them—and what they are not going to do; to plan the fund-raising [illegible] income generation which they should undertake on their own account; and to match their plans and priorities to a realistic view of the total resources that they can secure for themselves over the three-year period.

That part of my budget to which the three-year settlement applies will rise from £336 million in the current year to £394 million in 1990-91: an increase of £58 million or 17 per cent. To get the new approach off to a good start, the increase in the first year will be 10 per cent. It will not be evenly spread over all my client bodies; most will go where I judge the case to be strongest. My central Government programme as a whole, including the NHMF and the British Library's capital needs, will rise to £440 million over the three-year period. That is a rise of £79 million or 22 per cent. in total.

The table shows the main allocations over the three-year period. The Arts Council's grant will rise from £138 million in the current year to £150 million next year, £155 million in 1989-90 and £160 million in 1990-91. Over the three years, this is a rise of over 15 per cent. From this increase I shall expect the Arts Council to deal with the financing of overseas tours by our major companies and to set aside sums rising to £7 million by the third year for incentive funding schemes and for increased touring in the regions outside London. The grant to the British Film Institute will rise to £12 million by the third year, an increase of nearly 20 per cent. The grant to the National Film and Television School will rise by 50 per cent. to £1·7 million. The Crafts Council's grant will rise by nearly 19 per cent. to £2·4 million.

I am increasing the provision for the business sponsorship incentive scheme from £1·75 million to £3·0 million.

The provision for public lending right will rise from £2·75 million to £3·5 million, a rise of 27 per cent, which will bring the fund to its highest level in real terms since its inception.

The provision for the running costs of the British Library will rise from £51 million in the current year to £56 million by 1990-91, a rise of nearly 10 per cent.

The total provision for museums and galleries will rise from £126 million in the current year to £141 million next year and £146 million by the third year. I shall make a further statement before Christmas on the allocation of these sums between institutions. But not less than £6 million of the increase in the first year will be devoted to strengthening the building and maintenance programme of the national museums and galleries—a rise of over 20 per cent. The grant to the Museums and Galleries Commission will rise to over £6·8 million by the third year, a rise of over 11 per cent.

These measures combine a substantial increase with a firm limit. They offer an opportunity to aim for, and secure, a broadening of the base of support for the arts in this country. As living standards rise, we should aim to ensure that increasing numbers of people not only have access to the arts but participate by their own choice in supporting them. My proposals are designed to help to create the climate in which artists and arts bodies can win that support.

Sponsorship

Mr. Wray asked the Minister for the Arts what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure that partial private sponsorship of the arts does not result in financial difficulties for art expressions not associated with establishment values.

Mr. Luce: The Government are committed to the maintenance of arts funding in real terms, and they are honouring this commitment. The distribution of funding is a matter for the Arts Council and other major bodies. There is no reason why any individual arts organisation should not be able to finance the growth of its activities by seeking to increase its income from other sources. Nor is it impossible for innovative art groups to obtain sponsorship.

Arts Council

Mr. Wray asked the Minister for the Arts what is the 1982 value of the current annual grant to the Arts Council; and what was the level of grant in 1982.

Mr. Luce: The 1982 value of the current annual grant to the Arts Council is £111,018,000. The 1982-83 grant to the Arts Council was £90,850,000.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Storm Damage

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what additional financial resources have been allocated by the European Community to those areas in the United Kingdom which suffered severe storms and flooding during the month of October.

Mr. Lawson: The Commission decided on 21 October to provide 300,000 ecu (£210,000) in emergency aid to the most needy families of those who died or were injured in England as a result of the storm of 15-16 October.

On 28 October the Commission decided to provide a further 200,000 ecu (£140,000) in emergency aid for the families of those killed or in greatest need as a result of the flooding in Wales and Northern Ireland between 18 and 21 October.

BP Shares

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what form authorisation will be sought for any expenditure arising from the Bank of England's buy-back scheme for BP shares.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The shares will be paid for and held by the issue department of the Bank of England as part of the portfolio of assets backing the note issue, under the provisions of the Currency and Bank Notes Act 1928. Other additional expenses incurred which are specifically related to the share purchase arrangements will be brought to account on the vote which relates to the sale of shares in BP plc (class XIX, vote 16). Parliamentary approval for such expenses will be sought in a Supplementary Estimate for the vote. Pending that approval of this new service, urgent expenditure will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund. It is not possible to provide a firm estimate of the expenditure that will be incurred as this will depend on the extent to which shares are offered for sale to the Bank of England.

European Economic Community (Budget)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in relation to the proposals presented by the EEC Commission on budgetary discipline (Com (87) 430) and in particular toward whether the exceeding of spending because of exceptional circumstances should fall to be dealt with by unanimity or majority vote.

Mr. Brooke: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister told the House on 1 July, the Government consider effective and binding control over Community spending, in particular on agriculture, to be essential. We are not convinced of the necessity for any continuing provision to be made for "exceptional circumstances". The voting rules in relation to such a provision would depend on the legal base for the Council decision or regulation that gave effect to it.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will outline the manner in which decisions on the breaching of EEC budget limits because of exceptional circumstances under the agreement of the Council of 4 December 1984 have been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The 1984 budget discipline agreement first came into effect with the Community budget for 1986 when the financial guideline for agricultural expenditure was set at 21,012 million ecus. On 7 July 1986 the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers agreed that agricultural expenditure in 1986 could exceed the financial guideline by an amount which could be justified mainly by the exceptional circumstances of the abnormally large depreciation of the United States dollar. The supplementary and amending budget for 1986 subsequently increased provision for expenditure on agriculture from the guideline figure of 21,012 million ecus to 22,112 million ecus.

The financial guideline for 1987 remains at 22,961 million ecus, as was stated in my reply to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) on 6 February at column 840. It was agreed at the European Council on 29-30 June that agricultural expenditure should be kept within the guideline this year by means of an adjustment in the system of payments to agricultural intervention agencies in the member states, so that payments will in future be made in arrears instead of in advance. The necessary amendment to the EAGGF financing regulation was adopted by the Agriculture Council of 19-20 October. The Government supported this change as a step towards more effective financial control of agricultural expenditure.

Excise Duties

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the extent to which his decisions on excise duties are restricted by EEC policy decisions on convergence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The package of tax measures recently put forward by the European Commission contains proposals for the convergence of excise duty rates in the Community. These have not yet been discussed in the Council of Ministers and no decisions have been taken.

Official Report

Mr. Sumberg asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the price of the Official Report.

Mr. Brooke: Following a review by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, I have authorised an increase of 75p in the price of the daily part, with proportionate increases in the prices of the weekly part and fortnightly index. The price of Standing Committee debates will be increased by £1·05, bound volumes by £3·00, and the volume index by 30p. Subscription rates and the scale of charges for reprints of Members' speeches appearing in the Official Report will also be raised. Despite these increases, Hansard will still receive a substantial subsidy.

Board of Banking Supervision

Dr. Twinn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Board of Banking Supervision will be set up on a statutory basis.

Mr. Lawson: The board, which has operated since May 1986 on a non-statutory basis, has now been established under section 2 of the Banking Act 1987. I am grateful to the independent members of the non-statutory board (Sir Donald Barron, Mr. Andrew Caldecott, Mr. Deryk Vander Weyer, Mr. Nigel Robson, Mr. Harry Taylor and Mr. Alan Hardcastle) for indicating their willingness to serve on the new board. The Governor of the Bank of England and I have jointly appointed them to be the independent members of the new board.

Eurotunnel

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the liability to stamp duty and the stamp duty reserve tax of the units offerred for sale by Eurotunnel.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The companies, the stock exchange and other interested parties have discussed the offer with the Inland Revenue.

The Eurotunnel group will be offering for sale to the public units comprising one share in Eurotunnel plc and one share in Eurotunnel SA. They will require that these shares are issued and transferred together, as a single unit, in order to link United Kingdom and French participation in the tunnel project. This arrangement would, however, give rise to complex charges to stamp duties and stamp duty reserve tax. The taxes would sometimes apply to the unit and sometimes to the Eurotunnel plc share only. These results were not envisaged when the legislation was introduced, and would complicate dealings in the units. The next Finance Bill will therefore include proposals to make the unit chargeable security for stamp duty and reserve tax purposes, and to remove the initial charge to bearer instrument duty on the issue of units and warrants to acquire units abroad.

The intention of these changes is to treat the units for stamp duty and the reserve tax in the same way as a single share.

ENVIRONMENT

Estate Action Team

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to extend the facility of his Department's estate action team to housing associations and housing societies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Estate Action was set up in June 1985 specifically to help local authorities tackle the problems of their rundown estates. We focused on the local authority sector because all our evidence suggested that the major difficulties lay in this area. At present I have no plans to extend the activities of the Estate Action team to housing associations and housing societies.

Assured Tenancy Scheme

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the number of private residential tenancies created under the assured tenancy scheme for each year since 1980.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The number of assured tenancy lettings on 1 April each year since 1983 was:

	Number
1983	44
1984	244
1985	405
1986	609
1987	2,998

Sewerage

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the agency agreements between water and local authorities under the Water Act 1973, whereby some district councils retain sewerage functions.

Mr. Moynihan: Following a review by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, the statutory basis of these agreements was changed by section 6 of the Water Act 1983. We have since decided to privatise the utility functions of water authorities, and it is inconsistent with the aims of privatisation for local authorities to continue to have the presumptive right to act as sewerage agents. Our proposals for the future of these agreements were set out in a consultation paper in November 1986. I am placing copies in the Library of the House.

Home Loans

Mr. French asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the effectiveness of the promotional campaign for the Government's home loan scheme for the purpose of increasing the percentage of eligible first-time buyers who participate in the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government already make a full range of promotional material for the scheme available on request to the savings and lending institutions which operate it. Growth in owner-occupation has been very marked in recent years and very large numbers of people are buying a house for the first time each year. In 1986-87 there were 670,000 first-time buyers—the highest ever annual figure. In deciding on priorities for publicity expenditure, it would be difficult to justify more resources for an area of housing which is already developing satisfactorily.

Rating Reform

Mrs. Kellett-Bowman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, if the community charge per adult in Lancaster were to be £190 per annum, what estimates he has to indicate what would be the rate of local income tax that would be required to raise an equivalent overall sum assuming that taxpayers in Lancaster are on a similar tax base to taxpayers in Lancashire as a whole for (1) persons earning £100 per week and (2) persons on the average national wage.

Mr. Howard: I estimate that a community charge of £190 in Lancaster would be equivalent to a rate of local income tax of 4·9p. The impact on particular households would depend on their circumstances, but a single person earning £100 per week would pay up to £140 a year of LIT on this basis; a single person earning the average national wage would pay up to £400.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies of "Paying For Local Government—The Need For Change" his Department has had published; what was the cost involved; and what other expenditure has been incurred in publicising his proposals for the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 29 October, at column 438-39.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the organisations in Scotland which have notified him of their support of the poll tax legislation.

Mr. Howard: The Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) asked for comments on the Government's proposals from individuals and organisations in Scotland to be sent to the Scottish Office.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes a system of rebates for small business under the unified business rate.

Mr. Howard: No. Small businesses will benefit from our guarantee that the rate poundage will increase by no more than the retail prices index. There will be generous phasing arrangements for those businesses facing increases on the move to the uniform poundage.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to make arrangements for contributions to local authority services from foreign diplomats following introduction of the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: We will announce details of the proposed arrangements in due course.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what he considers will be the appropriate time to make an estimate of the number of staff required to administer the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: In accordance with convention, an estimate of the staffing implications of the rates reform proposals will be included in the explanatory and financial memorandum to the Bill.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information will be available to electoral registration officers as to the reasons names appear on the poll tax register, but not on the electoral register.

Mr. Howard: Electoral registration officers will know that the community charges register and the electoral register serve different purposes; the former is a list of those liable to pay the community charge in an area; the latter a list of those entitled to vote.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment for what purposes it is proposed that electoral registration officers will have access to the poll tax register.

Mr. Howard: Electoral registration officers will have access to community charges registers to assist them in checking the completeness of electoral register.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek the permission of those organisations which have submitted comments following publication of Cmnd. 9714 "Paying For Local Government" to publish their views.

Mr. Howard: No. A list of those organisations which responded is available in the Library should the hon. Member wish to approach respondents directly.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what pay scale is proposed for community charge officers.

Mr. Howard: The community charge registration officer in each area will be the officer administering the local authority's financial affairs under section 151 of the Local Government Act 1972. They will continue to be paid on the appropriate scale.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies of "Paying For Local Government — The Need For Change" have been printed; to whom they have been distributed; and what was the cost of publication.

Mr. Howard: 100,000 copies of the booklet "Paying for Local Government—The Need for Change" have been printed at a cost of £16,200. They are being distributed in response to requests from individuals or organisations for their members use. Copies are also enclosed, where relevant, with replies to ministerial and official correspondence on the rates reform proposals.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of work undertaken in respect of the paragraphs on local income tax on page 7 of his Department's leaflet "Paying For Local Government—The Need For Change."

Mr. Howard: These paragraphs were based on the consideration of local income tax in paragraphs 3·24 to 3·32 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714), which was published in January 1986.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) on 21 October, column 817, he estimates the information on the poll tax model for 1986-87 will be available.

Mr. Howard: Shortly.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the organisations which have notified him of their opposition to the poll tax legislation.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor).

Poverty

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr may expect a reply to his letter of 6 August seeking information about poverty in large cities and London boroughs, which was passed to his Department on 24 August.

Mr. Howard: The Department has no record of the hon. Member's letter of 6 August. If he would like to send me a copy of his letter, I will ensure that he receives a prompt reply.

Local Elections

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Envionment if he will commission research on the relative voting turn-out at local government elections of those (a) in receipt of rate rebates or housing benefits and (b) those not in receipt of such benefit.

Mr. Howard: I have no plans to commission such research.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has on the nature of the existing link between those who (a) vote in local elections, (b) use local services, and (c) pay for local services.

Mr. Howard: On our latest estimates there are 35·8 million electors in England, all of whom benefit from the availability of local services. Of those, just over a third pay rates directly and in full. A further 3 million pay a proportion of rates. In some areas only one voter in four pays rates directly and in full. Our proposals to reform the system of local government finance will restore the link between those who vote in local elections, those who use local services and those who pay for those services.

Wild Birds

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by species of avian predator, and for each of the last five years and 1987 to date, what was the number of licences granted for taking and the numbers of birds so taken from the wild.

Mr. Moynihan: The details of the falconry licences issued since 1983, showing the species of predator, and the number of birds reported as taken, are as follows. Similar details for 1982 are not available.

"Tenants Choice: the Government's Proposals"

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to distribute the document "Tenants Choice: the Government's Proposals" to right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Waldegrave: Copies of the document "Tenants' Choice", which explains the Government's proposals for legislation to give council tenants a right to opt for new landlords, were placed in the Library of the House on 3 November.

Councillors (Decl[illegible]tions Against Violence)

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will introduce legislation to provide for elected councillors in England and Wales to sign a declaration abjuring violence along the lines of that proposed for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Widdicombe committee on the conduct of local authority business recommended that all local authority councillors in Great Britain should have to make a declaration before exercising their office; that this should have a status similar to the oath sworn, or affirmation made, by juries; and that consideration should be given whether this declaration should be specific as to what the public duty of being a councillor entails. We are considering this recommendation.

Welsh Footballers

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Welsh Football Association about the refusal of the Football League to cancel certain matches in which Welsh footballers are involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received a letter from the Football Association of Wales and from the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) on its behalf.

This is a matter for the two football authorities. I do, however, sympathise with the position of the Football Association of Wales and hope, even at this late stage, that the Football League can reconsider the matter.

Homelessness

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy for dealing with homelessness.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 4 November to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan). Additional resources to tackle homelessness and other items in the current financial year were announced by my right hon. Friend on 3 November in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick).

Dog Wardens

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there is a needs element in grant-related expenditure of local authorities relating to the provision of dog wardens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Grant-related expenditure assessments fully allow for local authorities' need to spend. As with many other services on which there is relatively low expenditure, there is however no specific indicator related to provision of dog wardens.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Adoption

63. Miss Lestor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what responses he has made to the Council of Europe's report and recommendation on the traffic in children for adoption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Parliamentary Assembly's report on the traffic in children and other forms of child exploitation which includes the traffic in children for adoption, is presently in draft form. It is due to be considered by the Council of Europe's Committee of Ministers' Deputies in December 1987. We shall not be in a position to respond to the report or to make a statement until it has been examined in detail by the committee.

World Health Organisation

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to assist the World Health Organisation strategy of health for all by the year 2000; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: the Government have fully endorsed the principles underlying the "Health for All" strategy which are:

—the provision of a health care system in which primary health care is recognised as playing a vital role. The Government have conducted a wide ranging review of primary health care services and will shortly be publishing a White Paper setting out proposals for updating these services; — promotion of healthier lifestyles and encouraging individuals to look after their own health — an emphasis which is making progress in this country and is exemplified in our national campaigns on drug abuse, smoking, AIDS and coronary heart disease and the creation of the new Health Education Authority;

—reduction of preventable conditions—for example, the Government's emphasis in relation to children and young adults on the reduction of perinatal and maternal mortality, progress in immunisation rates, new cancer screening programme;

—development of the necessary supportive measures such as our improved management and planning structures, our development of new information systems and the increases in the numbers of those working in the health services.

The strategy sets out a valuable framework for all those responsible for health service planning to use in the light of local circumstances and we shall be taking it fully into account in preparing future planning guidelines to health authorities.

Bedford General Hospital

Sir Trevor Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total expenditure derived from central Government sources on Bedford General hospital south wing during each of the last five years.

Mrs. Currie: My hon. Friend will be interested to see the figures which follow:

Total Expenditure on Bedford General Hospital South Wing

Financial Year	Regional Managed Capital Schemes £	District Delegated Capital Schemes £	Revenue £
1982-83	800,867	161,071	10,997,777
1983-84	404,367	17,660	12,305,440
1984-85	235,000	108,645	13,182,516
1985-86	207,000	81,112	14,005,133
1986-87	1,230,000	278,650	15,098,368

Allocations to hospitals are a matter for the district health authority, and detailed information is not held centrally. For any further information my hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of North Bedfordshire health authority.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the present formula for making extreme weather payments; whether he proposes to make changes to the formula; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 30 October 1987 at column 468-9.

AIDS

Mr. Butler asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the date to which the United States Surgeon-General has projected the cases of AIDS infection in that country; and whether he will make it his policy to make similar projections for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: The United States Public Health Service has published estimates of the numbers of AIDS cases in that country up to 1991. These estimates have wide margins of error which increase towards the later years. Our policy is that predictions should be made only as and when justified by the available scientific data.

Local Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Illsley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of local appeal tribunals which took place in 1986 (a) nationally and (b) in Barnsley; and in what proportion of those tribunals the claimant was successful.

Mr. Portillo: Administrative statistics show that a total of 125,838 appeals were heard and decided in Great Britain in 1986. Of these, 31,675 (25·2 per cent.) were determined in the claimant's favour.

National administrative statistics of social security appeals are not disaggregated for areas smaller than a social security region. In the north eastern region in 1986, a total of 20,040 appeals were heard and decided, of which 4,653 (23·2 per cent.) were found in favour of the claimant.

Nurses (Accommodation)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many units of nursing accommodation there are in each health district of the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information in respect of health authorities in England is not held centrally.

Cancer Screening

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans legislation further to control private clinics offering cancer screening facilities.

Mrs. Currie: We are considering the issues involved in ensuring that users can be confident of private screening services, including the possibility of statutory control. Meanwhile we welcome the steps the private sector is taking to devise guidelines for the accreditation of, and quality assurance in, clinics and laboratories offering cancer screening services.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assumptions are made concerning waiting times when determining the number of (a) consultants and (b) beds in the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: The need to improve waiting times is one of the objectives taken into account by health authorities when deciding how best to provide and develop services for patients. Numbers of consultants or beds would form part of those service plans.

Community Care Grants

Mrs. Fyfe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether women leaving Women's Aid refuges on being rehoused will be entitled to community care grants, under regulations for the social fund;

(2) whether the circumstances of domestic violence will be included in the guidelines for community care grants under the regulations for the social fund;

(3) whether women who have suffered domestic violence will qualify as high priority applicants for community care grants; and whether they will be entitled to the maximum sums available under those grants, under the regulations for the social fund;

(4) what amount of community care grant will be payable under the regulations for the social fund to women victims of domestic violence on leaving Women's Aid refuges to move to independent housing; and whether this will be stated in the guidance for social fund officers;

(5) whether women victims of domestic violence who flee to Women's Aid refuges will be entitled to a community care grant to replace clothing destroyed during the marital or cohabitation breakdown under the regulations for the social fund.

Mr. Scott: Community care grants from the social fund will not be subject to regulations but will be awarded at the discretion of the social fund officer, in accordance with the law and Secretary of State's directions and taking account of the Secretary of State's guidance. Guidance about awards in cases of domestic violence is included in part 6 of the social fund manual, a pre-publication copy of which is in the Library.

Dentists (Computers)

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will take steps to inform general dental practitioners about their rights relating to the Dental Estimates Board computer at Bournemouth;

(2) if he will take steps to inform dental practitioners of the degree of protection given under the terms of the Data Protection Act to records concerning them held by the Dental Estimates Board.

Mrs. Currie: Publicity about the provisions of the Data Protection Act is the responsibility of the Data Protection Registrar, who is mounting a publicity campaign to inform all data subjects of their rights. The rights of general dental practitioners and their patients in relation to the Dental Estimates Board's computer records are the same as those of any person whose record is maintained on a computer.

Abortions

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, for the most recent years for which figures are available, the different conditions, syndromes and diseases diagnosed in foetuses aborted under statutory ground 4 at 18 weeks gestation and over, together with the numbers of each condition and in each case the numbers expressed as a percentage of all abortions at 18 weeks and over.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is shown in the table.

Mentions of medical conditions for notifications of abortions carried out under statutory ground 4 of the 1967 Abortion Act to residents and non-residents at 18 weeks and over gestation, England and Wales 1986: numbers and percentage of all operations performed at 18 weeks and over [1] These figures represent the number of medical conditions reported (mentioned) rather than the number of operations.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action the Government have taken to ensure the effective implementation of the recommendations for reducing the number of late abortions put forward by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists in their study; "Late Abortions in England and Wales 1984".

Mr. Newton: The Department has discussed the findings of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists report with regional general managers and regional medical officers, and health authorities have been encouraged to improve their administrative referral systems. Earlier this year family planning and pregnancy counselling projects were set up with central funding in City and Hackney, Milton Keynes and South Sefton district health authorities. These will continue until March 1989. They are being independently evaluated by Isobel Allen of the Policy Studies Institute and we expect to disseminate her findings to the National Health Service when they have been studied.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abortions were performed on residents and non-residents during 1986 at each of the following gestational ages; 18 weeks, 19 weeks, 20 weeks, 21 weeks, 22 weeks, 23 weeks, 24 weeks and 25 weeks and over, respectively; on what grounds these were performed; what were the ages of the women; and what was the number performed in the National Health Service and the number performed in approved places.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the table.

Number of notifications of legal abortions performed on residents and non-residents at gestation weeks: 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and over, by statutory grounds, age-group of mother and category of premises 1986

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will break down the number of abortions by the social class of the mother for the latest available date.

Mr. Newton: Information on occupation status, from which social class data are compiled, is not collected on the abortion notification form.

Rating Reform

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy that personal details on Department of Health and Social Security computers will not be used for the purpose of implementing the poll tax legislation.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

Our policy is to maintain the confidentiality of social security records and to disclose them only in certain limited circumstances. One circumstance where we would consider such disclosure would be to safeguard public funds. No decision has been taken on whether we should provide for the disclosure of any details of certain social security claims to local authorities administering the community charge.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost to the National Health Service of a hearing aid.

Mr. Scott: The National Health Service provides a range of different types of hearing aids but the Department does not collect this information centrally. Responsibility for supplying hearing aids in England and Wales was transferred to Mersey regional health authority on 1 April 1985.

The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the regional chairman direct.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines were issued by the attendance allowance board to delegated doctors concerned with assessing claims following the Court of Appeal decision in the case of Moran v. Secretary of State for Social Services; and whether he will deposit copies of the guidelines in the Library.

Mr. Scott: Guidance on the approach to continual supervision at night, taking account of the Moran judgment, has been included in the overall revision of the attendance allowance board's guidelines for delegated medical practitioners which was already in hand: copies have been placed in the Library. As I stated in my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 26 October 1987 at columns 199-200, the guidelines will be published as a priced document after Parliament has completed consideration of the current Social Security Bill —including any further amendments which may then be necessary.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for attendance allowance based upon the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the case of Moran v. the Secretary of State for Social Services have now been determined; and how many claims were successful.

Mr. Scott: Following the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the case of Mrs. Dorothy Moran, about 73,000 claims to attendance allowance involving continual supervision at night have been decided. In most of these cases the outcome was the same as it would have been before the judgment, but in some 700 cases the claimant received an allowance, or a higher rate of allowance, which would not have been awarded but for the Moran judgment.

Unemployment Benefit

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people he expects to lose all entitlement to unemployment benefit from the reduction from 60 to 55 years of the age at which that benefit is abated against an occupational pension.

Mr. Scott: About 27,000 a year.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people are expected to lose from the tightening of the first condition for receipt of unemployment benefit;

(2) how many are expected to lose from the tightening of the second condition for receipt of unemployment benefit.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that about 280,000 people a year would lose some benefit from the tightening of the second contribution condition for entitlement to unemployment benefit if it was introduced in isolation. About 350,000 would lose some benefit from the tightening of both contribution conditions simultaneously. I regret that no reliable estimate is available of the number who would lose benefit as a result of tightening only the first condition.

Single Payments

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average amount paid in single payments to someone leaving institutional care at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: A special survey of single payment claims made in a sample of offices in October 1986 recorded an average payment of £304 to a small sample of claimants moving from institutional care into the community.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the level of single payments made in each year from 1980 to 1986.

Mr. Scott: The level of single payments is as follows:

Year (May-April)	Number of payments (thousands)	Total cost (£ million)
1980-81	1,049	48
1981-82	1,186	57
1982-83	1,473	98
1983-84	2,129	166
1984-85	3,316	241
1985-86	4,375	335
1986-87	4,230	330

Source: Management Information System (100% count). Provisional only for 1986-87.

Family Credit

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the value of the cash element included in the rates of family credit to compensate for the loss of (a) free school meals and (b) welfare milk.

Mr. Scott: An amount of £2·55 is included in each of the child credit rates and the same amount therefore goes to each child or young person in the family irrespective of whether it is in replacement of free school meals or free welfare milk.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the basis on which the assumption is made that take-up of family credit will be 20 per cent. higher than take-up of family income supplement.

Mr. Scott: The assumption reflects that used in the technical annex to the White Paper "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9691). Because family credit is a more generous benefit than family income supplement and will go to many more families we expect it to become much better known. There will also be extensive advertising and other publicity when the new scheme starts, as part of our communications strategy. Overall, therefore, potential claimants should become more aware of family credit and the generally higher levels of benefit which are payable.

Passported Benefits

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings he expects to make from the non-payment of passported benefits with bridging allowance.

Mr. Scott: A person who would have been entitled to income support, and so to passported benefits, but for the proposed withdrawal of general entitlement from 16 and 17-year-olds would be entitled to those benefits on low income grounds while receiving a bridging allowance. There would therefore be no savings for this reason.

Child Benefit

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings he expects to make from paying child benefit rather than income support to school leavers living at home.

Mr. Scott: The saving on income support will be around £84 million in a full year, net of the higher costs of child benefit and child dependency additions.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many recipients of housing benefit will lose benefit owing to the exclusion of emergency alarms from eligible service charges; and what savings will accrue from this change.

Mr. Portillo: The draft regulations for the reformed housing benefit scheme ensure, in line with current policy, that housing benefit will be available to help with the costs of alarm systems where they are provided in accommodation which is particularly suitable for and occupied by elderly, sick or disabled people. Our guidance to local authorities on the current housing benefit scheme makes it clear that housing benefit should only meet the cost of accommodation-related, as opposed to purely personal services. Accordingly we would not expect any loss in benefit, or expenditure savings where local authorities have followed that guidance.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people lost all entitlement to housing benefit as a result of changes in tapers in each year from 1982 to 1986.

Mr. Portillo: We do not have separate figures for loss of entitlement through taper changes where other changes were made to the housing benefit scheme. The table shows the numbers estimated to lose all entitlement as a result of changes to the housing benefit scheme between 1983 and 1985; there were no taper changes in 1982 or 1986. The numbers shown should not necessarily be regarded as cumulative.

Housing benefit: Households losing all entitlement 1983-1985
Great Britain thousands

April 1983 taper change	April and November 1984 changes to tapers, minimum and child's needs allowance[1]	November 1985 rate taper change[2]
400	500	450

[1] The figures include those affected by the non-dependant deduction changes.

[2] The figures refer to rate rebates only; some households may still have received assistance with rents.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are expected to lose entitlement to housing benefit as a result of changes made in 1987.

Mr. Portillo: An estimated 110,000 households lost all entitlement to a rent rebate or allowance in April 1987 as a result of the increase in the rent taper from 29 per cent. to 33 per cent. A significant proportion will still qualify for a rate rebate.

Single Childless People

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the most recent figures for the numbers of single childless people under 25 years drawing the householder rate of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 4 November.

Widows

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many widows are expected to lose benefit by the payment of a lump sum instead of weekly widow's allowance; and what the savings will be in a full year.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that in 1988-89 about 1,000 widows will receive the widow's payment of £1,000 who would under the current scheme have been entitled only to widow's allowance for 26 weeks at £57·65 a week, without a succeeding benefit. Because of other alterations in the structure of widows' benefits, a further group of younger widows without dependent children—estimated at about 2,000 — will receive widow's payment only whereas under the current scheme they would have received weekly benefits. The extent of loss, as compared with the current scheme, will depend on the widow's tax position and her age. The changes in widows' benefits will cost in total an additional £24 million in the first year but savings will accrue thereafter, rising to some £120 million at November 1985 prices by 2033-34. It is not possible to isolate the expenditure effects of the replacement of the widow's allowance from the wider effect of structural changes.

Board and Lodging Allowances

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when allowances for ordinary board and lodgings were last increased; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Supplementary benefit personal allowances for people living in ordinary board and lodging accommodation were last increased in April this year at the same time as the general uprating of benefits. Supplementary benefit, for the cost of board and lodging, increases to meet any rise in charges provided they do not exceed limits introduced in April 1985. The limits range from £45 to £70 a week depending on the area in which the accommodation is situated.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking, following the commissioner's decision in the Clarke case, to ensure that severe disablement allowance is paid as from 22 December 1984 to women who would have qualified for non-contributory invalidity pension but for the household duties test.

Mr. Scott: In the light of the judgment by the European Court of Justice, and the subsequent decision by the Social Security Commissioner on Mrs. Clarke's claim to severe disablement allowance, we estimate that about 3,400 other women who claimed SDA in the transitional period from non-contributory invalidity pension may be affected by the court's judgment. All of them are being identified from departmental records and we will write soon to those who may be entitled, to let them know that we are aware of their claim. It will be necessary to examine each case individually to establish the precise entitlement: about one third of the women involved may since have been awarded SDA on other grounds—or other benefits—which will affect what extra is now payable as arrears or current benefit. It may be some months before the process is completed in all cases.

Computer Network

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Service if he will make a statement on his plans to put out to contract the design, programming and operation of a combined social security computer network; which companies have progressed to tender stage; and how many of these are United Kingdom-based companies.

Mr. Portillo: Design and programming work in some areas is already being done by contractors, working alongside civil servants. I have no present plans to extend this or to put operations work out to contract.

Electronic Data Systems

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy not to enter into any contract for computer operations with Electronic Data Systems.

Mr. Portillo: There are no contractual arrangements with Electronic Data Systems pending or in prospect.

Computer Systems (Training)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken to ensure that his Department's staff are sufficiently trained to enable them to operate the computer systems envisaged in the operational strategy.

Mr. Portillo: The Department provides a wide range of training courses for its computer staff engaged on both operations and development work. Plans for training the future users of the various operational strategy systems are currently being prepared.

Disability Premium

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will ensure that the new disability premium is set at a level to guarantee that all dialysis patients on supplementary benefit and currently receiving a heating, bathing and diet allowance totalling £18 a week will continue to receive at least the same amount in total benefit.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend announced on 27 October at columns 179-81 that the new disability premium will be set at £13·05 for a single person and £18·60 for a couple. Those claimants whose entitlement is less than their current benefit entitlement at the point of change will have their existing benefit level maintained.

Private Residential Establishments and Nursing Homes

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide figures to show the total funding through his Department of private residential establishments and nursing homes by local authorities in Wales for each of the last five years and the estimates for 1987.

Mr. Portillo: The Department does not directly fund private residential care or nursing homes but people in these homes can claim supplementary benefit to help meet their fees if they have insufficient resources of their own. Information on the amount of benefit paid to people in homes in Wales is not available.

Afro-Caribbeans (Mental Institutions)

Mr. Randall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what actions he intends to take over the MIND report which indicates that a disproportionate number of Afro-Caribbeans are held in Britain's mental institutions.

Mrs. Currie: I am grateful for this report, which officials will study with great care, together with other relevant information bearing on psychiatric services provided to ethnic minorities, which were discussed last month by the Department's mental illness research liaison group.

Health Authorities (Financial Assistance)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total of the additional funds which he made available to health authorities to assist them with pay rises in the current financial year; when the payments were made; and if he will publish a list of the authorities and amounts concerned.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend the Member for Sutton Coldfield (Mr. Fowler) announced on 23 April 1987 that the Government were providing an additional £264 million for the hospital and community health services in England to help meet the cost in 1987-88 of the pay review body awards for doctors, dentists, nurses, midwives and the professions allied to medicine. The additional funds were allocated as follows:

Regional Health Authorities	£ million
Northern	16·7
Yorkshire	18·8
Trent	23·2
East Anglian	9·8
North West Thames	18·8
North East Thames	23·8
South East Thames	20·9
South West Thames	16·9
Wessex	13·9
Oxford	10·9
South Western	16·4
West Midlands	26·6
Mersey	13·5
North Western	22·9
RHA Total	253·1
Special Health Authorities and others	10·9
Grand Total	264·0

It was for each region to determine how the funds should be allocated to their districts.

Payments (Credit Transfers)

Mr. Butterfill asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to offer payment by credit transfer to retirement pensioners and child benefit recipients.

Mr. Scott: The issue of invitations to retirement pensioners and child benefit recipients to consider the advantages of payment by credit transfer, which was suspended in 1984, is to be resumed. Invitations to retirement pensioners will recommence this month and to child benefit recipients in January 1988.

Benefits

Mr. Blunkett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside about the case of Mr. and Mrs. Ellis of 21 Valentine crescent, Sheffield; and what assessment he has made of the implications of this case for his policy of reducing dependency on the state.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer, 29 October 1987]: The hon. Member wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 2 September and 14 September, and to my hon. Friend the Minister of State on 23 September. I replied to those letters on 29 September, and explained that supplementary benefit is not designed for full-time students, such as Mr. Ellis, who have withdrawn from the employment field to embark on a course of study, nor is it intended for people such as Mrs. Ellis, whose contact with the employment field has been less than six months. These principles are consistent with the Government's policy of reducing dependency on the state.

People receiving a Manpower Services Commission training allowance are not required to be available for work as a condition for receiving supplementary benefit. If Mr. Ellis were accepted for a course of study which was sponsored by MSC, his income would be adequate for his family because he would receive an MSC training allowance which would be topped-up by supplementary benefit if necessary. There are several MSC-sponsored computer courses in the Sheffield area.

SCOTLAND

Parliament Act

Mr. Menzies Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of convictions in Scottish courts for contraventions of the Parliament Act in the last three years for which such information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

Sexual Offences (Evidence)

Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate when he will make proposals to amend the law of evidence in Scotland in relation to the prosecution of sexual assaults; and what further consultations he proposes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no immediate plans for further change. However, the Scottish Law Commission is considering the law of evidence in criminal proceedings. In particular my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate who has ministerial responsibility for the law of evidence, has asked the commission to consider what reforms might be made to lessen the burden of giving evidence by witnesses who are considered to be particularly vulnerable, such as children.

In accordance with its normal procedure the commission will in due course produce a consultative memorandum providing an opportunity for those interested in this matter to give their views.

Tourism

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is satisfied with the existing rules and procedures adopted by the relevant local authorities and other statutory bodies interested in the application and development of a coherent valid signposting policy for tourism in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Following discussions with the Scottish Tourist Board and other interested bodies, the Scottish Development Department issued circulars (numbered 17/83, 29/85 and 29/86) which set out the criteria for tourist signs and the procedures to be followed by applicants for signs. The Department, in consultation with tourist interests and local roads authorities, continues to monitor the effects of existing policies and to examine the merits of further innovations. In general, I am satisfied that the procedures are working well.

Forestry

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to provide for a statutory consultation procedure in relation to applications to the Forestry Commission for planting approval under the forestry grant scheme and to require the commission to take account of any observations and representations made by voluntary bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is not persuaded that such legislation is necessary or desirable.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for forestry planting licences in Scotland were objected to by local authorities and other statutory bodies, respectively, in each of the last five years and 1987 to date; and how many were refused as a result.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no system of forestry planting licences. The following table gives the information in relation to applications to the Forestry Commission for grant-aid for planting:

Year	Number of applications objected to	Number of objections from		Decisions taken on these applications
		Local authorities	Other statutory bodies
1982	1	—	1	Approved
1983	2	—	2	1 Refused 1 Approved
1984	7	1	6	4 Refused 3 Approved
1985	5	4	3	3 Refused 2 Approved
1986	1	1	1	Approved
1987 to date	13	9	7	4 Refused 4 Approved 5 Pending

Mr. Buchanan-Smith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications he has received under the forestry grant scheme since the relaxation in March 1986 of policy toward land clearance for afforestation; what area of land is covered by these applications; how many applications have been approved; what area of land is covered by these approvals; and what proportion of the applications and of the approvals are from owners of estates and from farmers farming their own land, respectively.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the period 1 April 1986 to 30 September 1987 the Forestry Commission received 1,448 forestry grant scheme applications in Scotland, covering approximately 147,000 hectares of land. Within that period 1,080 applications were approved, relating to approximately 110,000 hectares. Information about the status of applicants is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Housing

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his legislative proposals following consultation on the document "Scottish Homes."

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A White Paper will be published shortly which will set out the Government's intentions for future housing policy. It is hoped to introduce legislation, in so far as that is necessary, as soon as practicable.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures for house building by the public and private sectors (a) in Scotland, (b) in Glasgow and (c) in Glasgow, Provan.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest figures were published in table 8 of Scottish Development Department statistical bulletin HSIU No. 31, "Housing Trends in Scotland: Quarter ended 31 March 1987," a copy of which is available in the House Library. Information held centrally does not identify areas other than at district council level or their aggregates.

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures for people on housing lists in (a) Glasgow and (b) the constituency of Glasgow, Provan.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 29 October 1987.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what security of tenure existing tenants in Scottish Special Housing Association homes will be given if their homes are sold to private landlords;

(2) if he will make a statement on the effect on Scottish Special Housing Association houses of his private sell-off proposals;

(3) if he will list the categories of municipal housing which Her Majesty's Government do not intend to put on the private market.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has already made it clear that tenants of the Scottish Special Housing Association will remain public sector tenants, with all of the statutory rights which this Government have conferred on such tenants, under the Government's proposals to create a new unified housing development agency for Scotland, Scottish Homes. The Government's proposals for the future development of housing policy will be set out in full in a White Paper which it is intended to publish shortly.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all organisations, voluntary bodies and local authorities which made submissions during the consultation process on Her Majesty's Government's consultative document called "Scottish Homes".

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 26 October, at columns 149-53.

Stonehouse and Law Hospitals

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when the vacancy for an anaesthetist at Stonehouse hospital will be filled; and when the vacancy occurred;

(2) what is the reason for the delay in appointing an anaesthetist at Stonehouse hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Appointments to individual posts are a matter for individual health boards. However, I understand that anaesthetic services at Stonehouse hospital are provided by the division of anaesthetics based at Law hospital, and that there are currently no vacancies in that division.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give assurances that ear, nose and throat facilities will be maintained at Law hospital;

(2) if he will give assurances that the gynaecology ward will not be closed at Stonehouse hospital;

(3) if he will give assurances that ear, nose and throat facilities will be maintained at Stonehouse hospital;

(4) if he will give assurances that the gynaecology ward will not be closed at Law hospital;

(5) if he will give assurances that emergency facilities will be reinstated during the night at Stonehouse hospital as soon as possible.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: These are matters in the first instance for the Lanarkshire health board.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the nurse-to-patient ratio yearly from 1979 at Stonehouse hospital;

(2) if he will give the nurse-to- patient ratio yearly from 1979 at Law hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This specific information requested by the hon. Member is not available centrally, but the following table shows the ratio of the number of whole-time equivalent nurses at 30 September of each year to the average number of occupied beds in the year to 30 September in each case:

Year	Stonehouse hospital	Law hospital
1979	0·8:1	0·8:1
1980	0·8:1	0·8:1
1981	0·9:1	0·8:1
1982	1·0:1	0·9:1
1983	1·1:1	1·0:1
1984	1·1:1	0·9:1

Ambulances

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the roadworthiness and safety of ambulances in Clydesdale constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No such representations have been received.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the number of ambulances in the Clydesdale constituency.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are 12 ambulances at Carluke, four at Douglas and two at Biggar. A further 77 ambulances may carry patients to and from Clydesdale depending on origin destination, vehicle availability and urgency.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of ambulances over (a) three, (b) five and (c) seven years old used in the Clydesdale constituency.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of ambulances in (a) the Tayside health board area and (b) the Dundee district authority area; and how many of these are over (i) three, (ii) five and (iii) seven years old.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Sixty-two ambulances are based in the Tayside health board area, 23 of which are based in the area of the city of Dundee district council. The requested information on the age of ambulances is not available centrally.

A74

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on when the A74 will be upgraded to M74 status.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 26 October to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall). The upgrading will inevitably be a long-term exercise.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of deaths occurring on the A74 annually since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of Deaths
1979	17
1980	8
1981	17
1982	15
1983	13
1984	14
1985	18
1986	23
[1]1987	10

[1] January-October.

Crime Detection

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he is satisfied with the crime detection rate in Scotland;

(2) if he will detail the crime detection rate annually since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The figures are as follows:

Crimes Cleared-up 1979-86, Scotland

Year	Clear-up rate Per cent.
1979	30·0
1980	32·6
1981	31·2
1982	29·8
1983	30·9
1984	30·8
1985	33·6
1986	34·2

I am satisfied that the police are making every effort to maximise the clear-up rate; and I welcome the increase that there has been in each of the past two years.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many crimes of violence were committed against elderly people in the Clydesdale constituency yearly since 1979;

(2) if he will give details of the detention rate of violent crimes against the elderly, yearly since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the number of crimes reported to the police annually since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information, on crimes recorded by the police, is set out in the table.

Crimes recorded by the Police 1979-1986—Scotland

Year	Number
1979	344,680
1980	364,587
1981	408,204
1982	435,081
1983	448,260
1984	474,914
1985	461,970
1986	463,837

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details on the number of convictions for drug abuse in the Clydesdale constituency each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regret that the information requested is not available on a constituency basis.

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give numbers of convictions for drug abuse in Scotland each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information available is given in the table.

Persons with a drugs offence proved: Scotland

Year	Number
1979	1,150
1980	1,155
1981	982
1982	1,373
1983	1,671
1984	2,271
1985	2,660
1986	2,657

Violent Crime

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures the Government are taking to protect the elderly in their homes from violent crime.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Police forces are always ready to advise individual householders about appropriate security measures to reduce the opportunities for this type of crime. Specific measures currently being taken include (a) the campaign to promote neighbourhood watch, which aims to prevent housebreaking and vandalism through improved physical security watchfulness and mutual help within the community; and (b) the national initiative by my Department and the Manpower Services Commission, under the community programme, to promote crime prevention projects including practical improvements in home security for the elderly, the disabled and the disadvantaged.

Privatisation

Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the effect on the Scottish coal industry of his proposals to privatise the electrical industry.

Mr. Lang: The Government are at an early stage in developing proposals for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry in Scotland. The implications for the coal industry in Scotland will be borne closely in mind.

Prison Service

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he plans, in the light of the recent series of crises in the Scottish penal system, to give more disciplinary powers to prison officers; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The punishments which a governor can award to a prisoner found guilty of an offence against prison discipline are laid down in rule 43 of the Prison (Scotland) Rules 1952 (and equivalent rules for young offender institutions and detention centres). The procedures and penalties for offences against prison discipline are kept under review. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to make changes in the powers available to governors.

Abortions

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each health board area the number of abortions undertaken in each year since 1968.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Abortion statistics are published annually in "Scottish Health Statistics". Data from 1968 to 1973 are available only by hospital region and from 1974 to 1985 by health board area. Provisional figures for 1986 are set out in the table:

Abortions by health board of treatment

Health board	Number of abortions
Argyll and Clyde	552
Ayrshire and Arran	521
Borders	—
Dumfries and Galloway	246
Fife	557
Forth Valley	418
Grampian	1,224
Greater Glasgow	1,972
Highland	439
Lanarkshire	496
Lothian	2,022
Tayside	1,080
Islands[1]	22
All Areas	9,549

Contraception

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the breakdown of numbers of individuals receiving contraceptive advice and treatment (a) by contraceptive method and (b) by source of treatment clinic or general practitioner in Scotland for each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 26 October 1987 at columns 114-16.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. McLeish asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are on hospital waiting lists in (a) Fife and (b) Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest information centrally available, which relates to 31 March 1987 and is provisional, shows 5,198 people on waiting lists for hospital in-patient treatment in the Fife health board area and 81,324 in Scotland.

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients in (a) the Tayside health board area and (b) The Dundee district authority area who are in need of operations have been asked to wait due to lack of medical and hospital facilities for more than three months for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Schools

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all organisations, voluntary bodies and local authorities which made submissions during the recent consultation on Her Majesty's Government's proposals on school management.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. We had received some 6,500 submissions by the deadline date of 3 November. The collation and analysis of this material will take a little time.

National Health Service

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the consultative steps he proposes to take, and the organisations he anticipates contacting, in anticipation of publishing the proposed Bill on the Scottish Health Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The discussion document "Primary Health Care: An Agenda for Discussion", which was published in April 1986, was the subject of extensive consultation by my right hon. and learned Friend. The Bill which will be introduced this Session will incorporate measures reflecting the outcome of the consultation. A White Paper to be published shortly will set out that outcome in detail.

Youth Service

Mr. McFall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in the light of the recent increase in the relevant expenditure in England and Wales, he intends to increase Government expenditure on the youth service in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Most public expenditure on the youth service in Scotland is undertaken by local authorities. My right hon. and learned Friend announced the rate support grant settlement for 1988-89 on 21 July. He informed the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on 26 October that within the total rate support grant settlement provision for community education (which includes expenditure on the youth service) would be £50 million. This represents an increase of 20 per cent. over provision made in the current year's settlement.

Rating Reform

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the impact of the proposed community charge on monastic communities whose members have no income, and whose premises include accommodation for guests, workshops, and church buildings as well as accommodation for members of the community.

Mr. Lang: In general, accommodation in monastic communities which forms people's sole or main residence will cease to be subject to rates on 1 April 1989. Other accommodation will remain subject to rates, but rate increases from that date will be pegged to the level of inflation as measured by the retail prices index. Charitable and other reliefs from the remaining rates burden will continue on the present basis. People aged 18 and over who are solely or mainly resident in monastic communities, like other adults, will carry a personal community charge liability. My right hon. and learned Friend is at present considering the position of people in this category in relation to the proposed community charge rebate scheme.

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish an estimate of the numbers of staff that the community charge registration officer will be required to employ in order to complete registration on the community charge register of all adults in the Clackmannan constituency.

Mr. Lang: No. This is a matter for the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the numbers of people in Scotland who will be totally exempt from payment of the poll tax in each of the following categories (a) those aged 18 years whose parents are still in receipt of family allowance, (b) those resident in hospitals or homes, (c) those in prisons and (d) those defined as severely mentally handicapped.

Mr. Lang [holdng answer 26 October 1987]: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no estimate of the numbers of people who will be exempt from community charge liability in 1989-90. At present child benefit is payable in respect of some 2,000 people aged 18 in Scotland. Figures are not available centrally on the number of people solely or mainly resident in hospitals, or in nursing homes, residential care homes and hostels providing an equivalent level of care. The number of inmates in Scottish penal establishments is about 5,500. The number of severely mentally handicapped people in Scotland is about 15,000, many of whom will be cared for in hospitals or in nursing homes, residential care homes and hostels providing an equivalent level of care.

Rates

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average domestic rates bill in the Clackmannan constituency for each year since 1978 in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms showing, in each case, the percentage change between years.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table.

Clackmannan District Council	Average Domestic Rate-Bill £	Percentage Change	1987-88 Prices £	Percentage Change
1978-79	119		242
1979-80	137	15	238	−1
1980-81	168	23	247	3
1981-82	224	33	299	21
1982-83	267	19	333	11
1983-84	278	4	331	0
1984-85	283	2	323	−2
1985-86	319	13	343	6
1986-87	347	9	363	6
1987-88	407	17	407	12

Note: The GDP deflator has been used to convert average rate bills to 1987-88 prices.

Kidney Patients

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many kidney patients with a treatable condition have been rejected by National Health Service hospitals in Dundee in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Suitability for treatment is a matter for the judgment of the clinician concerned. I am not aware of any problem with regard to treatment for kidney patients in Dundee.

Hospitals (Dundee)

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list new policies from his Department in the past eight years as they affect hospitals in Dundee; and if he will give details of the extra resources made available to carry out each initiative.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Guidance to health boards on overall priorities is based on the SHARE report; in addition, the Scottish Home and Health Department issues guidance on specific services from time to time. It is for each health board to determine how this guidance affects hospital services in their area. Resources available to the Health Service in Scotland have been increased in real terms by 26 per cent. since 1979. Tayside health board is the second best financed board in Scotland in relation to the needs of its area.

Tayside Health Board

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the figures for revenue spending for Tayside health board for each of the last eight years at 1987 prices; and what account these figures take of demographic change in addition to inflation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish health authorities revenue equalisation (SHARE) formula—under which financial resources for recurrent spending on hospital and community health services are allocated among individual health boards—takes account of demographic changes as well as a range of other factors. The following table shows Tayside health board's allocation, after adjustment for inflation as measured by the GDP deflator, for each year since 1979-80.

	£ thousand at 1986-87 prices
1979-80	123,067
1980-81	136,055
1981-82	135,204
1982-83	133,266
1983-84	132,831
1984-85	134,342
1985-86	132,340
1986-87	136,123
1987-88	139,633

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out for each year since 1979 what changes have been made in the National Health Service budget for Tayside health board to achieve savings; how much was saved each year by each of those changes; by how much staffing has been cut in each year as a result of those changes and in what grades; and what plans there are for the current year in each of these respects.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In each of the past three years all health boards were asked to introduce efficiency measures which would achieve savings of 1 per cent., 1·5 per cent. and 1·5 per cent. respectively in their recurrent expenditure. Tayside health board has achieved cumulative savings during 1985-86 and 1986-87 of nearly £3 million, and plans to achieve further savings of some £1·6 million this financial year. Boards retain the proceeds of efficiency improvements. No information is held centrally on detailed staffing changes within individual health boards resulting from the introduction of efficiency improvements, although general information on manpower levels is contained in "Scottish Health Statistics", published annually by the information and statistics division of the Common Services Agency. Copies are held in the Library.

Hospital Patients (Statistics)

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the best estimate of the numbers of patients in Dundee hospitals with treatable conditions who have become incurable in the past 12 months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Drug Addicts

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds have been spent in Dundee to rehabilitate drug addicts for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not avilable.

Hypothermia

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Dundee as a proportion of such deaths in Scotland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Death mentioning hypothermia: Dundee city as a percentage of Scotland 1979 to 1986

	Percentage
1979	3·1
1980	4·5
1981	3·1
1982	5·1
1983	6·1
1984	2·8
1985	3·4
1986	3·3

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the number of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Scotland in each year from 1977 to 1987 by monthly total;

(2) if he will give the number of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Lothian region in each year from 1977 to 1986 by monthly total;

(3) if he will give the number of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Edinburgh in each year from 1977 to 1987 by monthly total;

(4) if he will give the number of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Edinburgh, South in each year from 1977 to 1987 by monthly total.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The information is as follows:

Nurses

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of full-time nurses in hospitals in (a) the Tayside health board area and (b) the Dundee district authority area for each year since 1974.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Hospital nursing staff: Full-time employees at September[1]

	Hospital nurses
1974 to 1982	n/a
1983	4,007
1984	4,049
1985	3,988
1986	3,992
1987[2]	4,001

[1] Including qualified, unqualified and learner nurses.

[2] 31 March.

Information on full-time nursing staff pre-1983 is not readily available centrally. Information on nursing staff in Dundee district is not available centrally.

Ward Closures

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a detailed list of hospital wards serving (a) the Tayside health board area and (b) the Dundee district authority area, which have closed due to lack of funds since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Operational management of hospitals is a matter for individual health boards. Temporary bed or ward closures may occur for a variety of reasons but there is no central record which is either comprehensive or detailed.

Doctors

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of full-time doctors in hospitals in (a) the Tayside health board area and (b) the Dundee district authority area for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

	Number
1980	451
1981	475
1982	463
1983	471
1984	481
1985	474
1986	474

The information for 1979 is not available. No separate details are available centrally for Dundee district.

Nurse-Patient Ratios

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the nurse-to-patient ratio for each year since 1979 in (a) the Tayside health board area and (b) the Dundee district authority area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Ratio of Nursing Staff[1] to Average Occupied Hospital Beds 30 September

	Ratio
1979	1·1:1
1980	1·2:1
1981	1·3:1
1982	1·3:1
1983	1·3:1
1984	1·3:1
1985	1·3:1
1986	1·4:1
1987	[2]1·4:1

[1] Includes qualified, unqualified and learner nurses.

[2] 31 March 1987.

The information for Dundee district is not available centrally.

Drug Misuse

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of convictions for (a) drug misuse and (b) drug trafficking in the Dundee area for each year since 1979; and what are the corresponding figures for the rest of Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information available is given in the table.

Persons with a charge proved

	Dundee		Rest of Scotland
	All drugs offences	Supplying, possession with intent to supply	All drugs offences	Supplying, possession with intent to supply
1979	73	na	1,077	na
1980	57	na	1,098	na
1981	64	na	918	na
1982	81	na	1,292	na
1983	94	na	1,577	na
1984	96	na	2,175	na
1985	78	10	2,582	224
1986	85	10	2,572	259

na = Not available. Prior to 1985, offences of supplying and possession with intent to supply were not separately identifiable from other drugs offences in the Scottish Home and Health Department classification of crimes and offences.

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the funding of treatment and rehabilitation facilities for drug misuses for each health board area in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: NHS services for drug misusers are generally provided as part of the usual range of community and hospital-based services. The Government have made substantial increases in resources available to health boards since 1979 and it is for individual health boards to determine the level of expenditure on particular services from within their overall financial allocations.

In 1984 and 1985 in addition the Government provided funds to establish a range of local drug projects run by health boards, local authorities and voluntary bodies in places where drug misuse was prevalent. The support of these projects was the responsibility of the Scottish Office until April this year when this responsibility was devolved to the relevant health boards. The Government recently announced that a further £300,000 per annum was being made available, making the total allocation of funds to individual health boards for 1987-88 specifically for the support of local drug projects as follows:

	£
Greater Glasgow	415,035
Lothian	285,980
Tayside	78,900
Ayrshire and Arran	29,400
Lanarkshire	13,600

Public Expenditure Statistics

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total identifiable allocation of public money made by the Government since 1979 to (a) Edinburgh, (b) Dundee, (c) Aberdeen and (d) Glasgow (i) in total, (ii) per person, (iii) per unemployed person, (iv) per unemployed person aged under 21 years and (v) per retirement pensioner, in each named district; and if he will also express the figures at 1987 prices.

Mr. Lang: The information is not readily available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Identifiable provision for public expenditure by Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh and Glasgow district councils from 1979-80 to 1987-88 is set out in the table.

	Cash prices £ million	1987 prices £ million
Aberdeen	317·452	394·951
Dundee	264·259	326·321
Edinburgh	638·383	774·564
Glasgow	1,918·903	2,359·128

Notes:

(1) The table includes provision by way of housing capital allocations, general services capital allocations, housing support grant and current expenditure guidelines.

(2) Expenditure financed from capital receipts is included in the provision for housing capital allocations but excluded from the provision for general services capital allocations.

Private Hospital (Clydebank)

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he first heard of Health Care International's proposals for a private hospital in Clydebank; what advice his Department gave to locate in Scotland; and what advice the Scottish Department Agency gave about the development of this project.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1987]: My right hon. and learned Friend first heard of Health Care International's formal proposal to build a private hospital at Clydebank in June 1987 when the company applied to proceed with construction. Under the terms of the Health Services Acts, consideration of such an application depends entirely upon the impact of the proposed development on the National Health Service, on which the Scottish Development Agency was not consulted and offered no advice. Partly in response to the hon. Member's own request for a further note on the impact of the project, the agency did, however, commission an independent study from Coopers and Lybrand on the economic and staffing implications of the project. The agency subsequently sent this to the Scottish Home and Health Department and also, I understand, to the hon. Member.

DEFENCE

European Fighter Aircraft

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated unit cost of the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not our practice to disclose the estimated costs of projects before they enter full development. In the case of collaborative projects, such as EFA, the interests of our international partners must also be borne in mind.

Gulf Forces

Mrs. Mahon asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of the Armilla patrol.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest weekly cost of maintaining a minesweeper force in the Gulf.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not practicable to separate the costs of individual fleet tasks since financial provision for manpower, fuel, supplies, and so on is made to cover the operations of the fleet as a whole.

Nuclear Defence

Mr. Ingram asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the number of times since 1979 that he has provided the Select Committee on Defence with confidential information relating to Britain's nuclear defence capacity.

Mr. Ian Stewart: This information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Armilla Patrol

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in view of the five-day journey time and lack of toilet and other facilities aboard Hercules aircraft, he will arrange for crews in the Armilla patrol to be flown to leave in the United Kingdom aboard speedier aircraft with better facilities.

Mr. Ian Stewart: To date, crews of warships deployed on the Armilla patrol have generally returned to the United Kingdom either with their ships or by commercial airline.

Over the Christmas leave period we plan to use VC10s or Tristars of the RAF air transport force for this purpose. There is at present a regular weekly flight by RAF Hercules to the Gulf area, carrying freight on the outward journey. These aircraft are used to carry small numbers of service men to and from the Gulf when necessary. Travel by Hercules involves a two-day journey made up of two eight-hour flying legs with an overnight stay in Cyprus.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in view of the paucity of local facilities for rest and recreation, he will provide funds to improve furnishings and fittings in ratings mess-rooms aboard the minesweepers and other vessels of the Armilla patrol.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Mess decks in vessels serving with the Armilla patrol are furnished in accordance with standards applying to, and reflecting the operational and safety requirements of, the fleet as a whole.

Within these limitations, we will continue to seek ways of reducing the particular discomforts of this task. For instance, as I told the House on 28 October at column 312, we are despatching additional air conditioning units to HMS Abdiel.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will arrange for crews of the minesweepers, Royal Fleet Auxiliary and support vessels attached to the Armilla patrol to have the same opportunities for rest and recreation in Mombasa as the crews of other Armilla patrol ships.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Unlike the destroyers and frigates of the Armilla patrol, which operate on a rotational basis allowing one to be detached for recreation and maintenance visits to Mombasa or elsewhere, the mine counter-measures vessels and support vessels are all for the time being required to remain continuously in the area of the Gulf. It is, therefore, not possible to detach them for recreation and maintenance visits elsewhere. We endeavour to arrange, at appropriate intervals, rest and recreation visits for these vessels to ports in the area of the Gulf as operational circumstances permit. We are in the course of making arrangements for a period of mid-tour leave for the naval personnel on the MCMVs and support vessels.

Overseas Allowance

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Defence why the local overseas allowance for Royal Navy crews in the Gulf has been reduced by 10 per cent.; and whether he will reinstate this cost as from the operative date of 1 October.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Seagoing local overseas allowance, which is designed to make up, where necessary, the estimated difference between the cost of essential expenditure incurred by naval personnel when ashore abroad and ashore in the United Kingdom, was reduced by 12 per cent. in sterling in the Gulf area with effect from 1 October 1987 because the basket of local currencies, from which the allowance is calculated, depreciated relative to the pound sterling in which the allowance is paid. The purchasing power of the allowance is therefore maintained at the same level.

The SLOA rates are reviewed on a twice-yearly basis and may go up or down depending on the position of the relevant exchange rates at the time of the review. The next adjustment, if any, will be made on 1 April 1988.

Household Brigade

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances officers of the Household Brigade are permitted to spend three days per week hunting in the winter and three days per week playing polo in the summer; and what implications this practice has for the proper supervision by an officer of his duties.

Mr. Freeman: Officers in the Household Cavalry have no special privileges in respect of leave or time off duty. Leave entitlement for Army officers is 42 days per annum (including Saturdays and Sundays) and is subject to approval by the relevant commanding officer. Officers may engage in hunting and polo only to the extent that it is consistent with the proper performance of their military duties. These pursuits develop equestrian skills.

WALES

National Museum

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when officers of the national museum of Wales asked Dr. Roderick Bowen, QC to undertake the inquiry into allegations of professional misconduct in the department of art; when these instructions were confirmed to him in writing; when members of staff of the national museum were requested to submit their statements of complaint; and what disciplinary action was taken subsequently with respect to the writer of the unauthorised letter to the president of the national museum, dated 16 September 1982, alleging professional misconduct;

(2) what were the allegations of professional misconduct in the department of art of the national museum of Wales as a result of which a senior member of its council conducted an inquiry in 1982; and when the keeper of the department of art was provided with them in writing;

(3) when the letter of intent relating to the loan of exhibits to Japan by the national museum of Wales was first received by the then acting director; when this letter was first received by the president; when the draft contract was first received by the officers; and when the treasurer undertook to check out the financial arrangements proposed in that draft contract;

(4) when the officers of the national museum of Wales gave their approval for preliminary negotiations to be undertaken by the keeper of art for the loan of exhibits to Japan; when the officers reported their action to the council of the national museum and obtained that body's approval; when the report by the keeper of art on the 1986 fund-raising exhibition in the far east and the attached draft agreements was submitted to the council for its consideration; and who undertook the technical examinations of the venues in Japan on whose judgment the council based its decision to approve the loan.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Under the terms of the museum's royal charter, these are matters for which the council has direct management responsibility. I suggest the hon. Gentleman writes to the director.

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the staffing recommendations of his Department's staff inspectors for the department of art of the national museum of Wales in July 1983; and at what dates each of the new posts recommended were first filled.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office staff inspectors recommended certain grading adjustments and other changes, the net effect of which would have been an increase in the complement of the department of art by one conservator grade E, one half (full-time equivalent) conservator grade G/F. The technician III post also recommended already existed. After taking account of the overall staffing situation the museum decided against implementing these recommendations.

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Wales which consultants were employed to review the functions and management structure of the department of art of the national museum of Wales in 1986; what previous experience those consultants had of museums; and how much of their fees was met from the grant-in-aid.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Touche Ross and Co was appointed by the national museum of Wales which considered it qualified to conduct this inquiry. The fees were paid from grant-in-aid.

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on why the national museum of Wales purchased advertising space in the June 1986 issues of The Burlington Magazine, Apollo and the Museums Bulletin to apologise for any defamation that may have accrued to its former keeper of art; how much these advertisements cost; and, in terminating his services by mutual agreement, whether any funds were expended beyond a normal severance payment.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My information is that the advertisements were of an explanatory nature and were placed as part of the severance agreement with the former keeper of art. The question of their cost should be put to the museum authorities. The severance payment comprised various moneys to which the former keeper of art had a contractual entitlement, a payment for the completion of research already begun and a £3,155 ex-gratia payment to facilitate the mutual termination of his employment.

Food (Radioactivity)

Mr. Martyn Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if there are any regular checks made for radioactivity in human foodstuffs (a) in north Wales and (b) in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: There is regular monitoring of the terrestrial and aquatic environment designed to assess the impact of the discharges from the two nuclear power stations in north Wales.

In addition, since the Chernobyl accident, a general monitoring programme covering agricultural produce has been undertaken throughout Wales. Produce tested includes milk and milk products, cereals, fruit, vegetables and meat.

Ambulances (Emergency Response Times)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average waiting time for an ambulance responding to an emergency call in (a) rural areas and (b) urban areas; what arrangements exist for monitoring response times; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The following table, however, gives details of the response time in minutes for 50 per cent. and 95 per cent. of calls respectively for each district health authority in 1986.

	50 per cent. of calls were responded to within (minutes)	95 per cent. of calls were responded to within (minutes)
Clwyd	6	17
East Dyfed	8	24
Pembrokeshire	9	26
Gwent	6	15
Gwynedd	7	20
Mid Glamorgan	10	22
Powys	11	27
South Glamorgan	7	14
West Glamorgan	7	19

School Meals

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average price of a school meal charged by each of the education authorities in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information on the prices of fixed price meals, as supplied by local authorities in September 1987, is as follows:

Welsh counties	Primary schools	Secondary schools
Clwyd	65p	70p
Dyfed	70p	70p
Gwent	60p	60p
Gwynedd	60p	65p
Mid Glamorgan	62p	83p
Powys	65p	75p
South Glamorgan	60p	65p
West Glamorgan	65p	[1]

[1] Fixed price meals are not applicable—a cafeteria service is offered.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many children are receiving free school meals in each of the education authorities in Wales, expressed as a percentage of the total number of children taking school meals.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information obtained from a census on a specified day in September 1986 is as follows:

	Per cent.
Clwyd	34·8
Dyfed	28·8
Gwent	45·1
Mid Glamorgan	45·4
Powys	23·7
South Glamorgan	53·9
West Glamorgan	43·4

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of posts in his Department held by women, listed by grade, in each of the years since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) on 23 July 1987, at column 393.

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing unemployed by (a) age group and (b) sex in Wales for the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Walker: Figures are published quarterly in the labour market data supplement of the Employment Gazette, those for July 1987 appearing in table 2.6 in the September issue.

Primary Schools

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total number of pupils on school rolls and the pupil to teacher ratio in primary schools in Wales for each year since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

	Total number of pupils on roll in primary schools	Pupil-teacher ratio within schools
1978-79[1]	303,396	22·0
1979-80	295,227	21·9
1980-81	283,435	21·7
1981-82	273,202	21·9
1982-83	262,569	21·8
1983-84	258,642	21·6
1984-85	257,295	21·9
1985-86	256,798	22·1
1986-87	257,999	22·1

[1] At January each year.

Welsh Language

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the inclusion of Welsh as a foundation subject in the proposed core curriculum.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have received a total of 173 representations which refer to the position of Welsh within the national curriculum, of which 126 favour the inclusion of Welsh as a foundation subject throughout Wales.

Hospital Services

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of each district health authority which has contractual arrangements with a private non-National Health Service hospital to provide acute medical services, showing (a) the hospital with which a contract is made, (b) the number of patients treated by that hospital during 1986-87, (c) the total amount spent by the district health authority on treatment under the contract during 1986-87 and (d) the amount of (c) expressed as a percentage of the district health authority's overall budget for 1986-87.

Mr. Grist: I am not aware from the statistical returns submitted to the Department to date of any district health authority in Wales which has contractual arrangements with a private non-National Health Service hospital to provide acute medical services.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of contracts agreed by each district health authority for the following services (a) ambulances, (b) gardening, (c) laboratories, (d) portering, (e) hospital shops, (f) window cleaning, (g) pharmacy and (h) telephones; and if he will give the estimated annual savings in each case.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of all new contracts awarded since 31

December 1986 by each district health authority by hospital for (a) portering, (b) catering, (c) laundry, (d) cleaning and (e) other ancillary work; and if he will give the estimated annual savings for each contract awarded.

Mr. Grist: The information requested in respect of new contracts awarded by district health authorities in Wales for catering, laundry and cleaning services is given in the following table. Details of contracts relating to portering and other ancillary work are not held centrally.

New contracts awarded since 31 December 1986

District health authority and details of contract	Estimated savings (£) per annum
Gwynedd
Domestic Contract: Llandudno hospital; in-house; three years from 5 July 1987	58,000

No contracts have yet been awarded by Clwyd, East Dyfed and South Glamorgan district health authorities. The information given above does not include services currently out to tender for which contracts have not yet been awarded.

Shrewsbury-Aberystwyth (Road Link)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals concerning the construction of an east-west road link from Shrewsbury to Aberystwyth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There is already a trunk road link between Shrewsbury and Aberystwyth on which the following improvements are planned:

A458 Welshpool to English Border
A483 Welshpool Relief Roads
A470 Llanidloes Bypass
A470 Diversion East of Llangurig to Wern Villa
A44 — A470 Improvement of Junction South of Llangurig

Hospital Beds

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many consultant hospital beds there were in Wales in each of the years 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Grist: The following table gives the average number of daily available beds in National Health Service hospitals in Wales. These figures exclude maternity, medical and dental beds allocated to general practitioners.

Financial year ended 31 March	Average number of available beds
1985	21,120
1986	20,854
1987	20,430

Rainfall

Mr. Alan W. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the information available to him on the occasions in the last 20 years in which over 3 in. of rainfall fell in Dyfed inside 24 hours.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have been asked to reply.

There were 22 occasions during the past 20 years when a day's rainfall of 75 mm (3 in.) or more was recorded at stations recognised by the Meteorological Office in Dyfed, as listed:

ENERGY

Woolley and Redbrook Collieries

Mr. Illsley asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what has been the total amount of investment spent at British Coal's Woolley colliery since (a) 1974, (b) 1980 and (c) 1985;

(2) what is the total amount of investment spent by British Coal on the coal preparation and washing facility at its Woolley complex;

(3) in the event of the closure of British Coal's Woolley and Redbrook collieries, to what extent capital repayments and interest charges from those collieries will fail be to carried by other collieries;

(4) what was the total amount of investments spent at British Coal's Redbrook colliery since (a) 1974, (b) 1980 and (c) 1985.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Energy Efficiency Year

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many inquiries Government bodies received as a result of their public awareness campaigns during Energy Efficiency Year; what savings accrued to Government bodies as a result of changes in their own practice promoted because of Energy Efficiency Year; and what was the cost to Government bodies of having an Energy Efficiency Year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department and others received numerous inquiries, but no precise record was kept of the number; however, my Department received more than 120,000 requests for Monergy information packs and distributed some 2 million copies of Monergy News magazine.

The heating costs of the Government's civil estate reduced by £8 million (from £34 million to £26 million) in July 1986-June 1987 by comparison with the preceding 12 months. Part of this reduction was the result of increased energy efficiency but it is not possible to say how much.

Expenditure by my Department on energy efficiency advertising and promotional and marketing activity during Energy Efficiency Year was about £12 million.

Mersey Barrage

Mr. Fearn asked the Secretary of State for Energy what progress is being made in the study connected with the Mersey barrage.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Mersey barrage company is progressing its examination of the technical and economic viability of the scheme, its employment potential and its effect on the environment.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Northern Development Company

Mr. Cran asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the detailed objectives of the Northern Development Company; and what progress in quantifiable terms has been made in reaching these.

Mr. Atkins: This is the first full year of operation of the Northern Development Company, a partnership of regional self-help between industry and commerce, the local authorities and the regional TUC. Its objectives are to promote and market the region, and assist its economic development by encouraging enterprise. It subsumes the inward investment promotion activities of the former North of England Development Council. It is too early to quantify results, but progress to date has been encouraging.

Scaffolding Material

Mr. Warren asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will consult the British Steel Corporation as to whether problems exist in the production of scaffolding materials as a result of EEC quota restrictions.

Mr. Atkins: Steel for the production of scaffolding is not covered by EC quota restrictions. The BSC has reported that demand for scaffolding has been unusually high in recent weeks, partly as a result of repairs to storm damage, but it has been able to meet all orders to it. If my hon. Friend is aware of particular difficulties, I would be very willing to ask the BSC to look into them.

Upholstered Furniture

Mr. French asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement concerning the responses he has received to Department's draft code of practice regarding the ignition resistance of upholstered furniture; and when he expects his final proposals to be operative.

Mr. Maude: The Department's code of practice proposals on the ignition resistance of upholstered furniture produced a substantial amount of corrrespondence. The majority of the replies agree with the principle of the code of practice approach though there are many suggestions for differences of detail and of timing. My officials are currently discussing the responses with officials of the Home Office. I expect to be in a position to make a further statement during the next month and to circulate draft regulations for consultation early in the new year.

Hardwood and Softwood Timber Imports

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the volume and value of imports of hardwood and softwood timber, respectively, in 1985, 1986 and 1987 to date, what was the equivalent figures for domestic production intended for use in the home market; and what each figure represents as a proportion of domestic consumption.

Mr. Atkins: The available information is in the following table:

Imports and domestic production for home market of hard and soft woods

Nationalised Industries (Monopolies and Mergers Commission)

Mr. Page asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in implementing the rolling programme of references of nationalised industries to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: During the past 12 months reports have been published on the Post Office's procurement activities, the maintenance activities of the British Waterways Board, the Central Electricity Generating Board's transmission of electricity and British Rail's Network Southeast

On 7 September I announced a further programme of references of nationalised industries. The first reference in the programme, that of the Welsh water authority, was made on that date. I have today sent to the MMC the reference relating to the costs and efficiency of and the service provided by the Post Office's counter services at Crown offices. In due course I propose to make further references concerning the London Underground and British Coal.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Opportunities Officers

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget which is allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to his departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act, and (f) the action taken to facilitate jobshare, part-time working and parental leave.

Mrs. Rumbold: The departmental equal opportunity officer spends about 25 per cent. of her time on work relating to equal opportunities. The equal opportunity officer is also the departmental disabled persons officer, and has other personnel management responsibilities including the management of the Department's pay budget. No specific part of the departmental budget is allocated to equal opportunities.

The equal opportunity officer meets her counterparts in other Departments at the annual meeting arranged by the office of the Minister for the Civil Service, and on other occasions throughout the year. No specific guidelines have been issued to the officer, or to the departmental training officer, on the operation of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act. All requests for part-time work or job-sharing are considered sympathetically. Special leave may be granted to enable staff to cope with domestic problems.

Education Costs

Mr. Boswell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will estimate for primary and secondary maintained schools in England, respectively, the current average annual cost of education, including free school transport, per pupil; and also whether he will tabulate these figures for convenient size bands of schools.

Mr. Dunn: The latest available estimate of the current cost per school pupil may be made from local authority returns of 1987-88 budgeted expenditure to the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy as follows:

Estimated Expenditure[1] per pupil 1987-88

	Nursery and primary schools[2] £	Secondary schools £
Net recurrent institutional expenditure[3]	916	1,403
Home to School Transport	7	33
Total	923	1,436

[1] At November 1986 prices.

[2] Separate figures for primary schools are not available.

[3] Includes the cost of salaries and wages, premises running costs and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central services or the financing costs of capital expenditure.

Information on which to base the costs of different sizes of schools is not available.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) pursuant to the answer of 29 October, how he has arrived at the figure of 720,000 surplus secondary school places; and if he will take steps to obtain the figures for each local authority;

(2) pursuant to the answer of 29 October, how he has arrived at the figure of 710,000 surplus primary school places; and if he will take steps to obtain the figures for each local authority.

Mr. Dunn: The figures were calculated by comparing the school population at January 1987 with the estimated physical capacity of maintained schools in England. It is the responsibility of individual LEAs to assess whether there is spare capacity in the schools in their area, and if necessary to make proposals for school reorganisation aimed at removing surplus places. My right hon. Friend therefore has no plans to seek information on the number of surplus places within each authority.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Devlin asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has made a decision on the siting of the Teesside city technology college; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A final decision has not been taken on the location of the proposed Teesside city technology college. A number of possible sites are being investigated on behalf of prospective sponsors.

Mr. Devlin asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made with raising the finance from private sources needed to put up the Teesside city technology college; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Discussions with several prospective sponsors of a Teesside CTC have taken place and my right hon. Friend has had a number of firm indications of support. He is confident that the necessary private sector finance will be available.

Schools (Cornwall)

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list, for Cornwall, information available to him by date and estimated cost of remedy, on schools that (a) date from the 19th century, (b) still have outside toilets and (c) will not, in their present condition, meet the 1981 School Premises Regulations by 1991.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not collect this information.

PRIME MINISTER

Visits

Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister when she next proposes to pay an official visit to Wales.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Civil Service (Parliamentary Questions)

Mr. Nelson asked the Prime Minister if, in the light of the recent changes announced by her regarding the management of the Civil Service, she will list those matters relating to the Civil Service about which parliamentary questions will now be answered by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and by the Minister of State, Privy Council Office, respectively.

The Prime Minister: The new allocation of functions previously undertaken by the Management and Personnel Office is set out in note 3 to the press notice issued from No. 10 Downing street on 7 August, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Treasury Ministers will answer questions on the matters listed in the column headed "Treasury", and the Minister of State, Privy Council Office will answer on the matters listed in the column headed "Cabinet Office". Treasury Ministers will in addition continue to answer questions on Civil Service matters transferred to the Treasury in 1981, including manpower, pay, allowances and superannuation.

Plutonium

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister (1) on what date British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. was given approval to export weapons grade plutonium subject to non-proliferation safeguards; how Her Majesty's Government propose to ensure that such safeguards are adhered to; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what contracts for the export by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. of weapons grade plutonium, involving which countries, are currently awaiting Her Majesty's Government's approval; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 27 October 1987 at column 217.

Information on individual contracts entered into under the guidelines laid down is, in the normal way, commercially confidential.

Written Answers

Mr. William Ross asked the Prime Minister what information she has as to the number and percentage of written parliamentary questions which are answered on the day on which right hon. and hon. Members request such answers; and what is the same information for answers from each responsible Cabinet Minister.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. F. D. Hamilton

Sir Ian Lloyd asked the Prime Minister whether she has made any further representations directly to President Chissano of Mozambique about the incarceration of Mr. Findlay Dion Hamilton, a British subject, in a Mozambique gaol since 1982; and with what result.

The Prime Minister: I made representations about Mr. Hamilton to the then president of Mozambique in 1983. We have subsequently raised his case with the Mozambique authorities on several occasions. Most recently, my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office raised the case with President Chissano during his visit to London in May.

The president undertook to try to help, but indicated that it was a matter for decision by the Council of Ministers.

There have been no further developments.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Abortion

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of convictions in England and Wales for procuring an illegal abortion in each year since 1957.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the table. Details of proceedings for procuring an illegal abortion are published annually in tables S1.1(A) and S2.1(A) of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, Vols, 1 and 2", under offence classification 14.

Remand Centres

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the establishment of a privately managed remand centre.

Mr. John Patten: We are considering the fourth Report of the Home Affairs Committee on contract provision of prisons, in the light of my noble Friend's recent visit to the United States, in the course of which he looked at several private management custodial facilities. Our conclusions will be announced as soon as possible.

Strip Searches

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were strip searched at immigration points in 1987, 1986 and 1985; whether individuals have any right of appeal when a strip search is proposed; and whether any code of practice exists in relation to these strip searches.

Mr. Renton: Paragraph 4(3) of schedule 2 to the Immigration Act 1971 provides that an immigration officer may search the baggage and person of passengers seeking entry to ascertain whether they are carrying relevant documents, but no woman or girl may be searched except by a woman. It would be very unusual for a strip search to be necessary for this purpose, and there is no record of any search of this kind having taken place at immigration control points in the years in question.

Iranian and Libyan Nationals

Mr. Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to protect leading members of the Iranian community living in the United Kingdom and known to be opposed to the Khomeini regime, and of the Libyan community known to be opposed to the Gaddafi regime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Members of the Iranian and Libyan communities living in the United Kingdom who are believed, or consider themselves, to be at risk are seen by the police and given advice about their personal security.

Police Station (Falmouth)

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the provision of Falmouth with a police station; and what is the earliest date by which one can be provided.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A bid for approval to plan a new police station at Falmouth was submitted to the Home Office in 1985 by the Devon and Cornwall police authority, but the application was not approved.

Last July, the authority raised again with the Department the question of a new police station, but it was told that we did not expect to be able to invite new bids for major police building schemes until May 1988. If the authority puts forward a bid then, it will be considered with the bids received from other authorities. If its bid is successful, the authority will be authorised to draw up detailed plans, but I cannot say at this stage when building work would commence.

Police Establishments

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's approved police establishment for Devon and Cornwall; what is the estimate of the police authority of the necessary establishment; and what proposals exist to increase police establishment in Devon and Cornwall.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The authorised police establishment of the Devon and Cornwall constabulary is 2,794. The Devon and Cornwall police authority applied in June 1986 for increases totalling 137 police posts to be implemented over three financial years; 37 of these have so far been approved. We are giving further consideration to the 33 police posts remaining from the police authority's application for additional posts in the present financial year.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will amend the appropriate regulations to enable pensioners living in multi-storey accommodation, who are visited by wardens, to receive concessionary television licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. Pensioners living in multi-storey accommodation may already qualify for the concessionary accommodation for residential care television licence, provided that accommodation satisfies all the relevant criteria set out in the Wireless Telegraphy (Broadcast Charges and Exemption) Regulations 1984.

Polling Booths

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend section 18 of the Representation of the People Act 1983, as amended by the Representation of the People Act 1985, so as to make it mandatory for district councils and London borough councils to designate only places which are accessible to disabled electors as polling booths; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Since 1 October 1985 councils of districts or London boroughs in England and Wales have been required, so far as is reasonable and practicable, to designate as polling places only such places as are accessible to the disabled. Moreover, a permanently disabled voter may apply in advance to vote by post or by a proxy. In these circumstances, an alternative course being available, we have no plans for further legislation on this subject.

Extradition

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests for the extradition of persons from the Republic of Ireland to England and Wales have been made in the years 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 to date; of these, how many in each year were for persons alleged to be concerned in terrorist crime; and in each category and year how many of the requests were (a) granted and (b) refused.

Mr. Hurd: The return of fugitives to and from the Republic of Ireland takes place by means of individual warrants of arrest. The table provides fugitives for the number of persons who were the subject of such warrants from England and Wales for the years 1982 to 1986. Only one request was in respect of terrorist offences; this related to Evelyn Glenholmes, and was unsuccessful. One other request was refused on technical grounds during this period. In some cases, warrants could not be executed since the fugitive was at the time serving a prison sentence in the Republic or could not be traced.

Request made by England and Wales for return of persons from the Republic of Ireland under the Backing of Warrants (Republic of Ireland) Act 1965

Probation Officers

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation officers were employed by local authorities in Wales in each of the years 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. John Patten: The number of probation officers employed by probation committees in Wales at the end of June in each of the three years was as follows:

Year	Number of probation officers
1985	307
1986	313
1987	322

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Marconi

Mr. Canavan asked the Attorney-General whether he will make a statement about the progress of the investigation by his Department's police into the Marconi company about possible fraudulent dealings with his Department.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 28 October.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 3 November 1987]: The figures are as follows:

Year	Total £000
1982-83	—
1983-84	1,258
1984-85	—
1985-86	6,756
1986-87	—

This expenditure relates to the costs of advertising sales of Government shareholdings, which are financed from the proceeds of such share sales. The information about expenditure with individual newspapers is commercially confidential and cannot therefore be given in the form requested.

European Investment Bank

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the practice of Her Majesty's Government with regard to charging fees to the owners or operators of projects which secure loans from the European investment bank which are guaranteed by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 4 November 1987]: The Government's general practice with regard to European investment bank loans to United Kingdom borrowers is to provide guarantees only in respect of certain categories of public sector projects, in particular investment by public corporations, and not to charge fees.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many loans have been provided by the European investment bank for United Kingdom projects since the formation of the bank; and how many of these loans have been guaranteed by the British Government or by bodies regarded by the bank as of equivalent status, respectively.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 4 November 1987]: The European investment bank has made some 438 loan contracts for projects in the United Kingdom from its own resources. The bank is bound by its statute to obtain adequate guarantees for all its loans. The British Government have guaranteed some 204 of the loan contracts for United Kingdom projects.

Eurotunnel

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what portion of the European investment bank's £1,000 million loan to Eurotunnel has been paid over to Eurotunnel; and what is the rate of interest and repayment arrangements in respect of the loan.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 4 November 1987]: None of the European investment bank's £1,000 million loan to Eurotunnel has yet been paid over. As explained in the last paragraph of the bank's press notice contained in my answer of 15 May 1987, at column 390, the conclusion of contractual arrangements for the loan is subject, inter alia, to successful completion of the forthcoming equity issue.

The European investment bank loans will primarily be at fixed interest rates and for a range of maturities up to 25 years. The terms will reflect the prevailing market conditions.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the joint stock banks which have agreed to guarantee the loan of £1,000 million given by the European investment bank to Eurotunnel, and the amounts of the loan which each bank has agreed to guarantee, respectively.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 4 November 1987]: The European investment bank is expected to seek guarantees from among the syndicate of banks formed to co-ordinate the financing of Eurotunnel. No choice has yet been made.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he had with the joint stock banks regarding their agreement to guarantee the £1,000 million loan from the European investment bank to Eurotunnel; and what fees are being paid to the banks concerned for the guarantees they have given to Eurotunnel.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 4 November 1987]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has had no discussions with the joint stock banks regarding guarantees for the European investment bank loan to Eurotunnel. Any fees involved would be a matter for negotiation between the syndicate banks concerned and Eurotunnel.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the date of the meeting of the board of the European investment bank at which formal approval was given to the loan of £1,000 million to Eurotunnel, and if he or one of his Ministers took part in the board's proceedings.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 4 November 1987]: As I informed the House on 15 May 1987, at column 390, the board of directors of the European investment bank agreed on 12 May 1987 to lend Eurotunnel the equivalent of £1 billion or 10 billion French francs. This was on the basis that conclusion of the necessary contractual arrangements would be subject to the conditions set out at the end of the press notice by the bank, which was incorporated in my earlier answer. Ministers are not members of the bank's board of directors and did not take part in the board's proceedings.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Council

Mr. Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total cost to public funds of the meeting of the European Council held in London in December 1986.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The total cost to public funds of the London European Council, held on 5-6 December 1986, was £234,050.

Visas

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether British visitors to Thailand and Thai visitors to Britain, respectively, are required to obtain visas.

Mr. Eggar: British passport holders may visit Thailand for up to 15 days without a visa provided they are tourists and have on arrival a confirmed onward ticket showing a departure date not exceeding that period. For longer visits, visas must be obtained in advance.

All Thai visitors to the United Kingdom must obtain a visa before travelling.

British Merchant Seamen (Persian Gulf)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit British merchant seamen in the Gulf at the request of the seafarers' unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to visit the Gulf. However, I am hoping to visit the area in the near future, and contact with British merchant seamen operating in the Gulf is very much in my mind.

TRANSPORT

British Rail (Punctuality)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the level of punctuality in the London-Midland region of British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: I do not monitor train punctuality on the basis of BR regions.

Horne Report

Mr. Welsh asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking regarding the Horne report on public service facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government's response to the Horne report, published in July 1986, accepted the great majority of its recommendations. The Department is pressing ahead with implementation. Proposals for new primary legislation are being prepared, and we shall continue to seek an early opportunity to bring it before Parliament. I announced on 29 July the establishment of the street works advisory committee.

The Department is leading negotiations on diversions of utility apparatus in consequence of highway improvement schemes. Joint working parties of local authority and utility representatives are carrying forward detailed technical work on specifications for reinstatements, training and certification of workmen and the computerised street works notice and register systems.

Roadworks

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the number of hours lost and the resulting costs to British industry caused by traffic delays through roadworks on dual carriageways and motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Records are not kept of total delays caused by roadworks on dual carriageways and motorways. Delay costs are only assessed on major lane rental schemes. During 1985-86 12 contracts were let on this basis. Total site occupation time was 727 days resulting in delay costs to the travelling public of about £11·5 million. Had the contracts been on a conventional basis, it is estimated that site occupation would have been 1,227 days and delay costs £19·5 million.

Lane rental has now been extended to most major maintenance schemes where there are likely to be significant delays.

London City Airport

Mr. Devlin asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to license further operators to fly to London's City airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is for individual air transport operators to apply to the Civil Aviation Authority for the necessary air transport licences if they consider that there is a demand for further services from London City airport.

Mr. Devlin asked the Secretary of State for Transport if approval has been given for a flight route from (a) Teesside airport and (b) Newcastle airport to London City airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No air transport operator has applied to the Civil Aviation Authority for an air transport licence to provide a service between either Teesside or Newcastle and London City airport.

Pilotage (Falmouth)

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of state for Transport what progress is being made towards the resolution of the problems of future pilotage at Falmouth; and by what date he hopes to come to a decision.

Mr. David Mitchell: Within the present Falmouth pilotage district, three authorities qualify under the Pilotage Act 1987 as competent harbour authorities for pilotage purposes. Following the failure of the authorities to reach agreement locally on future arrangements for pilotage in the port, my right hon. Friend is considering whether to use the powers available to him under the Act to ensure that satisfactory arrangements are made. His decision will be made as soon as possible.

Air Traffic Movements

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he intends to take to limit the increase in the number of air traffic movements in the south-east of England and to further the use of airports in other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has no such plans in mind. The Government remain committed to the policy set out in the 1985 airports policy White Paper (Cmnd. 9542) of encouraging the maximum use of regional airports to meet regional demand.

Night Flying

Mr. Jessell asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has completed his review of night flight restrictions at Heathrow and Gatwick; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will make a statement on night flying quotas in the south-east; what opportunity he will provide for consultation; and when he hopes to announce new night flying quotas to replace those which end in spring 1988.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government's policies for reducing the noise nuisance from aircraft using Heathrow and Gatwick have effectively controlled disturbance at night and have brought about an improvement in the night noise climate. We have, amongst other measures, carefully restricted both the numbers and types of aircraft allowed to fly at night.

I have recently reviewed these restrictions in the light of the conclusions of research studis and the comments of people and representative bodies consulted last year. My objective is to continue to improve the night noise climate around the airports while avoiding unnecessary restrictions on the airline industry.

At Heathrow, I propose that the number of night flights should be held to roughly its present level. This represents a reduction on the present permitted number of flights as announced in 1981. The demand is increasing, but I am not convinced that it can be satisfied without adding to the levels of night disturbance near the airport, especially in the early morning. My proposals will ensure that as airlines replace their older aircraft with modern, quieter types, the level of disturbance at night will gradually improve. In addition, I propose to ban take-offs by noisier aircraft during the small hours of the morning (0030-0500).

At Gatwick one option would be to freeze the night quota at its present level. But the different mix of aircraft at Gatwick and the high proportion of charter operations there gives us an opportunity, which does not exist at Heathrow, to make a more positive improvement to the night noise climate. By encouraging airlines to replace their older, noisier aircraft with modern, quieter ones we would achieve a quicker reduction in disturbance by both night and day. And the airlines and their passengers would benefit from the flexibility which comes from being able to plan more movements at night.

Thus, my preferred option at Gatwick would be, over the next five years:

to phase out half the night flights now being made by older aircraft, and to increase gradually the number of flights by modern, quieter aircraft.

Even so, at the end of the five-year period there would on average be no more than four more flights a night than there are now.

I am today publishing the conclusions of the review and my proposals for future night restrictions. Consultation papers for Heathrow and Gatwick will be sent to hon. Members whose constituencies are affected, and to environmental groups, local authorities near the airports, and representative bodies of the aviation industry. I have also placed copies in the Library. I have asked for comments by 23 December. I shall take carefully into account all comments in reaching final decisions. I expect to be able to announce those in early February, to take effect from 1 April 1988.

Driving Licences

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what driving test standards are necessary in order to obtain a heavy goods vehicle and a public service vehicle driving licence in the United Kingdom; and what equivalent information he has about each of the member states of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To obtain an HGV or PSV licence in the United Kingdom, candidates have to pass a driving test during which they must (i) demostrate a full understanding of the principles involved in driving heavy load or passenger-carrying vehicles and of the application of those principles; (ii) demonstrate their ability to handle such vehicles competently and with utmost safety in a wide variety of situations; and (iii) show courtesy and consideration for other road users.

HGV and PSV tests incorporate manoeuvres which are conducted at the test centre; a practical drive of about 20 miles; and oral questions on the Highway Code and technical matters. The distance travelled in other EEC countries ranges from five to 20 miles. The length of a driving test is the best readily available indicator for comparing standards.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the minimum age for obtaining a heavy goods vehicle and a public service vehicle driving licence in the United Kingdom; and what equivalent information he has about each of the member states of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Twenty-one but below this under particular circumstances. The minimum age limits for driving vehicles carrying goods and passengers within the European Community are laid down in EC regulation 3820/85. A copy of this is available in the House Library.

Heavy Vehicles

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many detections of overloaded heavy goods vehicles entering the United Kingdom from Europe there have been in each of the last five years; and what monitoring procedures and checks are in operation to prevent this practice.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Goods vehicles entering the United Kingdom are liable to be weighed at the port of entry or at inland weighbridge sites by the Department's traffic examiners or by local authority trading standards department staff.

The numbers of foreign registered goods vehicles weighed and found to be overloaded are as follows:

	Number
1984-85	3,199
1985-86	2,794
1986-87	2,755

Earlier information is not readily available.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to seek power to assist British Rail in the event of its revenue from Channel tunnel services being less than the sums it has guaranteed to Eurotunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Supervisor of the Vote

Mr. Bermingham asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), as representing the House of Commons Commission, if, in the light of present pressures resulting from the volume of parliamentary questions tabled and problems with new technology, there are any plans to increase staffing levels in the office of the editorial Supervisor of the Vote; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: The staff of the editorial Supervisor of the Vote was increased by two posts earlier this year, in part as a response to the steady increase in questions and early-day motions during recent years, and in part in expectation of additional work arising from the changeover to computerised printing. In the event, difficulties with the new technology have been greater than expected and there has also been some sickness among the staff concerned. These are temporary problems, which are being alleviated by the ad hoc employment of staff from other parts of the House service who are working overtime.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Schizophrenia

Mr. Goodlad asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people with a main diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses were discharged from mental illness hospitals in Scotland in each of the last five years; and how many of them were taken into local authority residential care in the same year.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend all the information he seeks. Central information is not collected on the movement of people after discharge. The available figures are given in the table.

Discharges of people with main diagnosis schizophrenic psychoses. NHS mental illness hospitals and units in England.

Year	Number of discharges
1982	24,594
1983	25,336
1984	25,934
1985	26,225
1986	26,077

AIDS

Mr. Cousins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what budget the Newcastle district health authority has for AZT in 1987-88; and if he will make additional allocations available for AIDS and haemophiliac treatment to Newcastle as he has recently done to some district health authorities in London.

Mr. Newton: The allocations to which the hon. Member refers have been made to regional, not district, health authorities. It is for Newcastle health authority to decide what budget allocations to make for particular drug treatments, in the light of competing demands for available resources. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the authority directly for the information required. We have already made additional allocations totalling £104,000 for the haemophilia reference centre at Newcastle so that it can provide specialist counselling on HIV infection for haemophiliacs and their families. We have also made an additional allocation of £95,000 to the Northern regional health authority this year for a pilot AIDS community support centre in Newcastle and for an AIDS training workshop for nurses.

Alarm Systems

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the draft regulations under the Social Security Act which provide that the cost of alarm systems for elderly, sick or disabled persons living in non-purpose built accommodation will no longer be eligible for housing benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 21 October 1987 at column 800.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of people living in accommodation not specifically intended for and occupied by elderly, sick, or disabled persons who receive assistance through housing benefit towards the cost of an alarm system.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that we do not have a reliable basis on which such an estimate could be made.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether a proportion of the community care budget of the social fund will be allocated specifically to the provision of grants to meet the cost of emergency alarms for elderly and disabled people living in accommodation not specifically intended for occupation by elderly, sick or disabled persons.

Mr. Portillo: No. The cost of alarms is not met under existing supplementary benefit single payment regulations and we do not intend to make specific provision for this under the social fund. Housing benefit (or, for owner-occupiers, income support) may be available in certain circumstances to help with the running costs. Local authorities have powers to supply and meet the costs of alarms for elderly, sick or disabled people.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those foetal conditions, syndromes and diseases, involving the lack of a vital function or lack of vital organs incompatible with sustaining life, which have come to his Department's attention giving both numbers of recorded cases over recent years for which figures are available and expressed in each case as a percentage of live births for that year.

Mr. Newton: "Mortality Statistics, Perinatal and Infant: Social and Biological Factors for England and Wales 1984," published by OPCS, series DH3, gives the numbers of stillbirths by cause of death. "Abortion Statistics for England and Wales 1986," published by OPCS, series AB No. 13, gives the number of legal abortions by principal medical conditions mentioned. "OPCS Monitor" reference MB3 gives results from the voluntary OPCS monitoring programme of malformed births. These volumes are in the Library. More detailed information is not available.

Temporary Staff

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what control he seeks to exercise over the scale of charges made by medical employment agencies for temporary or locum staff engaged by hospital authorities in England and Wales; and what recent representations he has received from the National Association of Health Authorities on this matter.

Mr. Newton: The National Association of Health Authorities has communicated, and we have carefully noted, a resolution passed at its annual general meeting on 17 to 19 June 1987 calling for the Government to press ahead with efforts to reform the career structure of hospital doctors and to take steps to reduce the cost to health authorities of employing locum doctors through agencies. I announced measures to reform the hospital medical staffing structure on 27 October at column 258. There are no controls on medical locum charges by agencies, but a number of health authorities are taking or considering steps to reduce their costs in this respect, and we shall carefully monitor their progress.

Telephones (Emergency Repairs)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what the estimated cost would be to district health authorities of British Telecom's proposal to charge them for emergency repairs; and if his Department will compensate them for this loss.

Mr. Newton: The estimated cost to health authorities in 1987-88 will be £3·75 million. This will be paid from health authorities' general allocations.

Deaths and Discharges (Private Treatment)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for 1984 for each region and for England as a whole the number of deaths and discharges a month compared to the number of beds occupied.

Mrs. Currie: Information about discharges and deaths is not collected centrally on a monthly basis. The annual figures are given in the table.

	1984

Private Patient Care

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the numbers of patients receiving treatment under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service for the years ending 31 December 1985 and 31 December 1986, and if he will break those figures down in the categories of (a) medical, (b) surgical, (c) pre-convalescent and post operative, (d) convalescent, (e) geriatric, (f) disease of the chest, (g) maternity, (h) mental illness, (i) mental handicap, (j) rehabilitation, (k) terminal care and (l) others.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of contract agreed by each district health authority for the following services (a) ambulances, (b) gardening, (c) laboratories, (d) portering, (e) shops in hospitals, (f) window cleaning, (g) pharmacy and *(h)*telephones; and if he will give estimated annual savings in each case.

Mr. Newton: It is for health authorities to decide whether to seek competitive tenders for services other than catering, laundry and domestic cleaning. Information on any such local management action is not collected centrally.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give details of all new contracts awarded since 31 December 1986 by each district health authority, by hospital, for (a) portering, (b) catering, (c) laundry, (d) cleaning and (e) other ancillary work; and if he will give the estimated annual savings for each contract awarded;

(2) if he will give the latest figures as a percentage of services put out to tender by each district health authority for (a) catering, (b) domestic services, and (c) laundry; and if he will give the estimated annual savings.

Mr. Newton: I will let the hon. Member have the information requested on catering, laundry and domestic services as soon as possible. Information on any contracts let for portering and other ancillary services is not collected centrally.

Multi-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those hospitals which reported outbreaks of multi-resistant staphylococcus aureus during 1986; which of these hospitals have reported further outbreaks so far during 1987; and which other hospitals have reported outbreaks of multi-resistant staphylococcus aureus during 1987.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not available concerning outbreaks of multi-resistant staphylococcus aureus.

There is, however, a voluntary national survey of methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) conducted by the division of hospital infection and communicable disease surveillance centre of the Public Health Laboratory service board. MRSA is an important example of the multi-resistant infections.

The survey is based on reported cases originating at the hospital concerned. Thus, a hospital will be included even if only one isolated case was involved, but will not normally be included if a patient with MRSA has been transferred to it.

A list of hospitals reporting on this basis in 1986 and so far during 1987 will be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Medicines Act 1968

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the independent study carried out by Dr. John Evans and Mr. Peter Cunliffe into the operations of the Medicines Act 1968 to report; and when the results will be made publicly known to the interested parties.

Mr. Newton: We expect to receive the report by very early in the new year. The question of how and when to make the results known will be decided as soon as we have had an opportunity to give proper consideration to the report and its recommendations.

Sex Discrimination

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take in accordance with EEC law, to end sex discrimination in the United Kingdom in respect of the retirement age.

Mr. Scott: The Sex Discrimination Act 1986, coming into force this month, prohibits discrimination between male and female employees in respect of compulsory dismissal from work on grounds of age. There is no statutory retirement age as such in the United Kingdom. State pension age is excluded from the requirements of EC directive 79/7 on equal treatment in social security and under EC directive 86/378 pension ages in occupational pension schemes may differ between men and women so long as differences remain in the state pension scheme.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospital beds are now occupied by people aged (a) 65 years and over and (b) 75 years and over.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information in the form he seeks. The available information is given in the table.

Beds occupied by elderly people, NHS hospitals, England, 1986

Sector	65 years and over	75 years and over
Non-psychiatric[1]	93,000	64,000
Mental handicap[2] (excluding community units)	5,315	2,042
Mental illness[2]	34,341	21,513

[1] Estimated daily average.

[2] Number of beds occupied on 31 December.

Maternity Services

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about his plans for maternity services.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 2 November 1987]: Our objectives in the maternity services are healthy babies born whenever possible at full term to healthy mothers. We aim to minimise the risks to babies by encouraging delivery in hospital preferably with access to the full range of facilities which are likely to be found only on district general hospital sites. We aim to support the services outside hospital both ante and post-natal by increasing the number of qualified staff and by other measures.

As a result there has been a fall in the perinatal mortality rate in England from 14·6 per thousand births in 1979 to 9·8 in 1985. During the same period the maternal mortality rate per thousand live and stillbirths declined from 0·11 to 0·07.

The detailed procedures and policies are as set out in the three maternity services advisory committee's report, published 1982-85, copies of which are in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Rates

Mr. Riddick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will calculate the financial effects on commercial and industrial concerns in (a) the Colne Valley constituency, (b) the Kirklees metropolitan district council and (c) the Yorkshire and Humberside region resulting from the introduction of the unified business rate; and what is his estimate of the likely effect in employment in these areas resulting from the introduction of the unified business rate.

Mr. Howard: On the basis of 1987-88 rate levels, introduction of the national non-domestic rate poundage would have reduced the excessive non-domestic rate bills by £10 million (22 per cent.) in Kirklees, and by £130 million (18 per cent.) in Yorkshire and Humberside as a whole; information by constituency is not available. These reductions are bound to improve employment prospects substantially in both the short and long term.

Manufacturers in the region can expect additional benefits from revaluation in 1990.

Water Industry

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the proposed organisation for the purposes of civil defence planning to apply to the water industry, following privatisation.

Mr. Moynihan: The provisions of the Civil Defence Act 1948 will apply to the privatised water utilities and the Government will continue to pay grant-aid for civil defence functions. Arrangements for civil defence planning will be based upon present arrangements which are designed to secure co-ordinated effort across each civil defence region.

Derelict Land

Mr. Cran asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of derelict land in Humberside for the years 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87; and whether this is based on up-to-date information in each case.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available for the years requested. The last survey of derelict land in England, carried out in 1982, showed that there were then 886 hectares of derelict land in Humberside, of which 632 hectares were thought to justify reclamation. A further survey of derelict land in England will take place in 1988.

Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on whether the implementation of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 has resulted in any significant change in consumer preference regarding the method of delivery of those services affected by the Act.

Mr. Chope: I have no such information.

Dogs

Mr. Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the methods currently adopted by local authorities to control dogs, in particular by the use of their own licensing system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: There is a range of powers available to local authorities to control dogs and dog nuisance by means of byelaws or orders. For example, dogs can be banned from certain areas or required to be kept on a lead on certain roads. Authorities may also provide a dog warden service; I understand that some 200 do so. It is for each authority to decide the extent to which it uses these powers.

Although authorities are responsible for issuing licences and keeping registers of licence holders, they do not have separate licensing systems.

Building Industry

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the problems being experienced by the building industry because of slow payment by insurance companies against repairs to property.

Mr. Trippier: This is a matter for the building industry to pursue with the insurance industry. I am not aware of particular problems recently about slow payment. I understand that the Building Employers Confederation is today meeting the Association of British Insurers to review the consequences of the recent severe storm.

West Sussex County Council

Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that, following the special assistance for storm damage he announced after the recent hurricane, the total of Government grants, subvaluations and other forms of financial help to West Sussex county council should be increased not diminished.

Mr. Chope: The Government have announced a scheme of generous financial assistance for local authorities affected by the storm on 16 October. We are prepared to interpret reasonably and flexibly the claims made under it.

Whales

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 2 November, if he will specify the amounts in each case of whale teeth, bone, tusk, blood, powder, sperm, sperm oil and spermaceti wax imported into the United Kingdom during the last eight years; and if he will place a ban on the importation of all such products.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not readily available but I will write to the hon. Member.

PVC Window Frames

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to permit local authorities which manufacture PVC window frames for installation in properties owned by the authorities concerned to sell them to other authorities or to householders who are not their tenants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Whilst it is not for me to interpret the law, it appears that local authorities are already empowered, in certain circumstances, to sell window frames they have manufactured to other local authorities and certain public bodies. My right hon. Friend has no plans to provide wider powers.

Mersey Barrage

Mr. Fearn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the possible impact of the Mersey barrage scheme on the beaches of Southport, Crosby, Formby and the Wirral peninsular.

Mr. Moynihan: The Mersey barrage company is currently carrying out a range of initial feasibility studies. These include hydraulic studies to assess the effect of a barrage on tidal range and currents in the Mersey estuary and will take account of the possible impact on beaches.

North West Sports Council

Mr. Fearn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to increase aid to the North West Sports Council in order that it may consider grant aid to establish running tracks in the north-west; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government have increased the Sports Council's grant-in-aid for 1988-89 by nearly £2 million to £38·832 million. The council disburses this grant according to its own policies and priorities. In 1986-87 the council allocated £1·051 million to its north-west region for the development of its local facilities. An allocation for 1988-89 has yet to be made. It will be for the regional council to consider applications for grant-aid for individual facilities.

Polling Booths

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce legislation to ensure that local authorities provide access to polling booths for disabled people at local and parliamentary elections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that all local authorities send out to developers seeking planning permission the access for disabled people design guidance notes for developers issued by the Access Committee for England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Section 29A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 places a duty on local planning authorities when granting planning permission for offices, shops, railway premises, factories and buildings or premises to which the public are admitted to draw the attention of developers to the British Standard Institution code of practice for access for the disabled to buildings (BS5810;1979). Much of the information in the access committee's guidance notes is already contained in BS5810.

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, Official Report, columns 37-38, on regional losers and gainers under the poll tax, he will make the disaggregated information available so that further disaggregation by household type can be carried out.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 2 November 1987]: I cannot release the detailed family expenditure survey information without breaking the undertakings on confidentiality given to those that took part in the surveys.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how a local authority will be aware of the extent to which its assessed need to spend is grant-aided under his proposals for the new grant system to be introduced with the poll tax.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 3 November 1987]: Revenue support grant will be paid into the collection fund for an area, as will payments from the national non-domestic rate pool and the community charges. It will not be necessary to attribute the receipts from each source to each authority, as authorities will receive the income they require from the collection fund generally. The extent to which the cost of local authority services is being met by revenue support grant will, however, be clear to those paying the community charge.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 21 October, Official Report, column 822, he will list the exaggerations and distortions in the National Council for Civil Liberties report on the poll tax.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 5 November 1987]: The NCCL report is misleading in several respects. For example, it implies that the contents of the community charges register will not be covered by the Data Protection Act. That is simply incorrect. The report also claims that registration for the community charge will involve an invasion of people's privacy. In fact, the community charges registration officer will have no need to inquire into people's personal circumstances. He will merely seek to establish the names and addresses of people who are solely or mainly resident in his area.

Housing and Planning Act

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when it is intended to implement sections 6 and 8 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Playing Fields

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance is given by his Department to local authorities about the minimum acreage of playing fields for primary, middle and upper schools.

Mr. Dunn: I have been asked to reply.

The sale of surplus playing fields is a matter for individual local education authorities. The Department's circular 2/81 "Falling Rolls and Surplus Places" showed how rationalisation of school provision in the light of falling rolls could involve the sale of surplus schools and land, and how the capital receipts could be used to finance improvements to school buildings and playing fields.

The Department's design note No. 36 presented a case study of an area of north-east Wiltshire aimed at rationalising playing field provision, examining possible savings and opportunities for alternative use.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Radioactivity

Mr. William Ross asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sheep and lambs, and in what areas of England and Wales, are still under restriction for sale as a result of the nuclear accident at Chernobyl in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In England there are no restrictions on the sale of sheep. However, I estimate that some 126,000 sheep in and from part of Cumbria are still subject to post-Chernobyl movement and slaughter controls. The position in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report details of Becquerel readings for caesium in (a) grass and (b) sheep in west Yorkshire in 1986 and 1987, respectively.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 5 November 1987]: The results of the Minister's post-Chernobyl monitoring of caesium levels in plant and animal tissues for 1986 have been published and placed in the Library of the House. The same will be done for those for 1987 as they become available. They have shown no need to continue any special monitoring in west Yorkshire.

I am, however, aware of recent press reports concerning sampling of radioactivity levels in certain areas of west Yorkshire by private individuals and concerning rainfall in this area during the period of passage of the plume. I have therefore arranged for further intensive monitoring in this area as a double check and I expect to receive the results very shortly. These results will also be made publicly available.

DEFENCE

Browning Ammunition

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on current supplies of 0·5 in Browning ammunition.

Mr. Sainsbury: A number of companies have been asked to tender for supply of 0·5 in Browning ammunition. The deadline for submission of tenders has been extended to 21 January 1988. Decisions on quantities and timing of orders have yet to be taken.

United States (Star Wars Programme)

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about Britain's involvement in the United States star wars programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since the signature in December 1985 of the United Kingdom/United States memorandum of understanding governing British participation in the SDI research programme some 60 United States-funded contracts and sub-contracts to the total value of $45 million have been placed with United Kingdom companies, academic institutions and Government research establishments.

United States (Nuclear Bases)

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Defence if United States nuclear and other bases in Britain may be used without the consent of the British Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Under long-standing arrangements, the use by United States forces of bases in the United Kingdom in an emergency would be a matter for joint decision by Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government in the light of the circumstances prevailing at the time.

Job Creation (North-West England)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the latest estimates of jobs provided in the north-west during 1987 as a result of defence contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: As a result of refining our statistical records I am now able to give a full reply.

It is estimated that in 1985-86, the latest year for which figures are available, some 23,000 people were directly employed on MOD equipment contracts in the north-west.

Helicopter Orders (Westland plc)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he hopes to place helicopter orders with Westland.

Mr. Sainsbury: The helicopter orders announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 9 April 1987, at columns 470-1, will be placed as soon as service requirements have been finally defined and contractual negotiations completed.

Regiments (Officers' Visits)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 27 October, how frequently visits are made to regiments by senior visiting officers; what is the primary duty of such officers; what prior publicity is given to these visits; and how frequently complaints of bullying are made to them.

Mr. Freeman: Senior officers make regular visits to units within their command. The frequency of these visits depends upon the location of the command and their units, and the operational-training requirements at the time. The purpose of these visits is twofold: first, to allow the senior officer to assure himself that the unit is properly trained and organised; and, secondly, to allow the unit, corporately or individually, to air grievances and point out particular problems. Proper notification of such visits is given to all ranks through the publication of unit orders. No records are kept of the frequency of complaints of bullying. Such complaints—on this as on other matters—are dealt with promptly, either at the time of the visit or as soon as possible afterwards.

Courts Martial

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 27 October, who nominates the president of a court that judges a court martial; whether the commanding officer who nominates suitably qualified officers to sit on he court is free to appoint officers who belong to the same regiment as the accused; and if this happens.

Mr. Freeman: The president of a court martial is nominated by the officer who convenes the court—usually of the rank of brigadier or above. Although it is not legally precluded, it is usually thought undesirable for an officer from the accused's own unit to sit on the court martial which tries him; and this would never arise in a serious or contentious case.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 27 October, whether legal advise is available for those being court martialled and for those bringing the allegations that led to the court martial.

Mr. Freeman: Legal advice is available both to the accused and to the Army authorities involved in the court martial. Except in minor cases an accused service man is entitled to seek legal advice both before and during interview with the police, in accordance with the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. He may also seek legal advice after being remanded for trial, and may apply for legal representation at trial either by a service legal officer or a civilian legal practitioner. Legal advice is also available on request to a service man making an allegation, if such advice is required for a claim for financial compensation.

Army Personnel (Bullying)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 27 October, whether information about bullying, which has either been suffered personally or has been witnessed, is treated by Army authorities as information that has not been learned in the course of official duties; and whether young recruits, who voluntarily leave the Army within six months, are free to talk publicly about this aspect of their Army experience.

Mr. Freeman: Those who believe they have been bullied are encouraged to make the facts known so that the incidents may be properly investigated. Ideally this should be done through the chain of command, but where circumstances appear to preclude this, it may be done by different means. Where ever sufficient detail is given, by whatever channel, a complaint will be fully investigated by the military authorities.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 27 October, if he will place in the Library when he received the proposals for future means of combating bullying which have been requested by December from all Army commanders by the Adjutant General.

Mr. Freeman: The responses of Army commanders to the Adjutant General's request will need to be the subject of internal consideration and decision. I do not believe it would be appropriate to place such information, the results of an internal exercise, in the Library in the form suggested. However, when the proposals have been fully considered I shall write to the right hon. Member about the outcome.

Army Personnel (Absence Without Leave)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the annual numbers of Army personnel going absent without leave who, on being found, give the following types of reasons for their absence (a) bullying, (b) other problems relating to their Army life, (c) family problems and (d) other reasons.

Mr. Freeman: Records of the numbers of Army personnel going absent without leave, and who are subsequently found, do not identify individually the reasons given for absence. However, inquiries in the past have shown that the majority of such absences arise as a result of short-term domestic or personal problems affecting the individual. Overall, the numbers of Army personnel returning from absence without leave, in each of the last four years have been as follows:

Year	Number
1984	2,644
1985	2,208
1986	2,006
1987	[1]1,641

[1] To 29 October.

The figures show returns from absence of any duration. The totals are therefore significantly greater than those shown for the Army in the answer given on 2 April 1987 at column 566, which referred only to absences of 21 days or more.

Low-flying Aircraft

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names, dates and locations of all low-flying exercises conducted in each year since 1979, advance notice of which was given to hon. Members in affected constituencies.

Mr. Freeman: According to our records, since 1979, advance notice of the following exercises have been given to hon. Members, parts of whose constituencies were likely to see a temporary increase in low-flying activity. Central records are no longer held for exercises before 1986 and it is therefore not possible to determine the location of all such exercises, without disproportionate effort.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria are used in determining whether advance notice of a low-flying exercise should be given to honourable Members in affected constituencies; and whether there has been any change in these criteria since 1978.

Mr. Freeman: The notification of exercise activity is determined on a case-by-case basis, the main considerations being whether the exercise is expected to generate an unusual increase in local activity levels, and whether there is likely to be significant activity over weekends, public holidays, or late at night. These same criteria have been used since 1979.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the minimum authorised heights for low-flying in the highlands restricted area for (a) Royal Air Force Tornadoes flying at night, (b) Royal Air Force Tornadoes flying in daylight, (c) United States Air Force F-111s flying at night and (d) United States Air Force F-111s flying in daylight.

Mr. Freeman: Unless the northern Scottish tactical training area is being used for ultra-low flying (when aircraft may be authorised to fly down to levels of 100 ft above ground level) the highlands restricted area, which is used for terrain following radar training, is subject to the same height rules as the rest of the United Kingdom low-flying system, under which aircraft may be authorised to fly down to a level of 250 ft above ground level, both in daylight hours and at night.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 22 April, Official Report, column 586, if he will list the countries other than the United States of America and Canada in which exercises involving ultra-low flying by British military aircraft are held.

Mr. Freeman: There are no other countries in which such exercises are held.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 22 April, Official Report, column 585, in what year the policy of concentrating ultra-low flying in specially designated, sparsely populated areas in the United Kingdom was introduced.

Mr. Freeman: The policy of concentrating ultra-low flying in specially designated, sparsely populated areas in the United Kingdom was introduced in 1979, as part of the revised United Kingdom low flying system.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 22 April, Official Report, column 586, if he will list the names and dates of exercises since 1974 involving ultra-low flying by British military aircraft; and if he will indicate for each exercise whether work-up training was conducted in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: This information could not be provided without disproportionate effort.

Mr. Amos asked the Secretary of State for Defence if in the light of the recent crash between two Harrier jets in Northumberland he will establish an inquiry into the safety procedures followed during Royal Air Force low-flying training exercises.

Mr. Freeman: An inquiry into the accident on 2 November has already been set up. When the results of this are known, they will be taken into account in our continuous monitoring of United Kingdom low-flying safety procedures.

Air Exercises

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the establishment of an annual flag-type tactical fighter meet exercise in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: By "flag-type tactical fighter meet" exercises, it is assumed that the hon. Member is referring to the annual series of exercises in which the Royal Air Force participates, held in the United States and Canada under the titles Red Flag, Green Flag and Maple Flag. There are no plans for similar exercises in the United Kingdom.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Tartan Flag air exercises have been held in Britain since 1979;

(2) how many Border Flag air exercises have been held in Britain since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The names Tartan and Border Flag are names for work-up training prior toparticipation in major flag exercises in the United States of Amercia and Canada. The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost and effort.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to establishing simulated ground threat emitter sites in the tactical training areas in north-west Scotland and central Wales.

Mr. Freeman: There are no plans to set up ground threat emitter sites in the tactical training areas in north-west Scotland and central Wales.

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence why Royal Air Force Jaguar and Harrier work-up training for Maple Flag and Red Flag exercises is not conducted from Goose Bay, Canada.

Mr. Freeman: Current training facilities available to the RAF at Goose Bay were developed primarily for use by Tornado aircraft. They are not large enough to accommodate additional Jaguar and Harrier squadrons. Nor is Jaguar and Harrier participation in Maple Flag exercises sufficiently regular to justify stationing aircraft at Goose Bay.

RAF Pilots

Dr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of fully-trained pilots in Royal Air Force fast jet strike/attack/reconnaissance squadrons in each year since 1975.

Mr. Freeman: I will write to the hon. Member.

Bullying and Brutality

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of men currently absent without leave from each of the regiments where there has been a court martial for bullying or a complaint that was substantiated.

Mr. Freeman I will write to the right hon. Member.

Defence Exercises

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans have been made for further out-of-area exercises in the United Kingdom in 1988;

(2) when planning for Exercise Purple Warrior was commenced;

(3) what is the total number of aircraft participating in Exercise Purple Warrior;

(4) at what stage in the planning of Exercise Purple Warrior it was decided to involve Canberra, Chinook and Puma aircraft in the exercise;

(5) what is the estimated total cost of Exercise Purple Warrior, including the cost of exercise operations conducted by units not currently assigned to an out-of-area role.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Detailed planning for Exercise Purple Warrior began in January 1986. The total number of aircraft, both fixed and rotary-winged, currently scheduled to take part in the exercise, including those operating from the Royal Navy vessels participating, is 116. The inclusion of RAF Canberra, Chinook and Puma aircraft was decided at an early stage of the exercise planning. The estimated costs of Exercise Purple Warrior (additional to those which would have been incurred had the exercise not been taking place) are £7.5 million; the costs of exercise activity by individual participating units have not been separately identified. There are no current plans for further out-of-area exercises to be held in the United Kingdom in 1988, although the services will continue to train in the United Kingdom and elsewhere to carry out the full range of their military commitments.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the planned total number of low-level sorties to be flown by (a) fixed-wing jet aircraft, (b) fixed-wing transport aircraft and (c) helicopters during Exercise Purple Warrior.

Mr. Freeman: The planned maximum numbers of low-level sorties to be flown daily overland during Exercise Purple Warrior are as follows:

	Number
Fixed-wing jet aircraft	about 88
Fixed wing transport aircraft	about 2
Helicopters	about 200

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether fuel allocations for units undertaking training for a NATO role will be increased in the current year to compensate for fuel expended during Exercise Purple Warrior.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. Exercises such as Purple Warrior are already taken into account when fuel requirements for all units are assessed each year, and allocations are made accordingly.

SCOTLAND

Hospital Services

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of each health board which has contractual arrangements with a private non-National Health Service hospital to provide acute medical services, showing (a) the hospital with which a contract is made, (b) the number of patients treated by that hospital with which a contract is made, (b) the number of patients treated by that hospital during 1986-87, (c) the total amount spent by each health board on treatment under the contract during 1986-87 and (d) the amount which (c) represents as a percentage of the overall health board budget for 1986-87.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no contractual arrangements in Scotland with private non-National Health Service hospitals to provide acute medical services. There are contractual arrangements with some hospitals to provide beds classified within the acute speciality group but these are generally for convalescent and terminal care only.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of contract agreed by each health board, for the following services: (a) ambulances, (b) gardening, (c) laboratories, (d) portering, (e) hospital shops, (f) window cleaning, (g) pharmacy and (h) telephones; and if he will give the estimated annual savings in each case.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of all new contracts awarded since 31 December 1986 by each health board for (a) portering, (b) catering, (c) laundry, (d) cleaning and (e) other ancillary work; and if he will give the estimated annual savings for each contract awarded.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No new contracts have been awarded since 31 December 1986 for catering, laundry or cleaning services. Information on portering and other ancillary work is not held centrally.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest figures as a percentage of services put out to tender by each health board for (a) catering, (b) domestic services, and (c) laundry; and if he will give the estimated annual savings.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Details are given below of the percentage value of domestic and catering services put out to tender and resultant estimated annual savings for those health boards which have let contracts.

	Percentage (by value)		Estimated annual saving £000s
Health board	Catering	Domestic	Catering	Domestic
Ayrshire and Arran	2·6	7·3	9	62
Borders	—	26·0	—	55
Fife	0·7	1·1	8	11
Forth Valley	—	1·2	—	9
Lanarkshire	—	10·8	—	30
Tayside	24·1	20·1	136	233

No contracts have been awarded for laundry services.

Sheep and Lambs (Sale Restrictions)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sheep and lambs and in what areas of Scotland are still under restriction for sale as a result of the nuclear accident at Chernobyl in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no restrictions on the sale of sheep. However, about 90,000 sheep on and from farms in parts of Dumfries and Galloway, Strathclyde and Central regions are still subject to movement and slaughter restrictions as a result of the Chernobyl incident.

Extradition

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many requests for the extradition of persons from the Republic of Ireland to Scotland have been made in each of the last five years and the current year to date; of these, how many in each year were for persons alleged to be concerned in terrorist crime; and in each year and category how many of the requests were (a) granted and (b) refused.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available centrally and cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost. So far as can be ascertained, during the last five years, one request was made in respect of a person alleged to be concerned in terrorist crime. No requests have been refused during this period.

Hospital Patients

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many patients were hospitalised for more than seven days in Scotland for each year since 1975;

(2) how many of the patients hospitalised for more than seven days in Scotland, for each year since 1975 did so under National Health Service provisions.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1987]: Detailed information including length of stay is held currently only for NHS hospitals. Corresponding information is not held for private hospitals and nursing homes. Available information relates not to patients but to discharges of patients after seperate episodes of care. The same patient may therefore be counted more than once. The information given relates to the number of discharges of patients after a stay of more than seven days from all NHS hospitals in Scotland in each calendar year. It does not include patients who have spent more than seven days in hospital but who were not discharged within the calendar year. Thus, many long stay patients in geriatric hospitals and mental illness and mental handicap hospitals are excluded.

Hypothermia

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the percentage in hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Scotland in each year from 1977 to 1986 over the previous year;

(2) if he will give the percentage in the number of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Lothian region in each year from 1977 to 1986 over the previous year;

(3) if he will give the percentage change in the number of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Edinburgh in each year from 1977 to 1986 over the previous year;

(4) if he will give the percentage change in the number of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Edinburgh, South in each year from 1977 to 1987 over the previous year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply, 26 October 1987]: The information is as follows:

Deaths mentioning hypothermia: Scotland, Lothian Region and Edinburgh City as a percentage change from the previous year 1978 to 1986

	Scotland Per cent.	Lothian Per cent.	Edinburgh Per cent.
1978	+30	+8	0

1984	−2	+3	−10
1985	+32	+20	+54
1986	−10	−25	−35

Information is not readily available for Edinburgh, South parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the number of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Lothian as a proportion of such deaths in Scotland in each year from 1977 to 1986;

(2) if he will give the number of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Edinburgh, South as a proportion of such deaths in Scotland in each year from 1977 to 1987;

(3) if he will give the number of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Edinburgh as a proportion of such deaths in Scotland in each year from 1977 to 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply, 26 October 1987]: The information is as follows:

Deaths mentioning hypothermia: Lothian region and Edinburgh City as a percentage of Scotland 1977 to 1987

EMPLOYMENT

Agriculture Inspectorate

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Employment why the number of health and safety inspectors in the agriculture inspectorate has been cut from 200 to 150 in eight years; and how many of them now carry out scheduled inspections.

Mr. Nicholls: In order to contain public sector manpower and spending there have been staff reductions in the Health and Safety Executive, as in the Civil Service as a whole. In HSE this has been accompanied by improvements in efficiency with the use of sound financial management, strategic planning and careful targeting.

On 1 April 1979 there were 189 inspectors in Her Majesty's Agricultural Inspectorate. On 1 October 1987 the total was 154, of whom 142 were in the field.

A recruitment competition for factory and agricultural inspectors has just started.

Agriculture (Pesticides)

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what further resources he has made to the Health and Safety Executive in agriculture to enforce new legislation involving pesticides and their uses.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive is meeting its responsibilities for enforcing the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 and the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 from within existing staff resources through a rearrangement of priorities. Recruitment to the Agricultural Inspectorate is under way.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the character of allegations made by dismissed former employees to industrial tribunals; and whether he is prepared to consider measures to inhibit the presentation of false allegations.

Mr. Nicholls: I have received representations on this subject from the chairman and chief executive of Britannia Airways.

Industrial tribunals possess wide powers to govern the conduct of the hearings and the submission of evidence. They may require witnesses to give evidence on oath and normally do so. Such evidence is subject to the Perjury Act 1911 and I do not consider that additional powers are needed.

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases of unfair dismissal have been brought by former employees before industrial tribunals in each of the years since 1983; and how many of them have been withdrawn during the proceedings.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of cases heard was as follows:

	Number
January to December 1984	7,578
January to March1985	2,112
April 1985 to March 1986	9,270
April 1986 to March 1987	9,287

Approximately 70 per cent. of all applications registered with the tribunals do not proceed to a hearing. Some are withdrawn and many are settled by ACAS. Precise details on the number of cases withdrawn during proceedings is not available.

Coal Industry (Injuries)

Mr. Cummings asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number and nature of serious injuries in the following coal mines for the last three years; Dawdon Colliery, Murton Colliery, Vane Tempest Colliery and Easington Colliery.

Mr. Nicholls: The actual number of major accidents reported to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Mines and Quarries which occurred at the mines referred to in the question are as follows:

	[1]1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Dowdon	1	6	9
Murton	2	7	13
Vane Tempest/Seaham	—	7	14
Easington	—	8	11

[1] This covers a 15-month period (January 1984 to March 1985) during which time there was a major industrial dispute. It is not comparable with previous calendar year data.

The apparent increase in 1986-87 in the number of major injuries in the industry is mainly accounted for by a change in the reportable injuries under the new Reporting of Injuries Disease and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR) which was introduced on 1 April 1986 and widened the coverage of the major injury category. Major injury accident figures from 1986-87 are therefore not comparable with those for earlier years. It is not possible to determine the nature of each reported accident without incurring disproportionate costs.

Community Programme

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many men and how many women he estimates will lose a place on the community programme following the increase from six months to one year as the unemployment qualifying criterion.

Mr. Nicholls: None.

Claimants (Postage)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the estimated savings to his Department from the withdrawal of free pre-addressed postage facilities, formerly given to claimants living six miles or more from their nearest employment office.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The estimated annual savings, for a full year, from postal claimants paying their own postage to submit declarations of unemployment, is calculated at £600,000.

YTS

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he has received a report on the youth training scheme survey carried out by Ken Roberts, head of sociology at Liverpool university; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish the findings of the youth training scheme survey carried out by Ken Roberts of Liverpool university on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 2 November 1987]: We received in 1986 a copy of Mr. Roberts' report entitled "The Changing Structure of Youth Labour Markets". The report was published by our Department in July 1987 in the research paper series.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to commission a survey on how youth training schemes have operated on Merseyside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 2 November 1987]: There are a number of surveys and research studies which are carried out by or on behalf of the Manpower Services Commission concerning YTS.

Most of these are national in coverage and provide a range of information designed to improve the operation of YTS in all areas including Merseyside.

There are no YTS studies or surveys currently being conducted which are limited in scope to Merseyside alone.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will consult the Manpower Services Commission with a view to increasing the numbers of single sex provision and reserved places on those YTS schemes for young women which currently have a disproportionately low level of women participants.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 5 November 1987]: The Manpower Services Commission encourages YTS managing agents to run either single-sex or reserved place schemes where the law permits. At the end of August 1987, five single-sex and 41 reserved place schemes for young women were running, offering a total of 351 places of which 197 were filled. Other schemes continue to be introduced.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will consult the Manpower Services Commission with a view to increasing the number of workmen on civil engineering, mechanical engineering and motor vehicle repair and maintenance YTS schemes.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 5 November 1987]: The Manpower Services Commission is actively seeking to promote more training opportunities for young women in civil engineering, mechanical engineering and motor vehicle repair and maintenance. In December 1986, there were some 650 young women training in these occupational areas in YTS.

Dockers

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport (i) if he will list by port the estimated number of dockers employed who are not in the dock labour scheme for each year since 1970 (ii) if he will list by port the number of dockers employed in the dock labour scheme for each year since 1970.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 2 November 1987]: It is not possible to give the information in the detail requested. Reports on manpower in the United Kingdom ports industry prepared by the British Ports Association and the National Association of Port Employers gave a total of 3,240 non-registered dock workers in the ports industry in March 1983, and 3,893 in March 1986. Earlier information is not available.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Employment how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 3 November 1987]: Total expenditure, including production costs by my Department on all newspaper advertising in each of the past five years is set out in the table.

Figures for national newspaper advertising are not separately available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The information regarding expenditure with individual newspapers is commercially confidential and cannot be given in the form requested.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Oil and Gas

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about prospecting for onshore oil and gas in the Province.

Mr. Viggers: Hydrocarbons within the area of onshore Northern Ireland are vested in the Department of Economic Development which grants licences for onshore oil and gas exploration under the Petroleum Production Act (Northern Ireland) 1964. Currently exploration work is being undertaken under licence in County Antrim near Larne and around the north and south of Lough Neagh under the supervision of two operators, Fynegold Petroleum Ltd. and North West Exploration plc. At present over 1,800 sq km of Northern Ireland is licensed for oil and gas exploration.

In response to an invitation which I issued earlier this year, several applications have been received for fresh licences. I hope to be in a position shortly to make an announcement about new licences once the technical and financial evaluations are completed.

Pathfinder

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the Pathfinder process.

Mr. Viggers: In the last year I have been seeking to stimulate a wide-ranging debate on economic development in Northern Ireland through a project which I have entitled the Pathfinder process. Following detailed consideration by six task forces within Government, on 7 July 1987 I published a discussion document, "Building a Stronger Economy" (copies of which are in the Library), setting out an analysis of the strengths and weaknesses in the regional economy together with an initial set of recommendations to build on the strengths and remedy the weaknesses. I have subsequently received over 40 responses from representative bodies and individuals, and a series of seminars have been organised throughout the Province to gather additional views. Some initiatives have already been implemented as a result of this process and it is intended to implement further measures as part of this practical approach to strengthening the regional economy.

Primary School Schemes

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is (a) the date of final planning permission, (b) the proposed date for invitation of tenders, (c) the proposed date for commencement of work on site, and (d) the proposed date for completion of work, for the two primary school schemes at, respectively (a) Ballyharry, Newtownards, and (b) Victoria, Ballyhalbert.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is as follows:

Ballyharry Primary School

(a) 11 July 1986.
(b) Tenders were invited on 1 June 1987
(c) Work on site commenced on 29 September 1987
(e) July 1989

Victoria Primary School

(a) Final planning permission was sought by the South Eastern Education and Library Board on 29 September 1987 but has not yet been granted.

(b)-(d) These dates can not be determined until final planning permission is granted by the Department of Environment. However, on 30 September 1987 the Department of Education gave the board approval to invite tenders for the scheme once the final planning permission has been granted.

ACE Scheme

Mr. Jim Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many posts were funded through the ACE scheme in the years 1981-82, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86. 1986-87, and 1987-88, respectively; and which organisations are presently in receipt of ACE funding.

Mr. Viggers: The number of posts provided since 1981-82 is as follows:

Year	Average number of posts
1981-82	430
1982-83	1,270
1983-84	2,529
1984-85	3,080
1985-86	3,890
1986-87	6,150
1987-88	[1]6,200

[1] Projected.

At 25 September there were 377 ACE projects. A list of all the organisations sponsoring these projects is available in the Library.

Mr. Jim Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which organisations in which geographical locations, have been informed of the withdrawal of ACE funding or of a decision not to renew ACE funding in the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Viggers: In the years 1985-86, 1986-87, and 1987-88 (as at 25 September 1987) funding was withdrawn or not renewed in respect of a total of 401 ACE projects. The following table gives information on a geographical basis.

Travel-to-work area	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Antrim	1	9	2
Armagh	—	1	6
Ballymena	—	9	3

Newtownabbey	—	8	5
Newtownards	—	3	2
Omagh	4	11	6
Strabane	6	9	2
Totals	35	199	167

A full list of the projects and the sponsors concerned has been placed in the Library. It should be noted that in the majority of these cases ACE funding was not renewed because the projects concerned did not meet the priority criteria for retention in the ACE programme which are:

(i) location in a geographical area where ACE provision is under-target

(ii) projects having the capacity to improve the economy in some way, for example, creation of permanent jobs or self employment

(iii) projects which provide services for disadvantaged groups

(iv) projects which provide opportunities mainly for the "unskilled" and "low achievers" within the long term unemployed grouping.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will detail how much of the £68 million subsidy announced in May 1987 for Harland and Wolff will cover redundancy payments; and what part of this sum will go on the current investment programme.

Mr. Viggers: Harland and Wolff's external financing limit of £68 million was announced on 25 November 1986. During 1986-87 the company incurred £7 million on redundancies and £2·8 million on capital investment. These are unaudited figures. The company's report and accounts will be laid in the House of Commons Library as soon as they become available.

Strangford-Portaferry Ferry

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many days the Strangford-Portaferry ferry operated up until 31 March; how many days it has operated since 1 April; what are the running costs of this ferry; and what are the long term plans for the Strangford-Portaferry ferry service.

Mr. Needham: The combined passenger and vehicle ferry service operated on 349 days out of a possible 364 days during the period 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987 and on 209 days out of a possible 209 days during the period 1 April 1987 to 24 October 1987.

The net running costs (running costs less receipts from tolls) in the financial year 1986-87 were £185,000.

Currently there are no plans for major operational changes in the long term. The Department's aim is to provide an efficient and reliable service.

Roads

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many roads were adopted by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland during 1986-87 in the following district council areas (i) Down district (all), (ii) Newry and Mourne (all County Down) and (iii) Banbridge (in the electoral wards of Bannside, Katesbridge, Dromore South, Dromore North, Quilly, Garran and Croob): and what is the policy about the adoption of roads.

Mr. Needham: The figures for the areas referred to are:

	Number
Down	22
Newry and Mourne	8
Banbridge	2

The Department's policy on the adoption of roads stems from the Private Streets (NI) Order 1980. Where the development of land for which planning permission is needed requires the construction of streets, the Department determines the width, position and arrangement of the streets. When such streets are completed in accordance with the determined layout and to the prescribed standards they are adopted by the Department after a 12-month maintenance period.

Evacuated Dwellings (Purchase Scheme)

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many SPED applications were made in 1986-87 in the areas covered by the following district offices; Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Banbridge, Newry district (1) and Newry district (2) and, of applications made, how many people were rehoused (i) within the district area and (ii) outside the district area in 1986-87.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I understand from the chairman that during 1986-87, the following numbers of applications under the scheme for the purchase of evacuated dwellings were received in these district office areas:

	Number
Downpatrick	8
Kilkeel	3
Banbridge	1
Newry District (1)	0
Newry District (2)	0

Applicants usually decide to purchase other dwellings in the private sector rather than request rehousing by the Housing Executive. Records are not kept of their new addresses.

Housing

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the Housing Executive policy on the fencing of old people's dwellings in the areas covered by the following district offices: Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Banbridge, Newry district 1 and Newry District 2.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Housing Executive who has advised me that fencing is provided where it is required on welfare grounds or where a danger exists or as part of an environmental improvement scheme for a particular area.

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what programme the Housing Executive intends to implement to deal with rural unfitness in Northern Ireland; and, of the current stock, how many houses in the areas covered by the following offices are unfit in rural areas; Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Banbridge, Newry district 1 and Newry district 2.

Mr. Needham: The chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has advised me that the executive has a range of programmes aimed at reducing unfitness generally. These include public sector replacement building where need is justified and support to the private sector through the renovation grants scheme.

In 1986 the executive relaxed the demolition guidelines to enable more rural unfit dwellings to qualify for grant aid and also introduced wind and weather-proofing grants for those unfit rural properties which still do not qualify for normal renovation grants on account of their structural condition.

Arising from the Roslea study which was published earlier this year, a copy of which is available in the Library, the executive has set up a rural action team in West Fermanagh. This provides technical and financial advice to private owners seeking to repair and improve their houses as well as the usual grants service.

The Housing Executive has no unfit dwellings in the specific areas.

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Housing Executive houses have been sold in 1986-87 in the areas covered by the following district offices: Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Banbridge, Newry district 1 and Newry district 2.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but I understand from the chairman that the number of houses sold in these areas in 1986-87 was:

	Number
Downpatrick	117
Kilkeel	47
Banbridge	51
Newry 1	102
Newry 2	131

Improvements

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been allocated to private sector grant improvements in the areas covered by the following offices during 1987-88: Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Banbridge, Newry district 1 and Newry district 2; how this compares with the past five years; how many applications have been made to the Lisburn and Newry grant offices of the Housing Executive in 1986-87; of applications made, how many have been approved for grant-aid at the Lisburn and Newry grant offices of the Housing Executive; as a result of refusals, how many appeals have been made to the Commissioner of Complaints; and if he is satisfied that the applicants are aware of their rights.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I am advised by the chairman of the executive that separate allocations are not made to individual districts for improvement grants. However, the executive estimates that the total amount of money allocated during 1987-88 to the areas covered by the Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Banbridge, Newry district 1 and Newry district 2 offices is at present, £5·1 million. Grants expenditure is demand-led and the money allocated may vary, dependent on the level of demand. Expenditure during the past five years is estimated as follows:

	£ million
1982-83	3·23
1983-84	4·418
1984-85	5·692
1985-86	5·869
1986-87	5·559

The total number of preliminary grant applications made to the Lisburn grants office and to the Newry grants office of the Housing Executive during 1986-87 and the total number of approvals made during the year are as follows:

	Preliminary applications Received	Approvals made during 1986-87
Lisburn	1,445	907
Newry	1,528	1,029

It is not possible to provide the number of approvals specifically related to the preliminary applications received. The time taken for inspection, and the receipt of all the necessary documents for approvals to be issued may be carried into the following year.

During 1986-87 there were no appeals to the Commissioner for Complaints concerning grant applications in the Lisburn or Newry grants offices. People whose applications are turned down are notified of the reasons for the executive's decision and that they have a right of appeal. On the basis of the use made of its complaints procedure and advice from members of its staff the Housing Executive is satisfied that applicants are aware of their rights.

Pupils (Statistics)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils there are at each primary school in the constituency of Newry and Armagh; and how many pupils there are at each secondary and grammar school in the constituency of Newry and Armagh, on the most recent date for which figures are available.

Community Relations

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why a central community relations unit has been set up; what is the expected cost to public funds; and which quangos have been (a) abolished and (b) set up, in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State established this unit because he wants to ensure that at the very centre of the decision-making process in Northern Ireland, crucial community relations issues, in their widest sense, are given the fullest possible consideration.

The unit is staffed by civil servants and has available the services of an independent academic adviser on a part-time basis. The cost, inclusive of salaries, services and accommodation, is estimated at £26,000 for this financial year and £50,000 in 1988-89.

In the last five years the Government has not established or abolished any bodies dealing with community relations work.

Bilingual Boundary Signs

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which district councils have erected, or intend to erect, bilingual boundary signs.

Mr. Needham: Fermanagh district council has erected some bilingual boundary signs at various border crossings from the Irish Republic.

Newry and Mourne district council has applied for consent to erect a bilingual boundary sign on the main Newry to Dublin road, again at the border.

Belfast Action Team

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made by the Belfast action team.

Mr. Needham: Two Belfast action teams have now been in position since 1 April 1987. The teams cover the Lower Shankill-Lower Falls and New Lodge-Duncairn areas of the inner city and are representative of Government Departments and other statutory agencies.

The teams have been examining at local level the multiple social and economic problems in both areas and, in close co-operation with the respective local communities and voluntary agencies, have been working up plans to tackle the problems involved.

I am satisfied with the progress that has been achieved so far by both teams and will be considering in the near future an extension of the action team concept to include other areas of the city.

New Building

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give figures on the budgetary allocation to new build projects in the ares covered by the following district offices: Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Banbridge, Newry district 1 and Newry district 2.

Mr. Needham: This is primarily a matter for the Housing Executive. I understand from the chairman that in the 1987-88 financial year the Housing Executive's budgetary allocation to new house building projects in these areas is as follows:

	£
Downpatrick Office	634,000
Kilkeel Office	8,000
Banbridge Office	736,000
Newry No. 1 Office	307,000
Newry No. 2 Office	462,000

Local Enterprise Development Unit

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about co-operation between the local enterprise development unit and other agencies in the Province with institutions in Portugal.

Mr. Viggers: The local enterprise development unit has been invited to provide consultancy advice, on a strict commercial basis, to IAPME—Portugal's Institute for Professional and Employment Training—in relation to the establishment of Portugal's first enterprise centre on the model of Northern Ireland's local enterprise centres. I also understand that a declaration of co-operation has been signed between the Newry and Mourne enterprise agency and UNINORTE—a federation of co-operative organisations in Portugal — and that the Northern Ireland small business institute is discussing the provision of enterprise training to Portuguese managers.

Education Reform

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the national curriculum for education will be introduced in Northern Ireland and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government are committed to raising educational standards throughout the United Kingdom. I am considering how arrangements similar to those proposed for England and Wales could best be applied in Northern Ireland. I shall be consulting with education interests before decisions are taken.

Storm Damage

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to ensure that land flooded due to the flood banks of the river Roe breaking can be cleared of the floodwaters within 24 hours.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 2 November 1987]: It is not feasible to plan to clear water from land flooded as a result of breaching of the River Roe floodbanks within 24 hours.

Homelessness

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when his Department's legislation on homelessness will be published in draft form; how long will be allowed for consultation and who will be involved or invited to participate in that consultation process; and what extra funds will be allocated to carry out the functions required under the proposed legislation.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland intends to publish a draft Housing (NI) Order containing provisions on homelessness in early 1988; the normal six-week period will be allowed for consultation. The draft order will be widely circulated to statutory and voluntary agencies in Northern Ireland. Funds for the implementation of the functions required under the proposed legislation will be allocated in the usual way via the annual public expenditure survey.

Stranmillis College

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why he has instructed Stranmillis teacher training colleges to sell their sports pavilion and playing fields at Shaws bridge, Belfast; what alternative sports facilities will be available to Stranmillis college; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 3 November 1987]: Because of reduced enrolments in teacher training over the last 10 years, there has been a significant reduction is usage by Stranmillis college of this sports complex. The Department of Education, therefore, could no longer justify the cost of maintaining this provision. However, funds have been made available to improve the outdoor sports facilities on the main college campus and, in addition, neighbouring facilities, such as those at Queens' university can be hired.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in national newspapers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by newspaper titles.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 3 November 1987]: The information requested in respect of advertising placed by Northern Ireland Government Departments in national newspapers is as follows.

Salmon

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the numbers of fish, and the percentage of the total stock of salmon bound for the Foyle system taken by commercial nets inside the sea areas under the control of the United Kingdom; and what is his estimate of the numbers and percentage taken outside United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 5 November 1987]: It is not possible to make a realistic estimate of the number of Foyle salmon which are taken inside or outside United Kingdom waters.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for as many years as possible the (a) rod catch and (b) the commercial nets catch of salmon in the Foyle fisheries area and in the river Roe since the Foyle Fisheries Commission was created.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 5 November 1987]: The information requested for the years 1985 and 1986 is as follows. The information for previous years is given in the annual reports of the Foyle Fisheries Commission, which are laid before Parliament.

	1985	1986
Reported rod catch	1,814	1,172
Total commercial catch	40,521	46,354
River Roe commercial catch	1,145	1,354

Maghaberry Prison

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for the use of the new prison at Maghaberry, County Antrim, Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: There are two prisons on the same site at Maghaberry, one for men and one for women. The women's prison has been fully operational since March 1986 and holds all the female prisoners in Northern Ireland. The male prison holds only a few prisoners at present, but it is planned gradually to increase its population in the near future. It will be used to house a range of short and long-term prisoners.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES

VOLUME 121

SESSION 1987–88

26th October–6th November 1987

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
